

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

S
FF
APD
KK's.

A S Y S T E M
O F T H E
L A W
O F
M A R I N E I N S U R A N C E S, W I T H T H R E E C H A P T E R S
O N
B O T T O M R Y ; O N I N S U R A N C E S O N L I V E S, A N D O N
I N S U R A N C E S A G A I N S T F I R E.

BY JAMES ALLAN PARK, Esq.
OF LINCOLN'S INN,
BARRISTER AT LAW.

Lex (de quâ agimus) est fons æquitatis.

CICERO.

L O N D O N :
PRINTED BY HIS MAJESTY'S LAW PRINTERS:
For T. WHIELDON, in FLEET-STREET.

MDCCLXXXVII.

1787.

T O

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

WILLIAM, EARL OF MANSFIELD,

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COURT

OF KING'S BENCH,

&c. &c. &c.

MY LORD,

THE honour you have done this Work, by suffering such parts of it as you have seen to pass without censure, makes me desirous of offering it to the Publick, under your Lordship's protection.

WHEN the many admirable improvements which you have made in that branch of law, which relates to Insurances, are considered, any treatise upon the subject must be admitted to be the exclusive property of your Lordship. Your labours in this respect, were there no other cause, would be sufficient to render your Lordship immortal in a country, whose grandeur is founded on commerce; and your extensive knowledge, joined to an unwearied application to every part of commercial jurisprudence, during a long and a glorious career in the administration of justice, has endeared your Lordship's name to the Merchants of London, has made it the boast of Britain, and the admiration of Europe.

BUT while I thus only repeat the sentiments, which the publick entertain of your Lordship's abilities and virtues, let me not forget to express my grateful and heartfelt acknowledgements for the attention with which you have honoured me, by allowing me to present this Book to the world, under the sanction of a name so revered as your Lordship's; and for giving me this opportunity of declaring that I am, with the most profound respect and veneration,

MY LORD,

Your Lordship's

Most obedient and obliged humble servant,

JAMES ALLAN PARK.

CARLY-STREET, LINCOLN'S INN,

November 6, 1786.

T H E

P R E F A C E.

WHEN a man presumes to solicit public notice for any work of a literary nature, the world have a right to know the motives, that induced him to write, and upon what foundation he builds his claim to their attention. Notwithstanding the number of cases, which have of late years been determined in the English courts of justice upon the law of insurance, and the uniformity of principle, which pervades them all; yet the doctrine of insurances is not fully known and understood. This in some measure happens from the decisions upon the subject being scattered in the various books of reports, according to the order of time, in which they were determined; and the connexion of which, from the nature of those publications, cannot be preserved. As many persons cannot spare time, and few will take the trouble, to collect the cases into one point of view; and as all cases of insurance must necessarily be attended with a number of facts, it is not to be wondered at, if from a cursory, inattentive, and unconnected perusal of them in a chronological order, a great part of the world should remain unacquainted with the true principles of insurance law. No book, that I have met with in the English language, has ever yet attempted to form this branch of jurisprudence into a systematick arrangement, or to reduce the cases to any fixed, or settled principles.

Convinced of the utility of such a work, I thought I could not employ my time more advantageously to my profession or myself; nor better express that respect which I, in common with every lawyer, feel for the venerable magistrate, to whom this work is inscribed, and for the other learned judges, who have assisted in erecting this sabrick, than by extracting all the cases upon this subject from the mass of other learning with which they lie buried in the reporters; and thereby endeavouring to prove to the world that the doctrine of insurance now forms a system as complete in every respect as any other branch of the English law. Could any other incitement have been requisite, the opinion of Mr. Justice Blackstone would have had considerable weight. “The learning relating to marine insurances,” says that elegant commentator (a) “has of late years been greatly improved by a series of judicial decisions, which have now established the law in such a variety of cases, that (if well and judiciously collected) they would form a very complete title in a code of commercial jurisprudence.” Urged by these motives, I was induced to undertake

(a) 2 Black. Com. 460.

this work, which is now presented to the world.

No subject can be properly understood, unless the materials be methodically arranged; and therefore the first object I had in view was to fix upon certain heads, which would be sufficient to comprehend all the law upon insurances. For this part of the work I alone am accountable, the design being entirely my own. It may, however, in some degree abate the severity of censure to recollect, that in the arrangement of the subject I had no example to follow, no guide to direct me; and I was left entirely to the impulse of my own judgment. But to enable the profession to judge of the nature of my plan, I will state the reasons that influenced me in the mode I have adopted.

As the policy is the foundation, upon which the whole contract depends, I have begun with that, and endeavoured to shew it's nature and it's various kinds; and I have also pointed out the requisites which a policy must contain, their reason and origin, as they are to be collected from decided cases, or the usage of merchants. When we have ascertained the nature of a policy, the next object is to discover by what general rules courts of justice have guided themselves in their construction of this species of contract. It is then necessary to descend to a more particular view of the subject, and to fix with accuracy and precision those accidents, which shall be deemed losses within certain words used in the policy. Thus losses by perils of the sea ; by capture ; by detention ; and by barratry, will be a material ground of consideration. When a loss happens, it must either be a partial, or a total loss ; and hence it becomes necessary to ascertain in what instances a loss shall only be deemed partial, in what cases it shall be considered as total ; and how the amount of a partial loss is to be settled : hence also arises the doctrine of average, salvage, and abandonment. These points therefore will be the next object of attention.

Having considered the various instances in which the underwriter will be liable upon his policy, either for a part, or for the whole amount, of his subscription ; we seem to be naturally led to the consideration of those cases, in which the underwriter is released from his responsibility. This may happen in several ways: For sometimes the policy is void from the beginning, on account of fraud ; of the ship not being sea worthy ; or of the voyage insured being prohibited. There are also cases, in which the insurer is discharged, because the insured has failed in the performance of those conditions, which he had undertaken to fulfil ; such as the non-compliance with warranties ; and deviating from the voyage insured : These and many other points of the same nature occupy several chapters.

When

When the under-writer has never run any risk, it would be unconscionable that he should retain the premium: Therefore after considering those instances, in which this is the case, it is natural next to ascertain in what cases, the underwriter should retain, and in what cases he should return the premium.

It would be in vain to tell a man, that he was entitled to the assistance of the law, and that his case was equitable and right, without pointing out in what forum, and by what mode of proceeding he should seek a remedy. I have endeavoured to point out the proper tribunal, to which a person injured is to apply; the mode of proceeding, which he is to adopt; and the nature of the evidence he must adduce to substantiate his claim, with respect to this contract: After the discussion of marine insurances, I have added three chapters upon subjects, which, though they do not form a part of the plan, are so materially connected with it in the rules and principles of decision, that it seemed to me the work would be deficient without them: These are, bottomry and respondentia, insurances upon lives; and insurances against fire.

When I planned this work, I intended to prefix an introduction, containing a short, historical account of the rise and progress of insurances in this country. But, upon the suggestion of one, to whose opinion I bow with deference, and whose judgment will always command obedience; I was induced to enlarge my design. The reader will now find a short account of such of the antient maritime states, as have promulgated any system of naval jurisprudence; and also, of the progress of marine law among the various states of Europe. I have endeavoured to trace the origin of insurance to its source; to point out those countries in which it has flourished, and the progress and improvement of it in our own. Such is the arrangement, which I have adopted, and on the propriety of which, the world and the profession are to decide.

As to the mode of treating the subject, it will be proper to observe, that at the head of each chapter, I have stated the principles, upon which the cases on that point depend; and then have quoted the cases themselves to shew, that they are agreeable and consonant to the principles advanced. If there are any cases, which seem to differ from the others, I endeavour to prove, either that they depend upon different principles, or that there are circumstances in them, which make them exceptions to the general rules. In quoting cases, I have been careful minutely to state all the circumstances, and also the opinion of the court without any alteration, or comments of my own; convinced that the utility of a work of this kind consists in the true and accurate account of what the law is, not in idle speculations of a private man, as to what the law ought to be. Besides, one main purpose of such a composition sition is, to save the professors of the law the trouble of turning over vast volumes of reports, by collecting into one book, all the cases upon a particular subject.

But, unless the cases are fully and faithfully reported, recourse must still be had to the original reporters, and the end of such a compilation is defeated. At the same time, it ought to be observed, that sometimes, though not very often, several different points arise in one cause; and then in order to preserve the system complete, it is necessary to separate them, and to assign to each its proper place. But still the opinion of the court is given fully on each of the points; and a reference is made from one part of the case to the other.

I had it in contemplation to have had a distinct chapter for the consideration of the law relative to this species of contract in other countries of Europe. But upon reflecting that insurances are founded upon the great principles of natural justice, rather than upon any municipal regulations; and that consequently the law must be nearly the same in all countries, I relinquished the idea. Besides, I have throughout the work, which seemed to be a better plan, taken notice in what respects the positive institutions of other maritime states agree or disagree with those of our own: A plan, which serves to illustrate and confirm the English system.

It

It remains to speak of the materials I have used. Conscious that the value of a law book depends upon the purity and excellence of the sources, from which its contents are taken, I have never advanced any position, without referring to the book in which it was found ; unless it be upon some unsettled point, where I have stated the arguments that may be adduced on both sides, and left it to the reader to form his own conclusions. In my researches upon this occasion, I have consulted every foreign author that I could possibly obtain ; and have made as much use of their labours, as the nature of the plan would admit.

With respect to the decisions of the English courts of justice, I believe I have not omitted a single case, that ever has appeared in print upon the subject: Besides which, this collection contains a great number of manuscript cases, of which some have been determined at Nisi Prius only, and many have been the subject of deliberation in court upon cases reserved, or upon motions for new trials. For the latter, I myself am chiefly responsible, and upon some future occasion, I shall be happy to correct any errors, which they may contain ; as most of them were taken while I was a student, merely for my private use, without any view to future publication. I have, however, by comparing them with such notes as I could obtain, done every thing in my power to render them worthy of the attention of the profession. As to the Nisi Prius notes, I am indebted for them.

them to the very liberal and generous communications of my young professional friends; and to some also of those, who are in the first rank at the bar. Indeed, to name any one would be an injustice to the rest; and therefore, I must beg they will accept my general acknowledgments. I should, however, be undeserving of that attention and assistance with which I have been honoured, were I to omit this opportunity of returning my sincere and grateful thanks to Mr. Justice Buller, whose abilities are only equalled by his easiness of access, his ready and liberal communication of that knowledge, which is the natural result of such talents, and such unwearied application to study. The many valuable hints I have received from that learned judge, will no doubt contribute much to the utility of this work.

To those who are much engaged in the labours of the profession, a full and complete table of the principal matters is of the utmost consequence. I have used my endeavours to render this part of the work as useful as possible, by stating each point under all the heads, that will naturally be resorted to for the solution of any doubt.

Having thus explained the nature of my arrangement, the mode which I have adopted in the discussion of each chapter, and the sources from which my information is derived, I present this volume to the public. The utility and necessity of such a work are universally acknowledged; the attempt is there-therefore deserving of some praise, and for the defects in the execution, I throw myself upon the candour of my profession. The subject was noble, and required greater talents than mine, to treat it as it deserved; but if I shall have at all done justice to the great abilities of those distinguished characters, whose names appear in every page, I shall in some measure have attained the object of my wishes, and shall have the pleasure of reflecting, that the time I spent in the composition of this work, has been at least productive of much personal satisfaction and improvement.

CONTENTS.

CONTENTS.

I	INTRODUCTION,	Page i.
	C H A P. I.
Of the Policy,		i.
	C H A P. II.
Of the Construction of the Policy,		33.
	C H A P. III.
Of Losses by Perils of the Sea,		68.
	C H A P. IV.
Of Losses by Capture and by Detention of Princes,		73.
	C H A P. V.
Of Losses by the Barratry of the Master or Mariners,		93.
	C H A P. VI.
Of partial Losses and of Adjustment,		110.
	C H A P. VII.
Of General or Gross Average,		137.
	C H A P. VIII.
Of Salvage,		147.
	C H A P. IX.
Of Abandonment,		161.
	C H A P. X.
Of Fraud in Policies,		194.
	C H A P. XI.
Of Sea-Worthiness,		249.
	C H A P.

CONTENTS.

CHAP. XII.
Of illegal Voyages,	Page 263.
CHAP. XIII.
Of Prohibited Goods,	278.
CHAP. XIV.
Of Wager-Policies,	295.
CHAP. XV.
Of Re-Affurance, and of Double Insurance,	315.
CHAP. XVI.
Of Changing the Ship,	331.
CHAP. XVII.
Of Deviation,	335.
CHAP. XVIII.
Of Non-Compliance with Warranties,	363.
CHAP. XIX.
Of Return of Premium,	418.
CHAP. XX.
Of the Proceedings upon Policies of Insurance,	448.
CHAP. XXI.
Of Bottomry and Respondentia,	468.
CHAP. XXII.
Of Insurances upon Lives,	487.
CHAP. XXIII.
Of Insurances against Fire,	502.

APPENDIX.

- No. 1. The form of a Policy on a Ship or Goods.
- No. 2. The form of a Respondentia Bond.
- No. 3. The form of a Policy on a Life Insurance.
- No. 4. The form of a Policy against Fire.

INDEX

I N D E X

O F

C A S E S C I T E D.

Each Case may be found by the Name either of the Plaintiff, or of the Defendant. Those Cases in Italicks were never before in Print; and such of them as have been decided at Nisi Prius only, will be followed by the Letters N. P.

A.		Banks (Pattison against) Page 495 note (a)
AIREY v. Bland , N. P.	P. 30	Barber v. Fletcher	234
Ala (Dick against) N. P.	118,	Barnard v. Bridgeman	471
	124	Barnevelt (Pawson against) N. P.
Ala (Leag against)	446		366
Anonymous, from Skinner's Rep.	33	Barrass v. London Assurance Company
Alvedo v. Cambridge	81. 296	N. P.	43
		Barrell (Dick against) N. P.	333
		Barton v. Wolliford	481
		Barzillay v. Lewis	410
		Bates v. Grabham N. P.	4
		Bean v. Stupart	367
		Bendir v. Oyle, Introd. xxxvii.
		Bermon v. Woodbridge	441
		Bernardi v. Motteux	403
		Berthon (Kenyon against) N. P.	367
		Berens v. Rucker N. P.	74
		Bird (Kent against)	300
		Bize v. Fletcher N. P.	228, 300
		* A	Black
B.
Backhouse (French against)	20
Badcock (Sadlers Company against)	517
Baillie v. Mondigliani	60. 132
Bance (Whitehead against) N. P.	86

INDEX of CASES cited.

Black (Fox against)	N. P.	336	Chitty v. Selwin	Page 42.	49
Black (Glover against)	10.	301.	Christie (Gregory against)	13.	9
		487	Cleeve (Victoria against)	'N.	7
Black (Patterson against)	N. P.	492			39
Bland (Airey against)	N. P.	30	Cock v. Townson	N. P.	34
Boehm (Carter against)	14.	205	Cocking v. Fraser	22.	18
Boheme (Russell against)	N. P.	464	Cockran (Randall against)		1
Bond v. Gonfales	N. P.	38. 351	Cowley (Camden against)		2
Bond v. Nutt		374	Cox v. Liotard		4
Bordieu (Campbell against)	N. P.	40. 352	Crofedale (Gardiner against)		4
			Curling (Lateward against)	N.	1
Bourdieu (Nutt against)		104
Bourdieu (Lowry against)	311.	425
Boydell (Wooldridge against)		360
Boydell (Simond against)		420
Boyfield v. Brown	N. P.	130
Bradshaw (Ross against)	N. P.	498
Bridge (Syers against)		66
Bridgeman (Barnard against)		471
Brogden (Elton against)	N. P.	98.
		342
Brown (Green against)	N. P.	71
Brown (Stamma against)		96
Brown (Boyfield against)	N. P.	130
Brutton (Fillis against)	N. P.	204

C.

Cadell (Mace against)	495.	note (b)	Deguilder v. Depeister	4
Cambridge (Assievedo against)	81.		De Hahn v. Hartley	3
	296		Delaney v. Stoddart	3
Cambridge (Knight against)	95.		De la Rive (Wharton against)	N.
	456			4
Camden v. Cowley	42		Delmada v. Mottoux	266.
Came v. Moy	Introd.	xxxviii.	Depaiba v. Ludlow	82.
Campbell v. Bordieu	N. P.	40. 352	Depeister (Deguilder against)
Cantillon v. London Assurance			Dick v. Allen	N. P. 118.
Company	N. P.	22. 127	Dick v. Barrell	N. P.
Cary v. King	N. P.	159. 468	Dicker (Dean against)	N. P.
Carruthers (Sparrow against)	N. P.		Drinkwater v. London Assurance
	25		Company
Carter (Harding against)	N. P.	4	Duckett (Wilson against)
Carter v. Boehm	14.	205	Dunlop (Stewart against)
Carter v. Royal Exchange Assurance	Company	N. P. 359
Cazalet v. St. Barbe		187.
Chase (Raynard against)	Introd.
	xliii

D.

Da Costa v. Frith	134.	186.	30
Da Costa v. Scandrett			24
Dalby v. Proudfoot			Intro
			xxxv
Dalzell (Lynch against)			51
Dandy v. Turner			42
Davis (Rogers against) N. P.			32
Davis v. Gildart N. P.			32
Dean v. Dicker N. P.
De Costa (Fernandes against) N.			10
De Ghetoff v. London Assurance Company			4
Deguilder v. Depeister			4
De Hahn v. Hartley			3
Delaney v. Stoddart			3
De la Rive (Wharton against) N.			4
Delmada v. Mottoux		266.
Depaiba v. Ludlow		82.
Depeister (Deguilder against)
Dick v. Allen N. P.		118.
Dick v. Barrell N. P.
Dicker (Dean against) N. P.
Drinkwater v. London Assurance Company
Duckett (Wilson against) Dunlop (Stewart against)

INDEX of CASES cited.

E.

Waples against N. P. P.	39
Harris N. P.	384
Peale N. P.	61
Parkinson	251. 401
Praye against	19
Willon	337
Brogden N. P.	98. 342
Fletcher N. P.	353
Harrington (Tiernay against) N. P.	43. 45.
Robertson against	61. 91.
	103
Lilly against	394

F.

Harfen v. Hunter	56
Harfen v. Raymond N. P.	418
Le Pypre against	297
Thelluffon against	359.
	379
Thelluffon against N. P.	376
De Costa N. P.	198
Brutton N. P.	204
De Costa against	134. 186.
	306
Pole	191
Mather	238
Peole N. P.	59
Thelluffon against	134
	302
Milles against	172
Planche against	217
Bize against N. P.	228
	366
Barber against	234
Lever against N. P.	269
Enderby against N. P.	353
Tyrie against	433
Roberts against N. P.	196
Seaman against N. P.	200

Foster v. Wilmer N. P.	Page 359
Fowk v. Pinsacke	28
Fox v. Black N. P.	336
Franco (Spencer against) N. P.	85
Frazer (Cocking against)	22. 129
Frazer (Macdowall against)	231
French v. Backhouse	20

G.

Gale v. Mcbell	446
Gardiner v. Crofedale	456
Garrett (Goddart against)	297
Gilbert (Gregson against)	69
Gildart (Davis against) N. P.	322
Gift v. Mason	16. 29. 272. 276
Gleen (Soome against)	477
Glover v. Black	10. 301. 487
Goddart v. Garrett	297
Godin v. London Assurance Company	12. 323
Gonfales (Bond against) N. P.	38.
	351
Gordon v. Morley N. P.	40. 352.
	393
Gofs v. Withers	73. 167
Gouldney (Hog against) N. P.	133
Graham (Bates against) N. P.	4
Grant v. Parkinson	305
Grant (Vezian against) N. P.	372
Green v. Brown N. P.	71
Green v. Young N. P.	91. 362
Gregory v. Christie	13. 55
Gregson v. Gilbert	69
Gregson (Meyer against)	444
Guibert v. Readshaw N. P.	344
Guyon (Townson against) N. P.	336

H.

Halkeld (Harrington against) N. P.	346
Hamilton v. Mendes	178
Hammerton (Roebuck against)	491. note (a)
	Harding

INDEX of CASES cited.

Harding v. Carter N. P.	Page 4
Harford v. Maynard N. P.	28
Harrington v. Halkeld N. P.	346
Harris (Earle against) N. P.	384
Hartfort v. Jones	148
Hartley (Pringle against)	165
Hartley (De Hahn against)	368
Henkle v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company	2. 271
Hibbert v. Pigou	387
Hodgson v. Richardson	201
Hog v. Gouldney N. P.	133
Hollister (Kill against)	452
Hopkins (Salvador against)	53
Here v. Whitmore	371
Horne (Tyler against) N. P.	247
Howard's Case	496
Hughes (Le Cras against)	126. 307
Hunter (Farquharson against)	56
Hurrell (Sharples against)	475

J.

Jeffery v. Legendra	394. 397
Johnson (Saloucci against)	89. 415
Johnston v. Sutton	263
Jolly v. Walker N. P.	341
Jones v. Schmoll N. P.	64
Jones (Hartfort against)	148
Joy v. Kent	476
Joyce v. Williamson	143. 481

K.

Kaines v. Knightly	463
Kennoway (Noble against)	49
Kent v. Bird	309
Kent (Joy against)	476
Kenyon v. Berthon N. P.	367
Kill v. Hollister	452
King (Pond against)	83
King (Carey against) N. P.	159. 468
Knight v. Cambridge	95. 456

Knightly (Kaines against)	Page
Kulen Kemp v. Vigne

L.

Langdale v. Mason N. P.
Lateward v. Curling N. P.
Lavabre v. Wilson
Lavabre v. Walter	58.
Le Cras v. Hughes	126.
Leeds (Duke of) (Pugh against)	496-note
Legendra (Jeffery against)
Le Pypre v. Farr
Lethulier's Case	38.
Lever v. Fletcher N. P.
Lewin v. Suasso
Lewis v. Rucker	118.
Lewis (Barzillay against)
Lilly v. Ewer
Liotard (Cox against)
Lockyer v. Offley	34. 94.
London Assurance Company (Metcux against)	3. 40.
London Assurance Company (Gibson against)	12.
London Assurance Company (Cotton against) N. P.	22.
London Assurance Company (Barrett against) N. P.
London Assurance Company (Ghetoff against)
London Assurance Company (Drinkwater against)
Long v. Allen
Lorraine v. Thomlinson
Lowry v. Bourdieu	311.
Ludlow (Depaiba against)	82.
Lynch v. Dalzell

M.

Macdowall v. Fraser
Mace v. Cadell	495-note (Mac.)

INDEX of CASES cited.

Macbell (Gale against)	Page 446
March, Earl of, v. Pigot	260
Martin v. Sirwell	419
Mason (Gift against) 16. 29. 272.	276
Mason v. Skurray, N. P. 127. 131.
Mason (Langdale against) N. P.	507
Mather (Fitzherbert against)	238
Maynard (Harford against) N. P.	28
Mayne v. Walter	220. 414
Mendes (Hamilton against)	178
Meyer v. Gregson	444
Milles v. Fletcher	172
Mills v. Roebuck	252
Mollison v. Staples, N. P. 491 note (a)
Morley (Gordon against) N. P.	40. 352. 393.
Motteux v. London Assur. Comp.	3. 40. 343.
Motteux (Delmada against)	266. 290
Motteux (Bernardi against)	403
Mondigliani (Baillie against)	60. 132
Moufe's case	139
Moy (Came against) Introd. xxxviii
Muilman (Woolmer against)	196. 400

N

Newby v. Read, N. P.	71
Newby v. Read, N. P.	321
Noble v. Kennoway	49
Nutt v. Bourdieu	104
Nutt (Bond against)	374

O

Offley (Lockyer against)	34. 94. 492
Oyle (Bendir against) Introd. xxxvii

P

Page v. Rogers N. P.	Page 460
Parkinson (Eden against)	251. 401
Parkinson (Grant against)	305
Patterson v. Black, N. P.	492
Pattison v. Banks, 495, note (a)
Pawson v. Watson	222. 365
Pawson v. Barnevelt, N. P.	366
Pelly v. Royal Exch. Assur. Comp.	45
Pigot (Earl of March against)	260
Pigon (Hibbert against)	387
Pinsache (Fowk against)	28
Planché v. Fletcher	217
Pole (Fitzgerald against)	191
Pond v. King	83
Poole (Fletcher against) N. P.	59.
Poole (Eden against) N. P.	61
Poole (Willis against) N. P.	499
Praye v. Edie	19
Pringle v. Hartley	165
Proudfoot (Dalby against) Introd. xxxviii
Pugh v. Duke of Leeds 496 note (a)

R

Randal v. Cockran	160
Ratcliff v. Shoolbred N. P.	202
Raymond (Farquharson against) N. P.	418
Raynard v. Chase. Introd. xliii
Read (Newby against) N. P.	71
Readshaw (Guibert against) N. P.	344
Read (Newby against) N. P.	321
Richardson (Hodgson against)	201
Roberts v. Fonnereau N. P.	196
Roberts v. Trenayne	476
Robertson v. Ewer 61. 91. 103.
Roebuck (Mills against)	252
Roebuck v. Hammerton	491. note (a)
Rogers v. Davis N. P.	321
Rogers

INDEX of CASES cited.

Rogers (Page against) N. P. P.	460
Ross v. Thwaite N. P.	23
Ross v. Bradshaw N. P.	498
Royal Exchange Assurance Company (Henkle against) 2.	271.
Royal Exchange Assurance Company (Pelly against)	45
Royal Exchange Assurance Company (Carter against) N. P.	359
Rucker (Berens against) N. P.	74
Rucker (Lewis against) 118.	304
Ruffell v. Boheme N. P.	464

S

Sadler's Company v. Badcock	517
St. Barbe (Cazalet against)	187
Salisbury v. Townson N. P.	353
Saloucci v. Johnson 89.	415
Saloucci v. Woodmass	413
Salvador v. Hopkins	53
Scandret (Da Costa against)	245
Schmoll (Jones against) N. P.	64
Seaman v. Fonnereau N. P.	200
Selwin (Chitty against)	42.
	452
Sharpley v. Hurrell	475
Shirley v. Wilkinson	234
Shoolbred (Ratcliffe against) N. P.	202
Simon (Stacpoole against) N. P.	497
Simond v. Boydell	420
Sitwell (Martin against)	419
Skurray (Mason against) N. P.	127. 131
	127
Smith (Wilson against)	127
Snow (Stevenson against)	430
Soome v. Gleen	477
Sparrow v. Carruthers N. P.	25
Spencer v. Franco N. P.	85
Stacpoole v. Simon N. P.	497
Stamma v. Brown	96
Staples (Thelluffon against) N. P.	384
	384
Steadman (Williams against)	484
Stevenson v. Snow	430

Stewart v. Dunlop	Page 236
Stoddart (Delaney against)	347
Stupart (Seon against)	367
Suallo (Lewen against)	106
Sutton (Johnson against)	263
Syers v. Bridge	66

T

Taylor v. Woodness N. P.	399
Thelluffon v. Fletcher 134.	302
Thelluffon v. Fergusson 359.	379
Thelluffon v. Fergusson N. P.	376
Thelluffon v. Staples N. P.	384
Thomlinson (Loraine against)	438
Thornborough (Wittingham against)	245
	245
Thwaite (Ross against) N. P.	23
Tiernay v. Etherington N. P.	43.
	45
Tonge v. Watts N. P.	39
Townson v. Guyon N. P.	336
Townson (Cock against) N. P.	341
Townson (Salisbury against) N. P.	353
	476
Trenayne (Roberts against)	476
Turner (Dandy against)	477
Tyler v. Horne N. P.	247
Tyrie v. Fletcher	433

V.

Vallejo v. Wheeler	99
Vezian v. Grant N. P.	372
Victoria v. Cleeve N. P.	398
Vigne (Kulen Kemp against)	465

W

Walker (Folly against) N. P.	341
Walter (Lavabre against) 58.	354
	Walter

INDEX of CASES cited.

Waker (Mayne against) P. 220.	414	Wilson v. Duckett	Page 246
Waples v. Eames	N. P. 39	Wilson (Elliot against)	337
Warts (Tonge against)	N. P. 39.	Withers (Goss against)	73. 167
Watson (Pawson against)	222. 365	Wittingham v. Thornborough	245
Western v. Wildy	483	Wolliford (Barton against)	481
Wharton v. De la Rive	N. P. 428	Woodbridge (Bermon against)	441
Wheeler (Vallejo against)	99	Woodmays (Saloucci against)	413
Whitehead v. Bance	N. P. 86	Woodness (Taylor against)	N. P. 399
Whitmore (Hore against)	371	Wooldridge v. Boydell	360
Wildy (Western against)	483	Woolmer v. Muilman	196. 400
Wilkinson (Shirley against)	234
Williams v. Steadman	484
Williamson (Joyce against)	143. 481
Willis v. Poole	N. P. 499
Wilmer (Foster against)	N. P. 359
Wilson (Lavabre against)	58
Wilson v. Smith	127

Y

Young (Green against)	91. 362
------------------------------	---------

The Reader is requested to Correct the following ERRATA.

Page 10, line 17, for objects read subjects.

14, — 9, after bring insert them.

32, — 26, for amounting to read exceeding.

89, — 12, before ship read neutral.

296, in margin for 1 Mod. read 10 Mod.

370, line 17, for sailling read sailing.

465, — 5, for policy read declaration.

T H E

INTRODUCTION

W H E N we consider the wonderful effects; which commerce has produced on the manners of men, when we observe that it tends to wear off those prejudices which give birth to dissensions and animosities, that it unites mankind by the strongest of all ties, the desire of supplying mutual wants; and that it disposes them to peace and concord, by establishing in every community an order of men, whose interest it is to preserve public tranquillity; we are led to think that the history and progress of it would not only be amusing, but highly important and instructive to the inhabitants of every civilized society. Such a work would be in fact the history of the intercourse and communication of mankind, and must necessarily abound in events the most interesting to every social being, but particularly so to the people of this country, whose great importance in the eyes of Europe originated in commerce, and will endure no longer than whilst the same attention continues to be paid to her commercial interests. In a dissertation upon commerce, Insurances form a very distinguished part, and therefore it cannot but be agreeable to the scholar, as well as to the lawyer, to trace this branch of commercial law to its source, and to give some account of those various nations, which have been rendered famous by the extent of their commerce, and by the excellency of their maritime regulations. Indeed, in a tracing

tracing the origin of Insurances, an account of the maritime states that have existed in the world, necessarily forms a part of the enquiry.

² Blackst.
Comm. 458.

Insurance then is a contract by which the insurer undertakes, in consideration of a premium equivalent to the hazard run, to indemnify the person insured against certain perils or losses, or against some particular event. When insurance is generally mentioned by professional men, it is understood to signify marine insurances. It is in this light we are at present to consider it; and from the preceding definition it appears to be a contract of indemnity against those perils, to which ships are exposed in the course of their voyage from one place to another. The utility of this species of contract in a commercial country is obvious, and has been taken notice of by very distinguished writers upon commercial affairs. Insurances give great security to the fortunes of private people, and by dividing amongst many that loss, which would ruin an individual, make it fall light and easy upon the whole society.

³ Smith's
Wealth of Nations, p. 148,
Oct. edit.

¹ Magens. 2.

This security tends greatly to the advancement of trade and navigation, because the risk of transporting and exporting being diminished, men will more easily be induced to engage in an extensive trade, to assist in important undertakings, and to join in hazardous enterprises; since a failure in the object will not be attended with those dreadful consequences to them and their families, which must be the case in a country where insurances are unknown. But it is not individuals only that derive advantages from the increase of commerce, the general welfare of the public is also promoted. It is an observation justified by experience, that as soon as the commercial spirit begins to acquire vigour, and to gain the ascendant in any society, we immediately discover a new genius in its policy, its alliances, its wars and negotiations. No nation, that cultivated foreign commerce, ever failed to make a distinguished distinguished figure on the theatre of the world, as the history of the ancients sufficiently proves, and in proportion as commerce made its way into the various states of Europe, they turned their attention to those objects, and assumed those manners, which distinguish polished nations, and which lead to political consequence and eminence amongst the neighbouring powers. (a)

The origin of insurance like that of many other customs, which depend rather upon traditional than written evidence, and for the honour of inventing and introducing which rival nations contend, has occasioned much doubt among the writers upon mercantile law. Indeed it is involved in so much obscurity that, after all the researches which have been made on the present occasion, any very satisfactory solution of this doubt cannot be promised. One truth however is clear that, wherever foreign commerce was introduced, insurance must have soon followed as a necessary attendant, it being impossible to carry on any very extensive trade without it, especially in time of war. Some of these writers have ascribed the origin of this contract to Claudius Cæsar the fifth Roman emperor, on account of a passage to be found in Suetonius. Other respectable authorities have given the honour of it to the Rhodians, thus laying a foundation for the idea entertained by many, that the law of insurance had obtained a place in most of the ancient codes of jurisprudence. As the consideration of this question will be attended with pleasure, it will tend much to the complete investigation of it, to consider the state of commerce among the most distinguished of the ancient nations; from whence it will appear, that insurances were in those days wholly unknown: or if they were known, that lyne.

Molloy; Mal-

2 Atkyns
554.

(a.) Vide Robertson's View of the Progress of Society in Europe.

the smallest proofs of the existence of such a custom have not come down to the present times.

Schomberg's
Observ. on Rhodian
laws.

The Rhodians claim the first place in this enquiry; for although there is undoubted testimony, that nations of much greater antiquity than the people of Rhodes, (a) cultivated commerce, and carried it on to a considerable extent, yet there does not appear to be the smallest ground for entertaining an opinion that any of these naval powers had established amongst themselves, much less communicated to mankind in general, any code or system of marine law. Rhodes obtained the sovereignty of the sea, about 916 years before the Christian Æra, which was almost two hundred years before the building of Rome. The situation and fertility of this island were peculiarly favourable for the purposes of navigation, for it lies in the Mediterranean sea, a few leagues from the continent of Lesser Asia; and its wealth and fertility have always been celebrated by the poets and historians of antiquity. From these circumstances, joined to the activity and industry of the people, it long maintained that superiority which it had acquired; its inhabitants were rich, its alliance was courted, though from principles of policy, it generally observed a strict neutrality. Notwithstanding this pacific disposition, which commerce naturally inspires, the Rhodians at last became an object of jealousy, and were most furiously attacked and besieged by various foreign powers. But in all their wars they discovered their great strength and superiority at sea, and conducted their enterprises with

See Anderson's hist. of Commerce.

(a.) Eusebius in his account of maritime states, mentions three anterior to the Rhodians, namely; the Cretans, the Lydians, and the Thracians; the first of whom flourished about five hundred years before the Rhodians, the next two hundred, and the last about 80 years. Euseb. Chronicon Lib. 2.

I N T R O D U C T I O N.

v

so much activity and skill, as to attract the admiration of their enemies, and the applause of those historians who have given an account of the wars in which they were engaged. In the Punick wars, the Romans found the benefit of their alliance, by the very essential service which they performed, in attacking the naval armaments of the Carthaginians. Polybius. Lib. 16. Schomb. Observ.

Wealth naturally produces luxury, which gradually enervates the powers of a state. This was the case with the Rhodians; for after maintaining their political importance from the time already mentioned till the termination almost of the Roman republic, they visibly began to decline in wealth and power. Cicero, in his speech on the Manilian law, observes that they were a people, whose naval power and discipline remained even to the time of his memory; and Cicero expired with the republic. Cicero pro lege Manilia, cap. 13.

From this short history it appears, that the Rhodians were very famous for their naval power and strength: but however respectable they might be on that account, they were much more illustrious, and obtained a much higher praise among the nations of antiquity, for being the first legislators of the sea, and for promulgating a system of marine jurisprudence, to which even the Romans themselves paid the greatest deference and respect, and which they adopted as the guide of their conduct in naval affairs. These excellent laws not only served as a rule of conduct to the ancient maritime states; but as will appear from an attentive comparison of them, have been the basis of all modern regulations respecting navigation and commerce. The time at which these laws were compiled is not precisely ascertained: but we may reasonably suppose, it was about the period when the Rhodians first obtained the sovereignty of the sea, which was about 916 years before the æra of Christianity.

Selden's Mare clausum.
lib. 1. cap.
10. f. 5.

Schomberg
Obs. on Rhodian
Laws.

Mare clausum. lib. 1.
cap. 10. f. 5.

Sueton. Vita Tiberii Claudii.

Emerigon
traité des Assurances, preface, p. 3.

Christianity. Selden says, that the Rhodians maintained the sovereignty of the seas 23 years; and that their laws were compiled in the days of Jehosaphat, king of Judab. This opinion agrees exactly with the preceding calculation; for this king began his reign about 914 years before the birth of Christ. Notwithstanding this, it will always remain a doubtful point, when they were compiled; nor perhaps is it very material that it should be accurately ascertained. It is of more consequence to know when they were adopted by the Romans; but that is also a fact involved in some obscurity. We meet with no traces of them in the time of the republic; and from the manner in which Cicero mentions them in the speech last alluded to, he treats of them as laws, which had gained the admiration of the world, rather than of such as then made a part of the Roman code. Selden says, that they obtained a place in the Roman law in the reign of Tiberius Claudius, a conjecture in which he is supported by Peckius, one of the commentators on the laws of Rhodes, and by the well known character of Tiberius himself, who discovered the greatest attention to maritime affairs, and gave many signal instances of his attachment to Rhodes. But although these islanders were thus famous for their laws, we cannot discover from the fragments that have come down to our times, that they had the smallest idea of the contract of insurance; nor is there any tradition to induce us to conjecture, that they ever were acquainted with that mode of securing their property. It is true, that this is not a conclusive argument; because, although no such contract is mentioned in the fragments which we have, it by no means follows, that it did not form a part of their whole system, more especially as Emerigon, a very celebrated French writer of the present day, is of opinion, that the real laws of the Rhodians have never reached us; and that the fragments which we see, are certainly apocryphal. But as these laws were adopted by the Romans, it is fair to conjecture, that whether we have the real regulations of Rhodes or not, we should have the contract of insurance, if it had been known to them, incorporated with the other naval laws in the Imperial code. This idea is countenanced by the contract of bottomry, which is to be found in the fragments of the laws of Rhodes, and with which the people of that island were certainly acquainted; and in every book of the civil law, the contract de nautico fœnore, de usurâ maritimâ, also forms a considerable part. It is not going too far then to presume, that, as the Romans adopted a contract so beneficial to commerce, as that of bottomry; they would not have passed over a contract, of which the influence is still more extensively useful in the promotion of navigation and trade, if those, from whom they borrowed their naval laws, had themselves been acquainted either with its nature or advantages.

we

Leg. Rhod.
f. 1. art. 21.
f. 2. art. 16.
Digest. lib.
22. tit. 2.
Cod. lib. 4.
tit. 33.

Having said thus much of Rhodes and its laws, let us turn our attention shortly to the commerce of the Greeks. It is certainly true, that commerce flourished very much in several of the states of Greece, particularly in Corinth and Athens. The former separated two seas, was the key of Greece, and a city of the utmost importance: its trade was extensive, having a port to receive the merchandizes of Asia, and another, those of Italy; and there have been but few cities where the works of art were carried to so high a degree of perfection. Athens indeed was particularly famous for commercial knowledge; for their manufactures of all sorts were in high repute, and emulation was excited by the public rewards and honours which were bestowed upon those, who attained to excellence in any of the useful arts. The attention of this people to maritime affairs, (for they aimed at the sovereignty of the sea and obtained it) contributed much to their skill in

Montesq.
Esprit. des
loix, liv. 21.
ch. 7.

Taylor's Civil Law. p.
507.

Potter's Grecian Antiq.
Vol. 1. p. 80
83. 84. 167.

navigation. The many laws which they left to posterity, with regard to imports and exports, and the contract of bargain and sale; the many privileges granted to the mercantile part of the state; the appointment of magistrates, who had the cognizance of controversies that happened between merchants and mariners; the attention which they paid to their market, and the many officers concerned in that department, give us a very favourable idea of their judgment in the true principles of commerce. But notwithstanding this, the Athenians being of a very ambitious disposition, being more attentive to extend their maritime power than to enjoy it, and having a government of such a cast, that the public revenues were distributed among the common people to be squandered at their pleasure, (a) did not carry on so extensive a trade as might naturally be expected from the number of their seamen, from the produce of their mines, from their influence over the cities of Greece, and from those excellent laws and institutions, which have been just enumerated. Their trade was almost entirely confined to Greece and to the Euxine sea. From such of their laws as we have seen, and from such accounts as we have obtained of their naval history, we have not the smallest reason to suppose, that

Montesq. Es-
prit des loix.
liv. 21. c. 7.

(a) From several of the orations of Demosthenes it appears, that the poor were entitled to receive from the publick stock, as much money as would admit them to the diversions of the theatre; and besides this it was made a capital offence for any one to propose the restoration of the theatrical money, to its original uses. This custom was at length so much abused, that under pretence of theatrical money, almost all the public funds were distributed among the people. Hence the Athenians contracted an aversion for war, and spent their time and money upon public shews. Of this enormity Demosthenes vehemently complains, and inveighs against it, with as much warmth, as from the nature of the law just mentioned, he durst venture to do. See the first and also the third Olynthian.

this

this celebrated people knew any thing of the contract of insurance.

Some notice should have been taken before now of the Phenicians, an ancient commercial and opulent people. Indeed, the height of grandeur to which they attained is a sufficient proof of the vast resources of a commercial nation. Many writers, both sacred and profane, from their florid and magnificent descriptions, give a vast idea of their wealth and power. I forbore to speak of them till I should have occasion to mention one of their colonies, that of Carthage, which in opulence, and the extent of her commerce and naval power, equalled, if not surpassed, the parent state herself. Whether either, or both of these maritime powers ever promulgated any code of naval law cannot now be ascertained: for the former was entirely destroyed by Alexander the Great; and that it might never be restored, he removed its marine and commerce to Alexandria, in which removal, probably all its naval regulations might be lost. Carthage, on the other hand, having long disputed with Rome the empire of the world, was at last obliged to yield to her victorious rival, who, even after she gained the victory, retained such a hatred to the Carthaginians, that she rooted out every vestige of their former greatness. No time, however, nor the hatred of the Romans, can wholly obliterate the amazing accounts which have come down to us, of the enterprising spirit, and hazardous voyages of the Carthaginians, almost exceeding the bounds of credibility. Thus much is certain, that they took such distant voyages, and went so far even without the Mediterranean, both to the South and North of it, as induced many people to suppose, that they were acquainted with the use of the compass. It is evident, however, that they only followed the coasts. Besides the ancients might sometimes have performed such voyages, as would make one imagine they had the use of the compass: for if a pilot

Beawes Lex
Merc.
red. 4th.
edit. Introd.
p. 3.

Quint. Cur-tius, lib. 4.
cap. 8, &c.

Anderson's hist. of Commerce.
Introd. p. 31.
32.

Montesq.
liv. 21. ch. 8.

pilot were far from land, and during his voyage had such serene weather that in the night he could always see the polar star, and in the day, the rising and the setting sun, he might regulate his course by them, nearly as we do now by the compass. This, however, must be a fortuitous case, and not a regular plan of navigation.

Montesq. liv.
21. ch. 9.

Ferguson's
Rom. Rep.
Vol. 1. p. 100.

From a slight attention to the commercial and maritime history of the Romans, it will appear that they were equally strangers to the contract of insurance, as any of those people, of whom much has been already said. It seems to be universally agreed that the Romans were never very conspicuous as a maritime power, considered either in a commercial or warlike point of view. In the latter case they relied chiefly on their land forces, who were disciplined to stand always firm, and undaunted, and till towards the latter age of the republic, when we read of some wonderful naval exertions, they do not seem to have possessed any thing of a marine establishment. They never were distinguished by a jealousy for trade, and even when they attacked Carthage, they did it as a rival for empire, and not for commerce. It is recorded by historians, that till the first Punick war, upwards of 400 years after the building of the city, the Romans were so entirely ignorant of ship building, that they took for a model a Carthaginian galley, which had been accidentally stranded at Messina. Carthage, it must be observed, was at that time in her zenith of power and greatness; and yet from the model of one of her galleys, the Romans were able in sixty days from the time the timber was cut down, to fit out and man for sea, one hundred galleys of five tiers, and twenty of three tiers of oars. Such were the ships of the famous Carthage. The spirit of the people of Rome was entirely averse from commerce; and fully justifies what was said by a celebrated Roman historian, "sepe quisque hostem
"ferire, murum adjungere, conspici, dum tale fa-
"cinus

Sallust. Catalina. cap. 7.

*" cinus faceret, properabat; eas divitias, eam bo-
" nam famam, magnamque nobilitatem putabant."*

These exploits were the only glory of a Roman, no employment was deemed honourable but the plough and the sword, and every species of gain was deemed disgraceful to those of Patrician rank.

Livy, lib. 21.
cap. 63.

But it was from the constitution of the government, that individuals were possessed of this war-like spirit, so contrary to that which leads to eminence in commercial pursuits. The cast of their civil government was of a military nature; and for a considerable time, the civil and military officer was the same person; he distributed justice in Rome, and commanded their legions in the field, till the vast increase of their empire, and the multiplicity of civil business occasioned a separation. The natural consequence of this was, that no man who was not of the profession of his country, was much esteemed at Rome; and accordingly we find that traders and mechanics were incapable of succeeding to any public honours. Nay, so far was commerce from being encouraged at Rome, that it was deemed prejudicial to the state. The Romans, by humanity, terror, triumphs, tributes, and taxes, which they imposed on the conquered countries, increased the riches of their city. Laws were passed to prevent the exportation of their gold; the reason of which seems to be, that it carried away their money and brought them nothing in return but luxury, the bane of virtue, and destruction of empire. Could it be expected, says Doctor

Taylor's Civil Law. p. 502.

Taylor 490.

Civil Law 501.

Taylor, that a people of soldiers, whose trade was their sword, and whose sword supplied all the advantages of trade; who brought the treasures of the world into their Exchequer, without exporting any thing but their own personal bravery; who raised the public revenues, not by the culture of Italy, but by the tributes of provinces; who had Rome for their mansion and the world for their farm; should have leisure to set forward the

Schomberg's
observations on the Rho-dian laws.

the articles of commerce, or be likely to pay any regard to the character of its professors. The terms of defiance, upon which they lived with all mankind, in consequence of this martial spirit, would have prevented all the good effects of commerce, had their disposition allowed them to pursue it. That restless spirit, which kept their armies on foot, and their swords in their hands, for a succession of centuries, was fatal to factories and correspondence. The world was in arms, and insurances and underwriting were but a dead letter. This is very nearly a true representation of the case, for it is certain that not one law was made in favour of commerce, in the time of the commonwealth; on the contrary, it was greatly discouraged as introductory of luxury, which was supposed not to be compatible with the severity of their manners. It is also no less true than singular, that a people who were so well acquainted with the true principles of natural reason and justice, who applied those principles with so much propriety to the various wants and necessities of human society, and who had the honour of establishing a system of law, which has been adopted as the rule of action by the greatest part of Europe, and which continues to be so even at the present day, never attempted to introduce any plan of marine jurisprudence. Nay, this idea is carried farther by some writers, who declare, and I believe with truth, at least we can discover nothing to the contrary, that the Romans did not even take the pains to digest the materials which they had borrowed; and that whilst they carried every other branch of law to the highest pitch of accuracy and refinement, they were content to stand indebted to one of their own provinces both for the form and matter of their maritime code.

The Romans it is true, after the first Punick war, constantly maintained a fleet; but long after that time, even in the year of the city 563, it was observed of them, that they were very unskilful in the art of navigation. One of their own historians justly remarks, that at no period Polybius. did they ever make any figure at sea as a commercial power. Even when they arrived at their highest perfection in naval skill, their fleets were never employed for the purposes of trade, in the discovery of new states, or establishing commercial intercourse with those they already knew. The greatest extent of their commerce was to bring to the market of Rome that corn, which they collected in the various granaries of Sicily, Africa, and Egypt. Upon all other occasions the business of their fleet was to overawe the conquered, and to transport to Rome the spoils of ruined provinces. In such a state of commerce, it is impossible that insurances could exist; and we have already quoted the opinion of a respectable author to shew that they were unknown.

Dr. Taylor
ut supra.

There are several reasons applicable to all the ancient maritime powers, which seem to prove to demonstration, that insurances were not in use. We have seen, that insurances are only introduced where commerce is widely extended. The commerce of the ancients, compared with modern times, could not be very considerable, as it was confined within the Mediterranean, Ægean, and Euxine seas: to which they were compelled more from necessity than inclination. Carthage in all her glory had not arrived at any great degree of perfection in the art of ship building. Vessels of the best construction at that time could only be navigated with oars, or when they had a fair wind on a smooth sea: they might be built of green timber; and in case of a storm, could run ashore under any cover, or upon any beach that was free from rocks: in short, they were merely gallies, and were managed with the greater difficulty on account of the position of the sails and the mode of rigging practised in those days. This could not fail of proving a considerable obstacle hist. of Commerce.

Anderson's

Montesq.
Esprit des
loix. liv. 21.
ch. vi.

Montesq.
vol. 2. ch. 6.

stacle to the extension of commerce. But when we consider, in addition to the bad construction of their ships, that the ancients were utterly ignorant of that unerring guide, the mariner's compass (the honour of inventing which was reserved for more modern times) by reason of which they durst not venture out of sight of land, for fear of being overtaken by tempests, and being left at large in the boundless ocean, their commerce could not have been great; although we are even led to admire the progress which they made in commercial affairs. It is true, that many distant naval expeditions were made under all these disadvantages, which often proved fatal to the adventurers. (a) These expeditions however, could add little or nothing to their maritime or geographical skill, in which the ancients were certainly very deficient, on account of the necessity they were always under of coasting the shores, for want of a better guide; and indeed, the shores were the only compass. These observations are not intended to detract from that merit, which has been already allowed to the ancients for their naval exertions; because they are founded merely on a comparison of their powers and knowledge in those arts with the improvements of the moderns, and are adduced to shew that, under such disadvantages and obstacles to the extension of their trade and commerce, it was impossible that insurances could be at all known to the ancient world.

Preface to his work, p. 4.

M. Emerigon agrees, that the contract of insurance, as it is understood at this day, was not in use amongst the Romans; but he thinks he discovers some traces of it in the history of that peo-

(a) Huet, bishop of Avranches, in his very instructive and entertaining treatise on the commerce and navigation of the ancients, has with infinite labour and accuracy collected the most remarkable facts on this head. Ch. 8.

ple. The first instance given by this learned writer is this, that about the time of the second Punic war, those who had undertaken to supply the troops in Spain with provisions and military stores, made it a previous condition that the republic should be at the hazard of exporting them, according to the words of Livy, "Ut quæ in naves Livy. lib. 23.
"imposuissent, ab hostium, tempestatisve vi, publico cap. 49.
"periculo essent." But with all deference to so great a name, this seems to bear no resemblance to the contract of insurance; for it is nothing more than every well regulated state is bound to do by the ties of natural justice. It is equitable and right, that those, who in times of public danger, appropriate their private wealth to the advancement of the public service, should be reimbursed from the purse of the state for the private losses they may sustain. This indeed is the rule of conduct between man and man: for when one man purchases goods of another to be sent abroad, was it ever supposed that the seller was to run the risk of the voyage; or that if the goods perished he was never to be paid? If such a doctrine were to prevail in any country, the state could only be supplied with necessaries in time of war, by means of extortion, rapine, and violence.

Another instance given by Emerigon is a story, Traité des Assur. loc. cit. which we find recorded by Livy, of some men, Livy. lib. 25. cap. 3. who were charged with the care of exporting provisions for the army, and who, quia publicum periculum erat a vi tempestatis in iis, quæ portarentur ad exercitus, endeavoured by fraud to destroy the ship; and then told the directors of the state, that many very valuable articles were on board; whereas they had taken care to send out very old, rotten ships, in which were a few commodities, and those of small value. That part of this story which is material to the present enquiry, has already met with an answer in what was said upon the last quotation, and the propriety of a government's indemnifying those, who might suffer in the public service, is not at all altered by the misconduct of some individuals.
the

Epistolæ ad Familiares,
lib. 2. epist.
17.

Ferguson's
hist. of the
Rom. Rep.
book 4. ch.
5.

Cicero ad
Atticum. lib.
7. epist. 1.

Molloy Ma-
lyne.

The next instance is from one of Cicero's epistles, and is of a different nature from those last mentioned; because here Cicero seems to wish that the property in question should be secured, not only for himself, but also for the people of Rome. Cicero, having gained a victory in Cilicia, and the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey being then a matter almost unavoidable, wrote to Caninius Sallustius at Laodicea, in which letter he uses these words; "Laodiceæ me prædes accepturum arbitror" "omnis pecuniæ publicæ, ut et mihi et populo cau-" "tum sit sine veſturæ periculo." From this passage it is inferred that Cicero alludes to an insurance. I own, from the meaning of the word prædes, and from the situation of affairs at Rome, it seems, as if Cicero wished rather to find some secure and substantial person at Laodicea, in whose care and custody he might leave this money till more peaceable times: and it is very unlikely that in such a troublesome conjuncture he should be desirous of bringing a great treasure to the scene of faction and confusion, especially as in a letter to his friend Atticus, he declares himself at a great loss to know what line of conduct he ought to pursue. But even if he wished to bring it to Rome, the mode he proposed seems more like the modern bill of exchange, than a policy of insurance. Besides, unless this species of contract was at that time tolerably well understood, Sallust, the person to whom he wrote, would have found considerable difficulty in comprehending his meaning from the single sentence in his letter, which has been mentioned; and if it were well known, is it possible to suppose it would not have obtained a place in their code of laws?

But the passage upon which those, who contend for the antiquity of this branch of commerce, have chiefly relied, is one to be found in Suetonius, in the eighteenth chapter of his life of Tiberius

Tiberius Claudius, the fifth emperor of Rome.

“Negotiatoribus certa lucra proposuit, suscepto in “se damno, si cui quid per tempestates accidisset.”

This sentence wholly unconnected seems to convey such an idea; but we must attend to the context, in order to understand it. This relates merely to the corn trade; for as the Roman territory was not sufficient to supply enough for the consumption of the city, it became absolutely necessary to give great encouragement to this branch of commerce: nay it was a political, not a mercantile concern; for the very existence of the empire depended upon it. It was this circumstance, which induced the emperor to pay such regard to this branch of trade, to propose bounties, and to confer certain privileges, the certa lucra, of which Suetonius speaks, upon those who would venture out to sea for the public service in the midst of winter. Dr. Taylor tells us, that a private consideration also had some weight with Claudius upon this occasion, for that once, in a great scarcity of provisions, he was attacked in the Forum by the populace, and so disagreeably treated with abuse, and crusts of stale bread, that he with great difficulty escaped through some private passage: from which time he made it his great care and concern to get corn imported, even in the winter. As to the risk, which Suetonius says, the emperor took upon himself, it is to be observed, that although the ships were private property, yet they would not have gone to sea in the dangerous seasons they did, had it not been for the public service, and to provide provisions for the use of the whole city. This being the case, we have already shewn, that it would be contrary to the first principles of justice and equity, and to the practice followed at this day by all governments which are founded on just principles, to allow such losses to fall upon individuals (a).

From

(a) The observations here made seem, upon examination, to be agreeable to the ideas of Dr. Taylor, the president Mont-

Grotius de
Jure Belli,
lib. 2. cap. 12.
f. 3.
Bynk. Quæst.
Juris Publici.
lib. 1. cap. 21.

From what has been said it appears evident, that the Romans had no knowledge of insurances; in addition to which both Grotius and Bynkershoek have expressly declared, that among the ancients this contract was unknown; the latter of whom uses these expressions: “Adeo tamen ille contractus us olim fuit incognitus, ut nec nomen ejus, nec rem ipsam in Jure Romano deprehendas.”

But to whatever degree of excellence the Romans attained either in literature, commerce, or any of the refined arts, they all visibly declined when the Roman empire was over-run by the Barbarians; or, perhaps it may be said with greater propriety, that they were overwhelmed and lost with that power, which had raised them to be the object of public attention and notice. For, in times of public ruin and desolation, when war rears its standard, lays waste cities, and tramples on the noblest improvements, it is impossible for commerce to hold its station, or to flourish in the midst of contention and tumult.

Hume's Hist.
of England.

It is the observation of a profound modern historian, that there is an ultimate point of depression, as well as of exaltation, from which human affairs naturally return in a contrary progress, and beyond which they seldom pass in their advancement or decline. This was the case with respect to commerce. When the repeated incursions of the Barbarians had ravaged the Roman empire, and had checked every liberal improvement, some people, forced by necessity, or led by inclination, took shelter in a few marshy islands that lay near the coast of Italy, and which would never have been thought worth inhabiting in time of peace. This happened in the sixth century, and at the first settling of these tesquieu, and Mr. Schomberg, upon the same subject. See also the opinion of a learned civilian, Langenbeck of Hamburg, in Magen's Essay on Insurances. Vol. 1. p. 1.

wanderers,

wanderers, they had certainly no other object in view, than that of living in a tolerable degree of security from their enemies, and of procuring a moderate subsistence. As these islands were divided from each other by narrow channels, and those channels were so encumbered by shallows, that it was impossible for strangers to navigate them, they found that security which they wished; and by uniting among themselves for the sake of improving their condition, they became in the eighth century a well established republic. This, though it may appear strange, was the origin of the famous republic of Venice, which soon became a great commercial power; for, from the first moment that those people took possession of the islands, necessity made them extremely attentive to commerce; the first beginning of which was naturally fishing. Next to fishing, they began to trade in salt, many pits of which were discovered in their own islands; and at last their city gradually became the magazine for the merchandize of the neighbouring continent on all sides, and they themselves the general carriers of Europe. Thus to the people of Italy, and to those of Venice and Genoa in particular, we are to attribute the re-establishment of commerce. Of the causes which contributed to its revival, it remains to speak.

Anderson's History of Commerce,
vol. 1. p. 19, 20.

Various causes concurred to revive the spirit of commerce, and to renew, in some degree, that intercourse between nations, which, during the period of Gothic ignorance and barbarity, had been much interrupted. The religious wars of the eleventh century, called the Crusades, by leading many from every part of Europe into Asia, opened an extensive communication between the East and West; and though the avowed purpose of these expeditions was conquest, and not commerce; though the issue of them proved as unfortunate, as the motives for undertaking them were

Robertson's View of Society, &c.

Huét
Traité du Commerce
des Anciens,
cap. 10.
Anders.
History of Commerce.
vol. 1. p. 144.

wild and enthusiastick, yet their commercial effects were beneficial and lasting. For the first armies, which ranged themselves under the banner of the Cross, having been led through a vast extent of country, and having suffered so much from the length of their march, and the barbarism and inhospitality of the people inhabiting those countries, through which they travelled, others were deterred from taking the same course; and chose rather to go by sea, than encounter so many hardships. Venice, Genoa, and Pisa, furnished the transports, to convey the troops: and it is reported, that the sums were immense which they received merely for freight. Besides this, the Crusaders contracted with them for supplies of military stores and provisions; their fleets hovered on the coast; and by supplying the army with whatever was wanting, they engrossed all the advantages arising from this branch of commerce. These states were also benefited by the success, which attended the arms of these religious and enthusiastick heroes; for there are charters yet extant, containing grants to the Venetians, Pisans, and Genoese, of great privileges in the various settlements, which the Christians had gained in Asia. When the Crusaders seized Constantinople, the Venetians, who had planned the enterprize, transferred to their own State many of the valuable branches of commerce, which had formerly centered in Constantinople. Another great cause of the revival of commerce, was the invention of the Mariner's Compass, which, by rendering navigation more secure as well as more adventurous, facilitated the communication between remote nations, and brought them nearer to each other. The honour of this invention, so beneficial to mankind, has been claimed by the French; and their claim has been allowed by several authors, and maintained by a celebrated writer of their own. In this opinion perhaps national partiality may have some weight. Most authors, however, agree that the inventor was Flavio de Gioia, a native of Amalfi, an ancient commercial city in the kingdom of Naples. (a)

It is evident, that almost all the commerce of Europe, in those days, centered amongst the Italians. As they at that time carried on and established a regular trade with the East in the ports of Egypt, and drew from thence all the rich produce of India; it is reasonable to suppose, that in order to support so extensive a commerce, these industrious and ingenious people were the first, who introduced insurances into the system of mercantile affairs. It is true, there is no direct authority to warrant a positive assertion, that they were the inventors of this kind of contract: But it is certain, that the knowledge of it came with them into the different maritime states, in which parties of them settled; and when it is admitted that they were the carriers, manufacturers, and bankers of Europe, it is probable that they also led the way to the establishment of a contract, which is so essentially necessary to the support and cultivation of commerce. It has, however, been asserted by writers of the French nation, (b) that insurance dates its origin in the year 1182, and that it was introduced by the Jews, who were banished from France about that period, and who

Monf.
Savary Dict.
Universel.
Le Guidon,
c. 1. art. 1.

(a) It appears from Anderson, that some people had supposed that the conquest of Charlemagne in Italy, towards the end of the 8th century, and his subsequent establishment of Christianity in the Western and Northern parts of Germany, contributed greatly to the revival of commerce. In what I have said upon this subject, I chose rather to follow the steps of a very elegant and profound historian of modern times. Robertson's View of Society, &c.

Anderson's
introd. p. 7.

(b) Anderson says, the Jews were banished from France, in 1143. Anderson's History of Commerce, vol. 1. p. 82. But I believe such an event twice took place in that kingdom.

Esprit des
Loix liv. 21.
c. 16.

took that method to facilitate and secure the removal of their effects. They proceed to say, that the Lombards, who were not idle spectators of this contrivance adopted it, and in a short time improved it considerably. It is not very necessary to enquire into the truth of this fact, nor indeed are there materials to enable us to do so: but it is observable that the President Montesquieu mentions that the Jews upon this occasion invented bills of exchange; but does not say a syllable of policies of insurance. It is agreed, however, that if the Lombards were not the inventors, they were at least the first who brought the contract of insurance to perfection, and introduced it to the world.

Before we come to consider the amazing improvements which have taken place, with respect to this branch of commerce, in our own country, in these days, it will be expected that some notice should be taken of those maritime codes, and naval regulations, which have distinguished the modern, no less than the laws of Rhodes did the ancient world.

Vol. 1.
p. 58.

To the people of Amalfi, we are indebted as well for the first code of modern sea laws, as for the invention of the compass. We learn from Anderson, that the city of Amalfi, so long ago as the year 1020, was so famous for its merchants and ships, that its inhabitants at that time obtained from the Caliph of Egypt, a safe conduct, to enable them to trade freely in all his dominions: and they also received from him several other distinguished privileges. It was towards the close of that century, that they promulgated their system of marine law, which from the place of its compilation, received the denomination of Tabula Amalfitana. This table superseded in a great measure the ancient Jus Rhodianum; and its authority was acknowledged by all the States of Italy, for some centuries. But as trade increased.

increased very rapidly in other cities on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, they became unwilling to receive laws from a neighbouring state, which they now equalled, if not surpassed, in the extent of their naval establishments. Every one, therefore, began to erect a tribunal, in order to decide all controverted points, according to laws peculiar to itself; but still referring in matters of higher moment, to the former rule of action, the Amalfitan code. From such a variety of laws, as must necessarily be the consequence of each of the Italian states becoming its own legislator, so much disorder and confusion arose, that general convenience at last compelled them to do that, which jealousy of each others power and growing commerce would for ever have prevented them from effecting; and at a general assembly, it was agreed to digest the laws of all the separate communities into one body. Every regulation therefore, which was thought to be founded in justice either in the laws of Marseilles, Pisa, Genoa, Venice, or Barcelona, was collected into one mass, and published in the 14th century, under the title of Consolato del Mare. A French writer Hubner, Sur la Saïsie des Batimens neutres speaks of this production in a very unfavourable way; and calls it a rude, ill formed mass of maritime and positive regulations, of ordinances of the middle ages, and of private decisions. Indeed when we consider that this was a compilation from the various regulations of so many different states, it could not excite much surprise, if it really merited the censure of this author. But upon examination, it is a work of considerable merit; the decisions it contains are founded on the laws of nations; it has been received and allowed to have the force of law in every part of Italy; and it is the source from whence the people of that country, as well as those of Spain and France, have been said to derive many of their best marine regulations. Unfortunately too, Emerigon has discovered, that Vinnius in Peckium, 190.

Emerigon, preface, p. 8.
because

b 4

because one of the chapters in the Consolato del Mare overturns some favourite system of this learned author, he is out of humour with the whole composition. One thing, however, is clear, that neither the Consolato del Mare, nor the Amalfitan code, upon which it was founded, contains any thing upon insurance law; so that we have here another confirmation of the idea, that this contract was not a production of very ancient times (a).

Schomberg's
Observ. on the Rhodian Laws,

Sir Philip Meadow's Observ. on the Dom. of the Sea, c. 4.

The spirit of commerce was not, however, confined to the South parts of Europe; it now began to extend itself among the inhabitants of the Western coasts. But whatever maritime regulations they might have established among themselves, they were found not to be sufficiently extensive for the commercial intercourse, which began to take place in those countries in the course of the 12th century. Accordingly, about the year 1194, Richard the First, king of England, on his return from his wild expedition to the Holy Land, having staid to repose himself for some time at the isle of Oleron, in the Bay of Biscay, an island which he inherited in right of his mother, whose portion it was in marriage with his father Henry the Second, gave orders for the compilation of a maritime code. Some authors suppose that the hardships and dangers, to which in the course of his expedition, he saw adventurers by sea were exposed, induced him to promulgate a law, by which their condition might be rendered more comfortable. Others imagine, and probably their supposition is better founded, that the great intercourse between his English and French subjects, and their allies, required a certain general system of sea law, for the more speedy and impartial determination of all disputes, which might occasionally arise. The laws of Oleron, therefore, which are in substance but an abstract of the old Rhodian laws, with some additions and alterations, accommodated to the practice of that age, and the customs of the Western nations, were proposed as a common standard and measure for the more equal distribution of justice amongst the people of different governments. These excellent regulations were so much esteemed, that they have been the model, on which all modern sea laws have been founded; and two distinguished nations have contended for the honour of their production. France, jealous of the lustre which the English justly derive from the production of this code, with much anxiety claims this honour to herself; and very distinguished authors have stood forth the champions of her claim. The substance of their arguments is, that Eleanor, wife of Henry 2d king of England, and Duchess of Guyenne, returning from the Holy Land, and having seen the beneficial effects of the Consolato del Mare; ordered the first draught of the judgments or laws of Oleron to be made: that her son Richard the First, returning from the same expedition enlarged and improved what his mother had begun: that they were certainly intended for the use of the French merely, because they are written in the old Gascon French, without any mixture of the Norman or English languages: that they constantly refer for examples of voyages to Bordeaux, St. Malo, and other sea-ports in France; never to the Thames, or to any port of England, or Ireland: and that they were made by a Duchess and Duke of Guyenne, for Guyenne, and not for their kingdom of England. One of these learned writers adds a reason, which he thinks very conclusive to prove that these laws were of French extraction, namely, that from their first appearance, Cleirac Coutumes de la Mer. p. 2. Valin. Emerigon.

(a) In what I have said upon the Amalfitan code, I have found myself extremely indebted to Mr. Schomberg's very ingenious observations upon that subject, in his treatise on the maritime laws of Europe.

Valin.

ance, their decisions have been treated with extreme respect in the courts of France.

In these days, it is very immaterial whether France or England is entitled to the honour they respectively claim, and I shall not tire the reader with any argument upon the point (a).

Vol. 1. p.
454.

Anderson in his history of commerce has expressly stated, but he does not adduce any authority in support of his opinion, that the laws of Oleron treat of insurances. I have read them repeatedly with the direct view of discovering whether insurances were of so ancient a date: but I have not found a single word, which could induce me to subscribe to such an assertion. In confirmation of my opinion, Emerigon, speaking of these laws, has observed, “ Il n’y est pas dit le mot du contrat d’Assurance, qui apparemment n’étoit pas encore alors en usage.”

Preface, p.
11.

Cleirac Us et Contumes de la Mer.
Emerigon.
Pref.

But while we pay due respect and veneration to those maritime regulations, which distinguished the Southern and Western parts of Europe, it would be improper silently to pass over the laws, which were ordained by an industrious and respectable body of people, who inhabited the city of Wisbuy famous for its commerce, and renowned on the shores of the Baltic. The merchants of this city carried on so extensive a trade, and gave themselves up so entirely to commerce, that they must doubtless have found a great inconvenience in having no maritime code, to which they could refer to decide their disputes. To such a cause we are probably indebted for those laws and marine ordinances, which bear the name of Wisbuy, which were received by the Swedes, at the time they were composed, as a just and equitable rule of action, and which were long respected (and for ought I know, are to this day observed) by the Germans, Swedes, Danes, and by all the Northern nations: although the city, in which they received their origin, has long dwindled into insignificancy and contempt. At what time these laws were compiled is a matter of dispute; and different writers have adopted different periods, in order to answer their own particular ends, or to advance the honour of that age which it happened to be their business to extol. The writers of the North pretend that Wisbuy was a great commercial city, in the 9th century; from whence they argue, that their laws must be of very high antiquity; that they were the model, from which those of Oleron were copied, and that they were received and acknowledged by all nations in Europe, even to the straits of Gibraltar. On the other hand it is answered, and with much strength of reasoning, that the Northern code is a transcript from that of Oleron, although it contains several additions: for it has been shewn, that the laws of Oleron were promulgated by Richard the First about the close of the twelfth century, at which time, as appears by the report of a Swedish historian, the city of Wisbuy was not built, nor for near a century afterwards; that the inhabitants were merely strangers collected together from different parts, who, so far from having any power or influence over their neighbours, were not absolute masters of their own city. Besides, if their laws had been prior to those of Oleron, we should have found in the latter some regulations respecting insurances; because a copyist never would have omitted so material a branch of commercial legislation, the laws of Wisbuy having expressly mentioned insurances, and provided, that if the merchant oblige the master to insure the ship, the merchant shall be obliged to insure the master's life against the hazards of the sea.

(a) For the arguments in favour of the English claim, the reader may consult Seldon’s Mare Clausum, lib. 2. cap. 24. Mr. Just. Blackstone’s Commentaries, vol. 1. page 418. S. Bomberg’s Observations, page 88.

Cleirac. 4.

Olaus Magnus, lib. 10. cap. 16.

Art. 66.

Afterwards

Robertson's
View, vol. 1.
p. 351. quar-
to edit.
Emerigon,
pref. p. 12.

Schomb. Ob-
serv. 106.

Robertson's
View of Society.

Kuricke
Comm.
Schomb. Ob-
serv.

Afterwards towards the close of the fifteenth century, we find from history, that many considerable regulations were made at Barcelona in Spain, respecting marine insurances.

But if the laws of Wisbuy were not prior to those of Oleron, yet it is much to their honour, and shews in what estimation they were held in the greatest part of Europe, that after having for a long course of time enjoyed the highest authority in all the Northern tribunals for maritime affairs, they were thought worthy of being adopted as the basis of the ordinances of the Hanseatick league. Of this ancient and famous confederacy it will be sufficient in this place to observe, that it began about the thirteenth century, and originated with the cities of Lubeck and Hamburgb, which were obliged to enter into a league of mutual defence, in order to protect themselves against the nations round the Baltick, who were extremely barbarous, and infested that sea with their piracies. These two cities derived such advantages from their union, that other towns acceded to the confederacy, and in a short time, eighty of the most considerable cities, scattered through those countries, which stretch from the bottom of the Baltick to Cologne upon the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanseatick League; which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity dreaded by the most powerful monarchs. This association, it is said, formed the first systematick plan of commerce known in Europe: but notwithstanding this, they did not for a long time publish any maritime code, but were entirely governed by those of Oleron and Wisbuy. At a general meeting, however, held at Lubeck, in the year 1614, it was agreed to extract from those compilations whatever should be thought most useful, and that it should in future be the rule of decision in every contested point. It was prior to this time, about the fourteenth century, that the members of this league were in their greatest splendour; their commerce was at its height; they supplied the rest of Europe with naval stores, and they pitched upon different towns, the most eminent of which was Bruges in Flanders, where they established staples, in which their commerce was regularly carried on. The sovereigns of Europe looked up to the Hanseatick League with esteem and admiration; and the kings of France and England granted them considerable privileges. But when this union had rendered them rich and powerful, they grew arrogant and over-bearing, which induced the princes, whom they had offended, to take a closer and more accurate view of the danger which might arise from such a confederacy, and of the advantages which might accrue to themselves from the possession of their trade. These causes at last concurred to effect the decay of this alliance, which however is not wholly dissolved at this day; as the cities of Lubeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, maintain sufficient marks of that splendour and dignity, with which this confederacy was anciently distinguished.

was

Robertson's
View, &c.
Ander. Hist.
of Comm.

Hume's Hist.
of England,
vol 4. p.
348, 349.

Having thus taken a brief, but comprehensive view, of the most considerable maritime states both of ancient and modern times, I forbear to go more at length into the history of several governments, which have published naval regulations for the direction of their own subjects; because they are only binding within their own particular districts; they are very similar to those about which so much has been already said; they are all collected by Magens in the second volume of his Essay on Insurances, and are occasionally referred to in the course of the ensuing work. Besides, I hasten to give an account of the vast improvements, which have been made in this country within these last thirty years, with respect to insurances, and which are the

the main object of this enquiry. It would, however, be improper in a work of this nature, entirely to pass over the French nation, the maritime strength of which has of late years considerably encreased; and whose writers upon commercial affairs would reflect honour upon any country.

Few people understand the theory of commerce better than our neighbours on the Continent; and yet they have not in practice come up to what might have been expected. It is true that France from her situation, from the bent of her people to certain manufactures, from the happiness of her soil, and her natural advantages, must be always possessed of a great internal and external trade, which must add greatly to her wealth, and render her the most respectable power on the Continent of Europe. But the French do not naturally possess that undaunted perseverance, which is necessary for commerce and colonization. It is besides a great disadvantage to the commerce of France, that as its government is military, the profession of a merchant is not so honourable as in England, so that the French nobility think that it would be beneath them to attend to the drudgery of trade, and that it would degrade their ancestry to allow any of their sons to follow the business of a merchant. The consequence of this is, that the church, the law, and the army are stocked with the members of noble families; and the counting-house is by them entirely deserted. At one period, indeed, there was an appearance that France would make as illustrious a figure amidst the powers of Europe in trade, as she then did as a warlike nation. The period, to which I allude, was under the administration of the famous Colbert, who next to Henry the Great, may justly be stiled the father of the French commerce and manufactures. This illustrious man, who was of Scotch extraction, descended of a family no way considerable by its splendour or antiquity, raised himself

Vie de Colbert.

himself by his activity, diligence, and knowledge of commerce, to the first offices under the government of France. Being appointed to the superintendence of the finances, he proposed such regulations, as brought about the purpose he intended, the orderly and frugal management of them; and established the trade of France with the East and West Indies, from which she has reaped considerable benefits. He also patronized and encouraged the liberal arts and sciences, reformed the courts of justice, and introduced many important regulations, which regarded the order of society. But in 1669, when appointed secretary of state, and entrusted with the management of affairs relating to the sea, he had a full opportunity of exerting those talents, which he so eminently possessed, and for the exertions of which his name has been transmitted with so much honour to posterity. In order to gain a proper insight into the true effects of commerce upon the various nations of the world, and the advantages of some particular branches of trade, he procured and employed learned and diligent men to enquire into the commercial histories of cities long since destroyed, and the nature of the climate, soil, and productions of the countries then rising into notice. It was to this spirit of enquiry in this famous statesman, that the world is indebted, as appears from the dedication, for that very masterly performance upon the commerce, and navigation of the ancients, written by Huét, bishop of Avranches and Soissons, who is justly entitled to a high rank among men of letters. Colbert, having thus made use of the labours of others in order to gain useful information, undertook to restore the navy and commerce of France; and he completed all his services by the publication of that excellent body of sea laws, known by the name of the Ordinances of Lewis the 14th, which comprehend every thing relating to naval or commercial

Huét Hist. du Commerce et de la Navigation des Anciens, pref.

Vie de Colbert.

L'Honneur
Francois, 7
tom. p. 302.

commercial jurisprudence; and of which the doctrine of insurances forms a considerable part. To its merits all Europe has borne testimony, and the name of Colbert must ever be mentioned with respect, when the ordinances of Lewis the 14th are the subject of conversation (4).

This ordinance has had the good fortune to meet with an able commentator in Valin, who, being thoroughly sensible of the advantages which his country must necessarily derive from such an excellent code, has, with a degree of labour, industry and discernment, which excite our admiration, and which are highly deserving of imitation, placed it in the most favourable point of view, has cleared up every obscurity, by tracing these laws to their ancient sources, and by a full investigation of old ordinances, and the decisions of former tribunals, has added much to the mass of learning upon subjects of this nature. But of all the sources, from which modern French legislators could derive the most essential information, the famous treatise called "Le Guidon" was the chief. This tract was published by Cleirac, who pays a due compliment to its merits, in his work upon the Usages and Customs of the sea: and although in its style and manner it certainly favours of the rust of antiquity; yet it contains the true principles of naval jurisprudence. If the style be antiquated, and the text be corrupted in some places, yet the treatise is still valuable by the wisdom, which

Cleirac, p.
213.

L'Honneur
Francois, par
M. de Sacy.
7 tom. p. 302.

(a) It was under the administration of Colbert, that the French laid the foundations of Quebec on the banks of the river St. Lawrence; and he performed a work, which, says a French historian, even in the eyes of Richelieu, seemed to surpass human power; and that was to effect a junction between the Atlantick and the Mediterranean, by means of a canal, the execution of which attracted the admiration of Europe, and added much to the splendour of French commerce.

Shines

shines through the whole, and the number of decisions, which it contains.

Upon this occasion let me not forget to take proper notice of two very modern and distinguished French writers, M. Pothier and M. Emerigon. The former of these has written admirable dissertations upon every species of express and implied contracts, and amongst the rest upon that of insurance; he has considered his various subjects with so much clearness, and perspicuity, and has produced so many apposite examples in support of the positions he advances, that they greatly contribute to the advancement of the knowledge of this branch of jurisprudence. His style is at the same time manly, neat, and classical; and well suited to didactic discourses.

Pothier, 3
tom. duod.
p. 1.

M. Emerigon has, in his work, confined himself to the consideration of marine insurances, and to the contract of bottomry only. This being the case, he has gone into those subjects much more at length than any former French writer; and has with infinite labour, unwearied study and reflection, collected the decisions and authorities, applicable to the purpose of his work. This learned foreigner, I understand, holds a distinguished rank among the advocates of his own country: and his treatise upon insurances will by no means diminish his fame.

Traité des Assurances.

We have seen, that the naval reputation of the English was arrived at a great height in the twelfth century, for the laws of Oleron, of the merits of which much has been said, were at that time compiled by an English monarch, and received here as the regulator of naval affairs. The progress of commerce, however, in this country, was not answerable to so auspicious a beginning; for in the reign of Edward the Third, upwards of a century afterwards, commerce and industry were at a very low ebb. That monarch struck with the flourishing state of the Northern provinces, which have been already described, and

Hume's Hist.
of Eng. oct.
edit. 2 vol.
p. 494.

Robertson's
View of Society, &c.

perceiving the true cause of their prosperity, endeavoured to excite a spirit of industry among his subjects, who seemed to be blind to the advantages of their situation, and ignorant of those sources, from which they might derive wealth and opulence. So far were they lulled by ignorance and indolence, that they did not even attempt those manufactures, the materials of which they themselves supplied to foreigners. Notwithstanding the endeavours of Edward, and the many wise establishments proposed and encouraged by him, it was not till the reign of Elizabeth, that the English began to discover their true interests, and the arts by which they were to obtain that preeminence and rank, which they now hold among commercial nations. This slow progress of commerce in this country may be accounted for on various grounds. During the Saxon heptarchy, England was split into many kingdoms, perpetually at variance with each other; it was exposed to the fierce incursions of the Northern pirates; it was sunk in barbarity and ignorance; and consequently was in no condition to cultivate commerce, or to pursue any system of wise or useful policy. To this succeeded the Norman conquest, and all the consequences of a feudal government, military in its nature, hostile to commerce, and the arts and refinements of a liberal and civilized people. Scarce had the nation recovered from the shock occasioned by this revolution, when it was engaged in supporting its monarch's pretensions to the French crown; and it long continued to waste its vigour and wealth in wild endeavours to conquer that country. To this we may add the destructive civil wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, which long deluged the kingdom with blood; and to which a period was at last happily put by the union of their several titles to the crown, in the person of Henry the Eighth. The reformation then took place under that monarch, and it was not till the reign of Elizabeth, that the feuds and dissensions which such an important event was likely to occasion, began to subside. During her long reign, and her wise and prudent administration of government, commerce began to rear its head, and found shelter and protection from the managers of public affairs. From this short sketch, it is not much to be wondered at, that England was one of the last nations of Europe, which availed herself of her great commercial advantages: but she has since made ample amends for her long continued indolence and inactivity, by the amazing extent of her commerce, and the wise laws and regulations to be found in her system of maritime jurisprudence.
was

While commerce continued in this weak and languid state, it cannot be supposed that insurances, which spring from commerce, were at all encouraged or understood. It is true, the Lombards came into England in the 13th century, and it is universally agreed, that whatever may have been the origin of insurances, they were introduced into England by that active and industrious people. This idea is countenanced and confirmed by the clause to this day inserted in all policies of insurance "that this writing or policy of assurance shall be of as much force and effect as any writing heretofore made in Lombard Street, &c." the place where these Italians are known to have taken up their residence, and carried on their trade. The preamble to the statute of Queen Elizabeth, which will be presently mentioned, speaks of insurances, as having existed time out of mind in this kingdom. Be this as it may, it is certain that prior to the reign of that princess very few insurances had been effected: or, if effected, no question had ever arisen upon them in any of the superior courts. So little were the judges acquainted with the nature of the contract, that so late as the 30 and 31st of Elizabeth's reign, it became a question,

Anderson's
Hist. of Com.

Vide the appendix, No.

6 Coke Rep.
47. b.

where an action upon a policy of insurance should be tried, the policy having been effected in London, and the ship detained in the river Soane in France. The policy was on a ship from Melcombe Regis, in the county of Dorset, to Abbeville in France. The plaintiff declared, that the ship in sailing towards Abbeville, to wit, in the river of Soane, was arrested by the king of France. The parties came to issue upon the question, whether the ship was so arrested or not: and it was tried before Lord Chief Justice Wray, in the city of London; and a verdict was found for the plaintiff. In arrest of judgment it was moved, that this issue arising merely from a place out of the realm, could not be tried in London. But it was resolved by the court, that this issue should be tried where the action was in this case brought; for the promise which is the ground and foundation of the action, was made in London; and the arrest now in issue, is not the ground of the action, which is founded on the assumpsit, and the arrest is the breach of the assumpsit.

43 Eliz. ch.
12.

This is the most ancient case I have been able to find upon the subject of insurances; and I thought proper to insert it here, as the best proof, that prior to the reign of Elizabeth, this contract could have been very little, if at all known. We have seen, however, that under Elizabeth, the genius of England began to display itself: about which time also, the legislature began to think the regulation of matters of assurance, an object well worthy of their most serious attention; and it cannot but afford us much pleasure to find, that even in that early age, the true principles, upon which this species of contract is founded, and upon which it ought to be protected and encouraged in a commercial nation, were clearly and fully understood. In the preamble to an act of parliament, passed in the 43d year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, concerning matters of assurance used amongst merchants,

the

the sense of the legislature upon the subject is expressed with clearness and perspicuity. After reciting that it has ever been the policy of this nation to encourage trade, and that policies of assurance have existed time out of mind, it goes on to state the advantages to be derived from their encouragement in a commercial nation. “ By “ means of which policies of assurance, it com“ eth to pass upon the loss or perishing of any “ ship, there followeth not the undoing of any “ man, but the loss lighteth rather easily upon “ many, than heavy upon few, and rather upon “ them that adventure not, than upon those that “ do adventure ; whereby all merchants, espe“ cially those of the younger sort, are allured to “ venture more willingly, and more freely.”

The purpose of that statute was, to erect a particular court for the trial of causes, relative to policies of insurance, in a summary way ; and to that end the statute ordained, that a commission should issue yearly, directed to the Judge of the Admiralty, the Recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two common lawyers, and eight merchants, empowering any five of them to hear and determine all such causes, arising in London ; and it also gave an appeal from their decision, by way of bill, to the court of Chancery. But this statute not entirely answering the intention of the legislature, some further regulations were made by a subsequent statute : such as the re-^{13 and 14} duction of the number necessary to constitute a^{Car. 2. ch.}
 quorum. I forbear entering at length into this^{23.}
 matter, the court erected by these statutes being now entirely disused. The reasons of this may be collected from some few decisions in our reporters : but one appears on the face of the statute itself ; namely ; that its jurisdiction was not sufficiently extensive, being confined to such causes only, as arose in London.

By a case reported in Style we find, that a^{Bendir. v.} prohibition issued to the court of Policies of^{Oyle, Style} Insurance, 166.

Insurance, to prevent it from proceeding in a case of insurance upon a life, the Court of King's Bench being of opinion, that the statute only meant to give the court below cognizance of such contracts only, as related to merchandize.

Dalbie v.
Proudfoot.
1 Shower-
er, 396.

In another case it seemed to be the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, that the jurisdiction of this newly erected court did not extend to suits brought by the assurer against the assured; but only to such as were prosecuted by the latter against the former. It is true, in Sir Bartolomew Shower's note of the case, no decision appears to have been made; but a rule to shew cause why a prohibition should not issue, was obtained; and no notice is afterwards taken of it, although the learned reporter was himself the counsel in the cause, who had obtained the original rule.

Came v.
Moy. 2 Si-
derfin, 121.

But a case reported in Siderfin, seems to have struck a more severe blow at the existence of this court than any of those cases I have mentioned; for it was there held, that it was no bar to an action upon a Policy of Insurance at the common law to say, that the plaintiff had sued the defendant for the same cause, in the court erected by the statute of Elizabeth, and that his suit was there dismissed.

Lex Merc.
Red. 4th edit.
p. 292.

These causes co-operating together, probably with some instances of partiality in the judges, this court fell into disuse, no commission having issued for many years; but insurance causes are now decided, like all other questions of property, and by that mode of trial most agreeable to the nature of our constitution, by a trial in a court of common law.

It has been much the fashion of late years to insist upon the advantages which the trading part of the nation would derive from the establishment of some equitable and amicable judicatory for the trial of all disputed points in matters of insurance. This is only another proof of the weakness and fallibility of the human mind, which is never

never satisfied with the enjoyments within its reach, however excellent they may be; but pants after those of foreign growth. Thus, a people, who are possessed of a species of trial, the best calculated for the discovery of truth, and the advancement of justice, and which has excited the admiration of the world, are desirous of parting with such an advantage for a mode of trial, which is very unsatisfactory.

The court erected by the statute of Elizabeth, and which has now fallen into disuse, is perhaps one of the strongest arguments, that can be adduced to prove, that such a judicature is not congenial to the spirit and disposition of Britons, nor well adapted for the purposes of its institution. It is universally agreed by all writers upon jurisprudence, that nothing tends so much to the elucidation of truth, and the detection of fraud, as the open viva voce examination of witnesses, in the presence of all mankind; before judges, who from their knowledge of books and men, acquired by long study and experience, are well qualified to discriminate and decide between right and wrong; and before twelve upright citizers, who have an opportunity of observing the appearance, countenance, inclination, and deportment of those, who are thus examined upon oath. Besides the subjects of those states, which have established these equitable tribunals, sensible of the superior advantages of the English institution, feeling that in great mercantile questions, the greatest attention is paid to the eternal and immutable principles of reason, and that all men, whether natives or foreigners, here meet with an equal measure in the administration of justice, fly to this country to make their contracts of insurance, that in case of a dispute, they may have the benefit of its laws. Did it fall within the compass of this enquiry, I could relate many cases, of the truth of which I have not the smallest reason to doubt, which would serve to shew the idea entertained tertained by foreigners of our mercantile jurisprudence, and the high repute and estimation in which our judges are justly held by the European nations.

But though the court of Policies of Assurance has been long disused; though it is near a century since questions of this nature became chiefly the subject of common law jurisdiction; yet, I am sure I rather go beyond bounds, if I assert that in all our reporters from the reign of Queen Elizabeth, to the year 1756, when Lord Mansfield became Chief Justice of the King's Bench, there are 60 cases upon matters of insurance. Even those cases, which are reported, are such loose notes, mostly of trials at Nisi Prius, containing a short opinion of a single judge, and very often no opinion at all, but merely a general verdict, that little information can be collected upon the subject. From hence it must necessarily follow, that as there have been but few positive regulations upon insurances, the principles, on which they were founded, could never have been widely diffused, nor very generally known.

This was owing to some defects, which were discoverable in the proceedings in our courts, and in the delays and expences which suitors experienced; so that they rather chose to submit to their first loss, than be harrassed by the delays of the law, or be at the expence of trying a question, of which the decision might perhaps be of less moment to the individual, than to the public. These defects were so glaring, that it was one of the first acts of Lord Mansfield's administration to apply a remedy; and his labours have been happily attended with such success, that they have been of essential service to the nation in general, considered in a commercial light, and have excited the applause and approbation of Europe.

Before

Before the time of this venerable judge, the legal proceedings, even on contracts of insurance, were subject to great vexations and oppressions. If the under-writers refused payment, it was usual for the insured to bring a separate action against each of the under-writers on the policy, and to proceed to trial on all. The multiplicity of trials was oppressive both to the insurers and insured: and the insurers, if they had any real point to try, were put to an enormous expence, before they could obtain any decision of the question, which they wished to agitate. Some under-writers, who thought they had a sound defence, and who were desirous of avoiding unnecessary costs or delay to themselves or the insured, applied to the court of King's Bench to stay the proceedings in all the actions but one, undertaking to pay the amount of their subscriptions with costs, if the plaintiff should succeed in the cause, which was tried; and offering to admit on their part every thing, which might bring the true merits of the case before the court and jury. Reasonable as this offer was, the plaintiff, either from perverseness of disposition, or the illiberality and cunning of his advisers, refused his consent to the application. The court did not think themselves warranted to make such a rule without his consent: but Mr. Justice Denison intimated that if the plaintiff persisted, against his own interest, in his right to try all the causes, the court had the power of granting imparlances in all but one, till there was an opportunity of trying that one action. Lord Mansfield then stated the great advantages resulting to each party by consenting to the application, which was made; and added, that if the plaintiff consented to such a rule, the defendant should undertake not to file any bill in equity for delay, nor to bring a writ of error, and should produce all books and papers, that were material to the point in issue. This rule was afterwards consented to by the plaintiff, and was found so beneficial ficial to all parties, that it is now grown into general use ; and is called The Consolidation Rule. Thus, on the one hand, defendants may have questions of real importance tried at a small expence ; and plaintiffs are not delayed in their suits by those arts, which have too frequently been resorted to, in order to evade the payment of a just demand.

In former times, the whole of the case was left generally to the jury, without any minute statement from the bench of the principles of law, on which insurances were established ; and as the verdicts were general, it is almost impossible to determine from the reports we now see, upon what grounds the case was decided. Nay, even if a doubt arose in point of law, and a case was reserved upon that doubt, it was afterwards argued in private at the chambers of the judge, who tried the cause, and by his single decision, the parties were bound. Thus whatever his opinion might be, it never was promulgated to the world ; and could never be the rule of decision in any future case.

Lord Mansfield introduced a different mode of proceeding ; for in his statement of the case to the jury, he enlarged upon the rules and principles of law, as applicable to that case ; and left it to them to make the application of those principles to the facts in evidence before them. So that if a general verdict were given, the grounds, on which the jury proceeded, might be more easily ascertained. Besides, if any real difficulty occurred in point of law, his Lordship advised the counsel to consent to a special case. In a special case, the facts are either admitted by the parties, or if they are disputed, are proved ; and then the judge takes the opinion of the jury upon those facts, reserving the question of law to be agitated elsewhere. These cases are afterwards argued, not before the judge in private, but in open court before all the judges of the
the

the bench from which the record comes. Thus nice and important questions are now not hastily and unadvisedly decided; but the parties have their case seriously considered and debated by the whole court; the decision becomes notorious to the world; it is recorded for a precedent of law arising from the facts found, and serves as a rule to guide the opinions of future judges.

It had also been the custom, when cases were reserved, to leave it to the counsel on both sides to draw them up at their leisure. This introduced considerable delays; for every fact became again a subject of dispute; and frequently from the hurry of business and other avocations of the counsel, the case was neglected for a considerable time, before it was ready for the inspection of the court.

Now, whenever a case is reserved, the judge himself dictates to the clerk of the court, the facts which ought to be stated, and the question, upon which the opinion of the court is required: and in addition to this, Lord Mansfield, whose rules are now the subject of our enquiry, has ordered, that all the cases so reserved must be set down for argument within the first four days of the term following the trial; otherwise the judgment must be entered, according to the finding of the jury.

One additional improvement in the proceedings remains to be mentioned. Before Lord Mansfield's time, it was almost a matter of course not to decide any case, without hearing two arguments upon it: but in the very first cause, which is reported of his Lordship's decisions, he expressed himself to this effect: "Where we " have no doubt, we ought not to put the parties to the delay and expence of a farther argument, nor leave other persons, who may be interested in the determination of a point of a general nature, unnecessarily under the " anxiety

Raynard v. Chase. 4 Burrow 5.

“ anxiety of suspense.” When we add to these wise regulations the consideration that Lord Mansfield, during his long administration of justice, has given up a great part of his time, and has employed his talents in the elucidation of those points, which tend to fix the system of mercantile jurisprudence upon the surest grounds, we need not wonder that that part of it, which relates to marine insurances, has attained to its present state of perfection.

A complete system of jurisprudence cannot be suddenly erected : but there is rather matter to excite our wonder that so much has been done in this respect within the last 30 years, than ground to complain that little has been effected. It is the boast of this age, that in it the great foundations of marine jurisprudence have been laid, by clearly developing the principles, on which policies of insurance are founded, and by happily applying those principles to particular cases. It will be the business of the following work, which professes to lay down a system of the law, as it now stands, to point out, amongst other things, the improvements, which have been made by the legislature from time to time on the system of insurances, by many wise statutes, and salutary restrictions ; and to prove, that the learned judges of the courts both of law and equity, by their liberal and equitable constructions of those statutes, and by adopting the true principles of commerce in their decision of the many intricate cases, which have been brought before them, have added another pillar to that beautiful structure of rational jurisprudence, which has deservedly acquired the admiration of mankind.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

OF THE POLICY.

POLICY is the name given to the instrument, by which the contract of indemnity is effected between the insurer and insured; and it is not, like most contracts, signed by both parties, but only by the insurer, who on that account, it is supposed, is denominated an underwriter. Notwithstanding this, there are certain conditions, of which we shall hereafter have occasion to speak, to be performed as well by the person not subscribing, as by the underwriter, otherwise the policy will be void. Of policies there seem to be two kinds, valued and open policies; and the only difference between them is this, that in the former, goods or property insured are valued at prime cost, at the time of effecting the policy; in the latter, the value is not mentioned: that in the case of an open policy, the real value must be proved; in a valued policy it is agreed, and is just as if the parties had admitted it at the trial. 2 Burr. 1171.

Although policies of assurance are not special-ties, but esteemed merely as parol contracts, yet they have always been held as sacred agreements, and of the first credit: so much so, that when once they are underwritten, they can never be altered by any authority whatever; because it would open a door to an infinite variety of frauds, and introduce uncertainty into a species of contract, of which certainty and precision are the most essential requisites. Skinn. 54.

B

In

Henkle v.
The Royal
Exch. Assur.
Company.
1 Vez. 317.

In a case before Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, this doctrine was admitted in its full extent. The plaintiff had insured a ship at and from London to Ostend, from thence to Rotterdam, from thence to the Canaries, warranted an Ostend ship, which ship was afterwards taken. The bill was brought to have the policy rectified, for that the intention of the parties was mistaken therein, which was, that the warranty was too general, and that the voyage should have been stated to take place from Ostend only, and not from London. The evidence in this case was the deposition of Knox, the agent for the company, who deposed, that the plaintiff applied to him to insure the ship, and that he believed the plaintiff told him, she was, or had been an English ship, and might say something concerning the manner or intent of making her an Ostend ship; but that his answer was, that he would not enter into the manner, but that if the plaintiff would warrant her to be an Ostend ship, he would insure; and that on those terms, and no other, the agreement was made. There was the evidence of another person, who varied from Knox; in addition to which it was said, there was the evidence arising from circumstances, for that it was impossible for the plaintiff to intend to insure her as an Ostend ship, she being then in London, and could not be an Ostend ship without going to Ostend; for which proof was read that it was necessary she should be registered.

Lord Chancellor.—The first question is, whether it sufficiently appears to the court, that this policy, which is a contract in writing, has been framed contrary to the intent and real agreement. It is certain, that to come at that, there ought to be the strongest proof possible, for the agreement is twice reduced into writing in the same words, and must have the same construction: and yet the plaintiff seeks, contrary to both these, to vary them, and that in a case, where his witnesses vary from each other. The single deposition, upon which it depends, is very uncertain; and imports, that they relied on the plaintiff's warranty, leaving the transaction relating to the manner of making her an Ostend ship entirely to himself. His Lordship, therefore, as there was no evidence to vary the contract from the written words, ordered the bill to be dismissed.
very

At the same time it must be observed, that cases frequently may, and do exist, in which a policy, upon proper evidence, may be altered, without any violation of the principles above laid down, which has been often done by the courts both of law and equity; for let it be remembered once for all, that in questions of insurance, which is a contract founded upon broad equitable principles, courts of common law are bound by the same rules of decision as courts of equity. After signing, policies are likewise frequently altered by consent of the parties; and such policies are good, agreeably to the maxim, consensus tollit errorem.

An instance of the former kind of alteration of a policy occurs in the chancellorship of Lord Hardwicke, to whose decision we last referred. The insurance was upon the ship five hundred pounds, and the policy stated, that the adventure was to commence immediately from the departure of the ship from Fort Saint George to London. The bill was brought by the plaintiff, suggesting that the owner had employed a Mr. Halhead to insure the ship with the defendants, to commence from her arrival at Fort Saint George; that a label, agreeable to those instructions, with all the particulars of the agreement, had been entered in a book, and subscribed by Halhead, and two of the directors of the company; that by a mistake the policy was made out different from the label; that the ship being lost in the bay of Bengal, after her arrival at Fort Saint George, but before her departure for England, the company refuse to pay; upon these suggestions, the plaintiff prayed that the mistake might be rectified, and that the company might be ordered to pay five hundred pounds with interest.

Motteux v. the Gov. and Comp. of the London Assurance.
1 Atkyns 545.

His Lordship was of opinion, that the label was a memorandum of the agreement, in which the material parts of the policy were inserted; that although the policy was ambiguous, the label made it clear; and as it was only a mistake of the clerk, it ought to be rectified according to the label.

Bates v. Graham.
Salkeld 444.

In an action upon a policy of insurance, and non assumpsit pleaded, the facts were, that Stubbs, a broker, had instructions to procure an insurance on goods on board the Mary Galley, of Saint Christopher, Captain A. Hill, commander: that Stubbs, in writing the policy, by mistake, made the insurance on the Mary, Captain Hafferwood, commander, which was subscribed by the defendant: that the Mary Galley was lost, and then Stubbs applied to the insurers to consent to alter the policy, to which they agreed. It was urged, that on account of the alteration, the defendant should have an increase of premium, the ship Mary being stouter than the Mary Galley. But Holt, chief justice, ruled, that the action well lay upon the policy, and that the mistake might be set right.

A policy of insurance, when effected, becomes the property of the insured; and if it be wrongfully withheld, either by the broker employed by him to effect it, or by any other person to whose hands it may happen to come, he may maintain an action of trover for it, as well as for any other species of property.

Harding v. Carter, and another: sittings at Guildhall, Easter vacation, 1731.

Thus an action of trover was brought against the defendants for two policies of insurance. The defendants were brokers, who had written to the plaintiff, the master of a vessel, that they had got two policies effected; the one on account of the plaintiff's cloaths and wages, the other on account of the owners, and that the underwriter was Mr. Newnham. A loss having happened, the defendants produced a policy, underwritten by one J. S. only only insuring the ship, in which the plaintiff had no interest.

Lord Mansfield.—I shall consider the defendants as the actual insurers, and therefore the plaintiff must prove his interest and loss. The defence set up was, that the letter above stated in evidence was written by the defendant's clerk through mistake; and it was said, that trover could not be maintained for that which never existed: but his Lordship would not suffer the defendants now to contradict their own representation; and the plaintiff accordingly had a verdict to the amount of his interest, the premium being deducted.

It is material to observe, that policies of insurance, though called written instruments, are, for the convenience of trade, and the dispatch of business, generally printed, leaving blanks for the insertion of names and all other requisites. This being the case, it is frequently necessary to insert written clauses, in order to express the meaning of the parties to the contract, which, from some particular circumstances, the printed form may not sufficiently explain. These written clauses and conditions, thus inserted, are to be considered as the real contract; the court will look to them to find out the intention of the parties, and will consequently suffer such conditions to controul the printed words in policies of insurance.

Having premised thus much of policies in general, it may be proper to consider this subject in a threefold point of view: First, what persons may be insurers; Secondly, what things may be insured; Thirdly, what the requisites of a policy are.

1st. What persons may be insurers. It should seem, that by the common law and usage of merchants, any person whatever might be an insurer, however unable he might be, from poverty, to make up the losses insured against, provided the merchant was weak enough to trust to such a security. In process of time, however, there were so many who made a shew of great wealth, in or-

6 George 1.
c. 18.

der to deceive the honest and unsuspecting trader out of his premiums, and who were in insolvent circumstances, that it became an object of national concern, and parliamentary interference. The mischiefs then existing in this branch of trade, and the dangerous consequences thence arising to the interest of the country, are to be collected from the preamble of the statute, which passed in the reign of George the First, to remedy these evils, and which has in some, though not in any great degree, restrained the rule of the common law as to the unlimited right any man or body of men had to become insurers. “Whereas it has “ been found by experience, that many particular “ persons, after they have received large premiums “ or consideration monies for or towards the in“ suring ships, goods, and merchandizes at sea, “ have become bankrupts, or otherwise failed in “ answering or complying with their policies of “ assurance, whereby they were particularly en“ gaged to make good, or contribute towards the “ losses which merchants or traders have sustained, “ to the ruin and impoverishment of many mer“ chants and traders, and to the discouragement “ of adventurers at sea, and to the great diminu“ tion of the trade, wealth, strength, and publick “ revenues of the kingdom: And whereas it is “ conceived, that if two several and distinct cor“ porations, with a competent joint stock to each “ of them belonging, and under proper condi“ tions, restrictions, and regulations, were erected “ and established for assurance of ships, goods, or “ merchandizes at sea, or going to sea, (exclusive “ of all or any other corporations or bodies poli“ tick already created, or hereafter to be created,
 “ and likewise exclusive of such societies or part“ nerships as now are, or may hereafter be enter“ ed into for that purpose) several merchants or “ traders, who adventure their estates, or part of “ their estates, in such ships, goods, and mer-“ chandizes, at sea, or going to sea, (especially in “ remote “ remote or hazardous voyages) would think it “ much safer for them to depend upon the poli“ cies or assurances of either of those two corpo“ rations, so to be erected and established, than “ on the policies or assurances of private or par“ ticular persons.” The statute then goes on to authorize his majesty to grant charters to two distinct companies or corporations, for the insurance of ships, goods, and merchandizes, at sea, or going to sea, and for lending money on bottomree.

 The statute also enacts that the corporations may purchase lands, to the amount of one thousand pounds per annum, may have a common seal, and may be capable to sue and be sued at law; that each corporation shall provide a sufficient stock of ready money to satisfy and discharge all just demands, arising upon their policies of insurance; and in case of refusal, the parties insured may bring their action against the corporation, and shall recover double damages and costs. This clause, however, 8 Geo. 1. c. giving double damages, was afterwards thought 15. f. 25.
 by the legislature to be hard and oppressive; and 11 Geo. 1.
 therefore by a clause in a subsequent statute, these c. 30. f. 43.
 corporations were allowed to plead the general issue to any action brought against them, and the jury, in estimating the damages, as well with re- Vide post.
 spect to them as any other persons, were left to c. 20.
 their own discretion.

After several other clauses for the internal regulation of these corporations, the statute of the sixth of Geo. the First goes on to prohibit any other society or partnership whatsoever from making insurances, or lending money on bottomree. “ And Sec. 12.
 “ be it enacted, that from and after the granting “ or making the said charters or indentures for “ erecting the two corporations before mentioned, “ and passing the same under the great seal, for
 “ and during the continuance of the said corpo“ rations respectively, or either of them, all other “ corporations or bodies politic, before this time “ erected or established, or hereafter to be erected

OF THE POLICY.

“ or established, whether such corporations or “ bodies politick, or any of them, be sole or “ aggregate, and all such societies and partner“ ships as now are, or hereafter shall or may be, “ entered into by any person or persons, for as“ suring ships or merchandizes at sea, or for lend“ ing money on bottomree, shall, by force and “ virtue of this act, be restrained from granting, “ signing, or underwriting any policy of as“ surance, or making any contracts for assurance “ of or upon any ship or ships, goods, or mer-“ chandizes, at sea, or going to sea, and for lend“ ing any monies by way of bottomree as afore“ said: and if any corporation or body politick, “ or persons acting in such society or partnership “ (other than the two corporations intended to be “ established by this act, or one of them) shall “ presume to grant, sign, or underwrite, after “ the twenty-fourth day of June 1720. any such “ policy or policies, or make any such contract “ or contracts for assurance of or upon any ship “ or ships, goods or merchandizes, at sea or go“ ing to sea, or take or agree to take any pre“ mium or other reward for such policy or poli“ cies, every such policy and policies of assurance “ of or upon any such ship or ships, goods or “ merchandizes, shall be ipso facto void, and all
 “ and every such sum or sums so signed and un“ derwritten in such policy or policies shall be “ forfeited, and shall and may be recovered, one “ half to the use of his majesty, the other to that “ of the informer, by action: and if any corpo“ ration or bodies politick, or persons acting in “ such society or partnership, other than the two “ corporations intended to be erected by this act, “ or one of them, shall presume to lend, or agree “ to lend, or advance, by themselves or any others “ on their behalf, after the said twenty-fourth “ day of June 1720. any money by way of bot“ tomree contrary to this act, the bond or other “ security for the same shall be ipso facto void,
 “ and

“ and such agreement shall be adjudged to be an “ usurious contract, and the offenders therein shall “ suffer as in cases of usury: nevertheless it is in“ tended and hereby declared, that any private “ or particular person or persons shall be at liberty “ to write or underwrite any policies, or engage “ himself or herself in any assurances of, for, or “ upon any ship or ships, goods or merchandizes “ at sea, or going to sea, or may lend money by “ way of bottomree, as fully and beneficially, as “ if this act had never been made, so as the same “ be not on the account or risque of a corpora“ tion or body politick, or upon the account or “ risque of persons acting in a society or partner“ ship for that purpose as aforesaid.”

But there are clauses, in a subsequent part of Sec. 24. 26.
 the statute, securing to the South Sea and East India Companies, all the rights and privileges which they had enjoyed previous to the passing of that act, and the right of lending money on bottomree to the captains of their own ships.

This is the only positive regulation to be found in the law of this country, with respect to what persons shall, or shall not be insurers. By virtue of that regulation, the two offices under the names of the Royal Exchange Assurance Office, and the London Assurance Office were created and established, by charter of George the First, under the great seal of Great Britain, bearing date the twenty-second day of June, in the sixth year of his reign; and they still continue offices for the insurance of property. The legislature having thus anxiously provided for the security of those merchants, who might be desirous of carrying on an extensive trade, but who were deterred from doing so, thro’ fear of the insolvency of private underwriters, having stipulated with the company that they should have sufficient funds for the payment of all demands that might be made, and at the same time, allowing to private underwriters the full liberty of insuring to any amount with those who were

were satisfied to trust to their private securities only; it is not to be wondered at, that the business of insurance increased to a degree almost inconceivable. Indeed, any person, since this statute, may insure as at the common law, with this single exception, that any policy subscribed by a private firm or partnership, is absolutely void.

2dly. What things may be insured. I beg leave here to premise, that I do not mean at present to go into the great question of insurance, upon interest or no interest, having reserved that for the subject of a distinct chapter. My design in this place is only to shew, what kinds of property are the subject of insurance, upon supposition that every person, making insurance, is interested in the goods as the law requires.

1 Magens 4.

The most frequent objects of insurance are ships, goods, merchandizes, the freight or hire of ships: also houses, warehouses, and the goods laid up in them from danger by fire, and insurance on lives. Of the two last of which, more will be said hereafter. But although insurances upon such property, as we have just enumerated, most frequently occur in practice, yet in the law books we meet with cases which can hardly fall within any of those descriptions.

Thus bottomree and respondentia are a particular species of property which may be the subject of insurance. But then it must be particularly expressed in the policy to be respondentia interest; for under a general insurance on goods, the party insured cannot recover money lent on bottomree. Such has been, and is at this day, the established usage of merchants.

Glover v.
Black,
3 Burrow
1394. and
1 Blackstone
Rep. 405.

This was solemnly decided in an action upon a policy of insurance “upon goods and merchandizes, loaden, or to be loaden on board the “Denbam, William Tryon, commander, at and “from Bengal, to any ports or places whatsoever “in the East Indies, until her safe arrival in London.” The evidence appeared to be, that before

fore the signing of the policy, the plaintiff had lent Captain Tryon, upon the goods, then loaden, and to be loaden on board the said ship, on account of the said Captain Tryon, the sum of seven hundred and sixty-four pounds, at respondentia, for which a bond was executed in the usual form: that the ship, at the time of the loss, had goods and merchandizes on board, the property of Captain Tryon, of greater value than all the money he had borrowed: that the ship was afterwards burnt, and all the goods and merchandizes were totally consumed and lost. Upon these facts, the question was, whether the plaintiff could recover. This case was twice argued at the bar; the court took time to consider it, and were unanimous in their determination.

Lord Mansfield.—I inclined at the trial, and since, upon the argument, to support this insurance, being convinced that it is fair, and, that the doubt has arisen by a slip in omitting to specify (as it was intended to have been done) that this was a respondentia interest. The ground of supporting this insurance, if it could have been supported, was a clause of the 19 G. 2. c. 37. s. 5. which, as to the purpose of insurance, considers the borrower as having a right to insure only for the surplus value, over and above the money he has borrowed at respondentia. Yet we are all satisfied that this act of parliament never meant, or intended to make, any alteration in the manner of insurances, its view was to prevent gaming or wagering policies, where the insurer had no interest at all; and if the lender of money at respondentia were to be at liberty to insure for more than his whole interest, it would be a gaming policy; for it is obvious, that if he could insure all the goods, and insure his respondentia interest besides, this would amount to an insurance beyond his whole interest. In describing respondentia interest, the act gives the lender alone a right to make insurance on the money lent: so that the act left it on the practice. I have looked into the practice, and I find that bottomree and respondentia are a particular species of insurance in themselves, and have taken a particular denomination, I cannot find even a dictum in any writer, foreign or domestick, that the respondentia creditor may insure upon the goods, as goods. I find too, by talking with intelligent persons very conversant in the knowledge and practice of insurances, that they always do mention respondentia interest, whenever they mean to insure it. It might be greatly inconvenient to introduce a practice contrary to general usage, and, there may be some opening to fraud if it be not specified. The ground of our resolution is, "That it is now established, as the law" and practice of merchants, that respondentia and "bottomree must be specified and mentioned in" the policy of insurance."
on

It is to be observed, that in this judgment the court confined itself entirely to the case then before it, but did not mean to decide, that a person, having a special interest in goods, could not recover under an insurance upon goods generally. Lord Mansfield, indeed, expressly said, at the conclusion of his argument, that they did not mean to determine, that no special interest in goods might be given in evidence, in other cases than those of respondentia and bottomree, if the circumstances of the case should happen to admit of it. The lien which a factor, to whom a balance is due, has upon the goods of his principal, comes under the exception taken by the court; and an insurance upon such an interest seems to have been admitted, if not absolutely held, to be good, in the case of Godin v. London Assurance Company, which will be fully stated in that part of this work, which treats of double insurances.

But although the case of Glover and Black is certainly good law, yet it has since been ruled, that such an interest may be recovered under an insurance on goods, specie, and effects, provided the usage of the trade, which in matters of insurance is always of great weight, sanctions it.

Thus in an action upon a policy of insurance on goods, specie, and effects of the plaintiff, who was also the captain on board the ship, the plaintiff claimed under that insurance, money expended by him in the course of the voyage for the use of the ship, and for which he charged respondentia interest. Gregory v. Christie B.R. Trinity 24 Geo. 3.

Lord Mansfield, after delivering his opinion upon another point, which arose in the cause, and which will be mentioned in another part of this work, said, as to the second question, whether the words "goods, specie, and effects" extend to this interest, I should think not, if we were only to consider the words made use of. But here there is an express usage, which must govern our decision. A great many captains in the East India service swear, that this kind of interest is always insured in this way, and I observe the person here insured is the captain.

By the marine regulations of most, if not of all, the trading powers in Europe, insurances upon the wages of seamen are forbidden; a regulation founded in wisdom and sound policy. In Great Britain, a great and commercial nation, such an ordinance is particularly necessary, and it is agreeable to the policy of the general law of that country, by which it is declared, "That no master or owner of any merchant ship shall pay to any seaman, beyond the seas, any money or effects on account of wages, exceeding one moiety of the wages due, at the time of such payment, till such ship shall return to Great Britain or Ireland." By this salutary law, the sailors are interested in the return of the ship; they will, on that account, be prevented from deserting it when abroad, from leaving it unmaned, and in times of danger, arising either from perils of the sea, or the attacks of an enemy, will be more anxious for its preservation. But these good 1 Magens 18.
8 Geo. 1. c. 24. s. 7.

1 Magens 19.

good effects would be entirely defeated, if insurance on their wages were to be permitted; for to whatever cause the loss might be attributed, they would still be secure. However, it should seem, that this regulation does not mean to prevent mariners from insuring those wages, which they are intitled to receive abroad, or goods which they have purchased with those wages in order to bring home; but, in such a case, they are to be considered in the same light with other men.

Carter v.
Boehm.
3 Burr. 1905.
and 1 Blackf.
593.

Lord Mansfield.

In an action upon a policy of insurance upon Fort Marlborough, otherwise Bencoolen, in the East Indies, for twelve calendar months, from the first of October, 1759. to the first of October, 1760. against any European enemy, for the benefit of the governor, it was doubted by the learned chief justice who tried that cause, whether a policy against the loss of Fort Marlborough for the benefit of the governor was good, upon the principle which does not allow a sailor to insure his wages. But afterwards, when he came to deliver the opinion of the court upon all the points in that cause, after mentioning this doubt, which had occurred to his mind, he went on thus: “ But, considering that this place, though “ called a fort, was really but a factory or settle“ ment for trade; and that he, though called a “ governor, was really but a merchant.—Consi“ dering too, that the law allows a captain of a “ ship to insure goods which he has on board, or “ his share in the ship, if he be a part owner;
“ and the captain of a privateer, if he be a part “ owner, to insure his share; considering too,
“ that the objection could not, upon any ground “ of justice, be made by the insurer, who knew “ him to be the governor, at the time he took “ the premium; and as with regard to principles “ of publick convenience, the case so seldom “ happens, (I never knew one before) any dan“ ger from the example is little to be apprehend“ ed,

“ ed, I did not think myself warranted, upon that “ point, to nonsuit the plaintiff; especially too,
 “ as the objection did not come from the bar.
 “ Though this point was mentioned, it was not “ insisted upon at the last trial; nor has it been “ seriously argued, upon this motion, as sufficient “ alone to vacate the policy: and if it had, we “ are all of opinion, that we are not warranted
 “ to say, that it is void upon that account.

It has long been a question, how far insurances upon the ships or goods of enemies are politick or legal. Upon the continent of Europe it should seem, that they are in general absolutely prohibited, under penalty of the insurance being void, and the delinquent's forfeiting the sum, to which he had subscribed. These laws have been passed from an idea, that such insurances are prejudicial to the interests of the country tolerating such contracts, by enabling an enemy to continue his trade, on account of the degree of protection, thus afforded him against the maritime strength of the nation making the insurance. A similar spirit at one time prevailed in the British parliament, and a bill was introduced in the year one thousand seven hundred and forty eight, “ to “ prevent assurances on ships belonging to “ France, and on merchandize and effects laden “ thereon, during the then existing war with “ France.” Although this act was opposed on principles of policy, by the two greatest lawyers and most eminent speakers of that age, the Honourable William Murray and Sir Dudley Ryder; yet the bill passed without a division, inflicting a penalty of five hundred pounds upon the persons making such insurances, and also declaring the policy to be void.

Ord. of Stockholm
 Bynker-shoek's Quest. Juris
 publ. lib. 1.
 c. 21. p. 153.

Deb. in H.
 Com. vol. 1.
 p. 117.

21 Geo. 2.
 c. 4.

The existence of that act, however, was limited by the duration of the then war; and although several attempts have since been made to introduce a similar law, yet they have always proved fruitless, the best proof, perhaps, that can be given

1 Vez. 320.

Gift, v. Mason.Sit. at Guildhall, Mich.
vac. 1785.

given of the impolicy of the measure. Indeed, the policy of such contracts seems to have been admitted by Lord Hardwicke in a case before him in Chancery; and Lord Mansfield has frequently declared in parliament, and on the bench, that he thinks such insurances should be encouraged, because there is a certain profit derived from the premiums; and frequently important intelligence has been, by such means, obtained of the enemy's designs. But whether such a contract be founded in principles of sound policy or not, it is certainly not contrary to the law of England, as it is established at this day.

25 Geo. 2.
c. 26.

However, since that time, one species of insurance on foreign ships or goods has been prohibited by statute, with a view to secure to the East India company the sole trade to and from the East Indies, and other places, beyond the Cape of Good Hope. The statute, after reciting, that to admit of insurances on the ships or vessels of foreigners trading to the East Indies, may be a means of encouraging his majesty's subjects to share with foreigners, in establishing new societies or companies for carrying on the said trade in the dominions of foreign states or princes, enacts,
 " That no insurances shall be made, or money
 " lent on bottomree, on foreign ships or goods,
 " bound to or from the East Indies, under the " forfeiture of treble the sum insured or lent."
 It contains an exception, however, in favour of insurances made, or to be made, on ships of the subjects of such sovereigns, as carried on a trade with that part of the world, previous to the month of October, 1748. This act was to be in force for seven years. Whether upon a trial it was found to be a politick or wise regulation, I have not been able to discover: but the presumption is to the contrary; as it does not appear from the statute book, that this act of parliament was continued, or that it was revived by any subsequent statute.

3dly.

3dly. Of the requisites of a policy. The form of a policy, now used in London, is nearly the same which was adopted two hundred years ago, as may be collected from Malyne; but its antiquity cannot preserve it from just censure, it being very irregular and confused, and frequently ambiguous, from making use of the same words in different senses.

Malyne 108;
3 Burr. 1555.

The essentials in the contract of insurance are: First, the name of the person for whom the insurance is made: Secondly, the names of the ship and master: Thirdly, whether they are ships, goods, or merchandizes, upon which the insurance is made: Fourthly, the name of the place where the goods are laden, and whither they are bound: Fifthly, the time when the risk begins, and when it ends: Sixthly, all the various perils and risks which the insurer takes upon himself: Seventhly, the consideration, or premium, paid for the risk or hazard run. Eighthly, the month, day, and year, on which the policy is executed: Ninthly, the stamps required by act of parliament. Of each of these in their order.

First, Of the name of the person insured. It was formerly very much the practice to effect policies of insurance, in blank as it was called, that is, without specifying the names of the persons, for whose use and benefit, or on whose account such insurances were made; a practice, which had been found in many respects to be mischievous, and productive of great inconveniencies. These evils were remedied at a very early period in Genoa and France by the marine ordinances of those countries, which required the name of the person insured to be inserted in the policy, and whether he was to be considered in the capacity of principal or factor. In England a similar regulation took place in the year 1774, with respect to insurances upon lives; but it was not till the year 1785, that a provision

2 Magens
65. 169.

14 Geo 3.
c. 48.

was made for this evil in policies upon ships and merchandizes.

25 Geo. 3.
c. 44.

The statute declares, “ That from and after “ the fifth day of July, 1785, it shall not be “ lawful for any person or persons, who reside in “ Great Britain, to make, or cause to be made, “ any policy or policies of insurance upon his,
“ her, or their interest in any ship or ships, or “ any goods, merchandizes, effects, or other “ property, without inserting in such policy or “ policies, his, her, or their own name or names,
“ as the person interested therein, or the name or “ names of the person or persons, who shall effect
“ the same, as the agent or agents of the person “ or persons so really interested therein, or for “ whose use or benefit, or on whose account, such “ policy or policies is or are underwrote : and that “ it shall not be lawful for any person or persons,
“ who shall not live or reside in Great Britain, “ to make, or cause to be made, any policy or “ policies of assurance upon his, her, or their “ interest in any ship or ships, or on any goods, “ merchandizes, effects, or other property, with“ out inserting in such policy or policies the “ name or names of the agent or agents of the “ person or persons so really interested therein,
“ and for whose use or benefit, or on whose ac“ count, the same is or are so made and under“ wrote : and that every policy or policies of “ assurance, made or underwrote contrary to the “ true intent and meaning hereof, shall be null
“ and void to all intents and purposes.”

Upon the statute just recited, a question of some consequence has already arose, namely; Whether when the agent effects a policy for the principal residing abroad, it be necessary to insert his name in the policy as agent. Upon a debate, it was held, that if it be not stated, that he effected the policy, as the agent of the principal, the policy will be void within the statute.
Another question also occurred in the same cause,

Whether it was not the intention of the legislature, when the principal resided abroad, that the agent should live in England. It did not become necessary for the court to decide the latter question; but the leaning of the judges clearly was in the affirmative. The case was thus:

An action was brought upon a policy of insurance on a ship and its cargo from Sunbury, in Georgia, to Amsterdam; and it was agreed, that a verdict should be taken for the plaintiffs, and that the defendant's counsel should have the liberty of moving the court to set it aside, and enter a verdict for the defendant, (without costs) if, upon the construction of the 25th of George the Third, chap. 44. the court should be of opinion, that the plaintiffs were not intitled to recover. At the trial before Mr. Justice Buller it appeared, that the plaintiffs lived in Georgia, and had formerly been owners of the vessel, but, before May 1785, had transferred their property in her to one Peirce, who resided in the same country. The names of the plaintiffs were at the head of the policy, which was underwritten by the defendant in September, 1785; and the declaration stated, that they made it for the benefit of Peirce, in whom the interest was averred to be. Upon these facts the two questions arose: First, Whether when an agent effects a policy for his principal residing abroad, the statute requires that such agent's name should be inserted, eo nomine, as agent? Secondly, Whether, under the same act, it be necessary that the agent should live in England when the principal was abroad?

Lord Mansfield.—Whatever doubts I may have in my own mind with respect to the policy and expedience of this law, yet, as long as it continues in force, I am bound to see it executed according to its meaning; and however I may think that this is not a commendable defence in the underwriter, yet that is a matter for his consideration, and not for mine. I have not a particle of doubt as to the

Pray and Others
vers. Edie,
Term Rep.
p. 313. for Trinity,
26 Geo. 3.

true construction of this act. Let us consider what are the mischiefs intended to be remedied, and the provisions of the act for remedying them. The preamble recites, that great inconveniencies had arisen, from omitting to insert in policies of insurance, the names of the persons for whose benefit, or on whose account, such policies were effected. That is the mischief: and it is remedied by enacting, that if the principal resides in England, his own name shall be inserted, or what amounts to the same thing, the name of his agent, eo nomine, as agent for him. If the agent were not to be named in the policy, in the capacity of agent for the insured, the publick would still be left ignorant who the insured was, and the principal intention of the act would be defeated. Then as to the case of the insured living abroad, who cannot insure in his own name, there can be no doubt but that the name of his agent must be inserted, eo nomine as agent. I am also strongly inclined to think, that the other objection, with regard to the residence of the agent, is good; but it is not necessary to give a direct opinion on that point.

Mr. Justice Buller.—It seems to me to have been the intention of the legislature, that the name of the agent, who effects the policy for his principal residing abroad, should be inserted in the policy, quasi agent for such person. For the word “agent,” in the second clause, is to be understood in the same sense as it is taken in the first; and I have as little doubt that the meaning of the act is, that such agent should reside in Great Britain.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Ashurst were of the same opinion: and the rule was made absolute.

French v.
Backhouse.

3 Barr. 2727.

Previous to the passing of this act it was held, that the husband of a ship had no right to insure for any part-owner, without his particular direction; nor for all the owners in general, without their

OF THE POLICY.

21

their general direction, or something equivalent to it.

Secondly, of the names of the ship and master. I do not find any express regulation of this matter in England; but it is certainly necessary, by the law and usage of merchants, to insert the names of the ship and master, in order to fix with precision the bottom upon which the adventure is to be made, and the captain, by whose direction the ship is to be navigated, because, according to the degree of strength and sufficiency of the one, and the skill, ability, and knowledge of the other, the risk is increased or diminished; and so also will the amount of the premium be regulated. The usage of the merchants of England in this respect is agreeable to the express laws and regulations of other maritime states upon this point. Sometimes, however, there are insurances generally "upon any ship or ships" expected from a particular place.

Ord. of Lew.
14. tit. Insurance, art. 3.
Ord. of Amsterdam, l. 2.

Thirdly, Whether they are ships, goods, or merchandizes, upon which the insurance is made, is a fact which must be stated. It is absolutely necessary that there should be a specification upon which of these the underwriter insures; because otherwise it would be impossible to know, whether, in any instance, he is liable or not to the loss sustained. But it is another question, whether, in policies upon goods, it be necessary to declare the particulars. The practice, I believe, is very unsettled. It is the opinion, however, of a very respectable merchant, that the particulars of goods should be specified, if possible, by their marks, numbers, and packages, rather than that they should be included under the general denomination of merchandize; or that, if it be agreed to insert them, when known to the insured, care should be taken not to omit it, as such specification prevents much trouble in proving to the insurer the particular goods insured, which are, more or less, subject to damage.

1 Magens 8.

Vide the Ap-
pend. No. 1.

Per Buller Justice in Cocking,
v. Frazer.
B. R. East.
25 Geo. 3.
vide Post.

Cantillon v.
Lond. Assur.
Comp. mentioned
3 Burr. 1553.

damage. But this mode of particularizing property is only adviseable to be done, or, indeed, can only be done, when the risk commences at home; because, when goods are coming from abroad, it is better to insure under general expressions, on account of the various casualties, which may happen to obstruct the purchase of the commodities intended to be sent. It may be proper here to mention, that there are certain kinds of merchandize, which are of a perishable nature, and liable to early corruption; on account of which, the underwriters of London have inserted a memorandum at the foot of their policy, by which they declare, that in insurances upon corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed, they will not be answerable for any partial loss, but only for general averages, except the ship be stranded. That in insurances on sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides, and skins, they consider themselves free from partial losses, not amounting to five per cent. and that on all other goods, as well as on the ship and freight, if the partial loss be under three pounds per cent. unless it arise from a general average, or the stranding of the ship, they also consider themselves discharged.

This clause was introduced in the year 1749, in order to prevent the underwriters from being harrassed by trifling demands, which must necessarily have arisen upon every insurance of this kind, on account of the perishable nature of the cargo. The form of this memorandum was universally used, as well by the two insurance companies, as by private underwriters, till the year 1754. when Lord Chief Justice Ryder ruled, and a special jury, agreeably to his direction, decided, that a ship, having run a-ground, was a stranded ship within the meaning of the memorandum; and that although she got off again; the underwriter was liable to an average or partial loss upon damaged corn. This decision induced the two companies to alter the memorandum, dum, by striking out the words, "or the ship be stranded;" so that now they consider themselves liable to no losses, which can happen to such commodities, except general averages and total losses: But the old form is still retained by the private insurers.

What shall be considered as losses within the meaning of this memorandum, will be the subject of future investigation; my design at present being only to enumerate the essentials of a policy, and the reason and origin of them, as far as I have been able to trace them.

There are, however, some kinds of property, which do not fall under the general denomination of goods in a policy; and for the loss of which the underwriters are not answerable, unless they are specifically named.

An action was brought upon a policy of insurance of the captain's goods for six months certain. The loss proved was chiefly for goods lashed on deck, and the captain's cloaths, and the ships provisions. It was proved by an underwriter and a broker, that none of those things are within a general policy on goods; for the risk was greater as to goods lashed on deck, than other goods: and a policy on goods means only such goods as are merchantable, and a part of the cargo. They also swore, that when goods like the present are meant to be insured, they are always insured by name; and the premium is greater.

Ross v.
Thwaite.
Sit. after
Hil. 16 Geo.
3. at Guildh.

Lord Mansfield said, he thought it consistent with reason; and understood the usage to be so: therefore he advised the plaintiff to withdraw a juror, the premium having been paid into court, to which he consented.

Fourthly, The name of the place at which the goods are laden, and to which they are bound.

This has been always held to be necessary in policies, at least for upwards of two hundred years; and must be so, on account of the evident uncertainty which would follow from a contrary practice, as the insurer would never know what the risk was, which he had undertaken to insure.

Molloy, b. 2.
c. 7. s. 14.

Molloy has laid down this doctrine, that if a ship be insured from London to , a blank being left by the lader of the goods to prevent her surprize by an enemy, and if in her voyage she happen to be cast away, though there be private instructions for her port, yet the insured must sit down with his loss, by reason of the uncertainty. In support of his opinion, he cites the case of Monfieur Gourdan, governor of Calais, which was decided by commissioners of assurance at Rouen against the assured, because, although the bills of lading truly declared the quantity and quality of the goods, the port of the ship's discharge was left a blank, on account of the war, which was then existing. Such also is now the law and usage of merchants.

It is also customary to state in the policy at what port or places the ship may touch and stay during the voyage, so that it shall not be considered as a deviation to go to any of those places.

Ord. of Antwerp, Amsterdam,
France, Spain and Copenhagen.

Fifthly, The time when the risk commences, and when it ends. In most of the commercial countries abroad, it is particularly expressed, either in their ordinances or policies, and sometimes in both, that the risk of the insurers shall commence, the moment the goods quit the shore, and shall continue till they are landed at the place of their destination; and that the insurer not only runs the risk in the ship named in the policy, but also in all the boats or lighters, that shall be employed in carrying the goods aboard, and also in fetching them ashore. But the custom of this country is very different, for the English policies expressly declare, that "the adventure shall begin upon the said goods and
"mer-

Vide Appendix, No. 1.

" merchandizes from the loading thereof on board
 " the said ship, and so shall continue until the " said ship, goods, and merchandizes shall be " arrived at L. and upon the said ship until she " hath moored at anchor 24 hours in good safety;
 " and upon the goods till the same be there safely
 " discharged and landed." From these words, it

As to the continuance of the risk
 upon the ship, see c. 2. near the beginning,

is obvious, that insurers are not answerable for any accidents, which may happen to the goods in lighters or boats going aboard, previous to the voyage; yet as the policy says, the risk shall continue till the goods are safely landed, it seems no less obvious, that where ships cannot come close to the quay in order to unload, the insurer continues responsible for the risk to be run in carrying the goods in boats to the shore. If there be a loss, however, in these cases, the accident must have happened, while the goods were in the boats or lighters belonging to the ship; for then it is considered as a continuance of the same ship and voyage. But in a case where the owner of the goods brought down his own lighter, received the goods out of the ship, and before they reached land, an accident happened, whereby the goods were damaged, a special jury of merchants, under the express direction of Lord Chief Justice Lee, found that the insurer was discharged, although the insurance was upon goods to London, and till the same should be safely landed there.

Sparrow v.
 Carruthers,
 2 Sui. 1236.

By the ordinances last referred to, the number of days, in which people are obliged to unload their goods, is stipulated; but in England no express time is fixed, the owners being left to their own discretion, provided there is no unreasonable delay, which must always depend upon circumstances.

The risk on the body of a ship, according to the form of the policy received in practice, is to commence in general, "from her beginning to load at and so shall continue and endure until the said ship shall arrive at

Magens 47.

" and

“ and hath there been moored at anchor twenty-“ four hours in good safety.” But this mode of stating the commencement of the risk must commonly be applied only to insurances on ships outward bound ; for when insurance is made on the homeward risk, the beginning of the adventure is sometimes stated to be “ immediately from and “ after her arrival at the port abroad ;” at other times, “ from the departure ;” and in short, it is so variable, that nothing certain can be said upon the point, depending, as it always has, and always must, upon the inclinations of the insured.

Sixthly. Of the various perils and risks, against which the underwriter insures. These must always be inserted in all policies, and indeed the words now used are so comprehensive, that in Book 2. c. 7. the opinion of Molloy, all those curious questions,
 f. 7. which occasioned much debate and controversy among the lawyers of former days, are now finally settled. Be this as it may, it is certain, that there is hardly any event which the imagination can form, as likely, in the common course of things, to happen to any ship, that is not amply provided for by the policies now used by underwriters. They undertake to bear “ all pe“ rils of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, “ pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of “ mart, and counter mart, surprisals, takings “ at sea, arrests, restraints and detainments of “ all kings, princes, and people, of what na“ tion, condition or quality soever ; barratry of “ the master and mariners, and all other perils, “ losses and misfortunes, that have or shall come “ to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said “ goods and merchandizes, and ship, or any part
 1. Magens 50. “ thereof.” But although the words, descriptive of the hazards run by the insurers, be so very large and comprehensive, it should seem that a great difference is to be made between the damage sustained by goods on board a ship, and that which occurs by external accidents ; that the insurer

insurer is liable in the latter case cannot admit of a doubt, but as the former may proceed from the bad stowage of the goods, or from their being exposed to wet; and as they are neglects attributable to the master; the ship and not the insurer ought to be answerable. Upon this point, however, I find no case in the reports, and therefore I start it rather as a doubt in my own mind, than as presuming to hint at an opinion. In Malynes, Malynes c. 29. Lex Merc. Red. 4th edit. p. 295. it is said, that if there be thieves on ship board among themselves, the master of the ship is to answer for that, and to make it good, so that the assurers are not to be charged with any such loss, for, he supposes, the word "thieves" to mean assailing thieves only, for so he terms them. It is certain, that a modern statute gives some countenance to this idea, by the preamble to which it appears, that previous to the period of passing that act, the owners of the ship were liable to the proprietors of the goods for any embezzlement, secreting, or making away with, of the goods, by the master or the mariners, or with their privity, to whatever amount the value might be: by that statute, however, the measure of the responsibility is to be the value of the ship and freight. To be sure, it is not a necessary consequence, that because the owner is liable in such a case, therefore the insurer, if an insurance has been made, must be discharged. Roccus, however, is of opinion, that when a theft is committed on board the ship, and some goods have been stolen, then the insurers are not bound, because the owner of the goods, as much as in him lies, is obliged to take care of them; and if they are stolen, while in the vessel, this cannot be called an accident, but has happened through the negligence of those, who did not take proper care of them. He adds, that the master or owners being liable is an additional reason for this regulation, because the master of the ship is held answerable for thefts committed therein, as by receiving

7 Geo. 2:
c. 15.

*Roccus de assicurationibus, Not.
42.*

ceiving the goods on board, he enters into a tacit agreement to deliver them safe and whole. It was thought proper thus to state the opinion of this learned writer upon the subject, on account of the total silence of the law of England in this respect.

Harford v.
Maynard,
bef Lord Mansfield at Guildhall,
Hil. Vac,
1785.
Molloy, b. 2.
c. 7. s. 5.

But that the underwriter is liable for a robbery of the goods insured, when committed by thieves from without, cannot be doubted; as thieves are a peril expressly insured by the policy.

Roccus Not.
51.
5 Burr. 2803.

In addition to the various risks above enumerated, which the underwriters take upon themselves, it is frequently the practice, when a ship has been missing, to insure her lost or not lost, which is certainly very hazardous; because if the ship should be lost, at the time of the insurance, still the underwriter, provided there be no fraud, is liable. The premium is, however, great in proportion, depending upon the circumstances stated to shew the probability or improbability of the ship's safety. These words "lost or not lost," are peculiar to English policies, not being inserted in the policies of foreign nations.

Seventhly. The consideration or premium for the risk or hazard run: this is the most material part of the policy, because it is the consideration of the premium received, that makes the underwriter liable to the losses that may happen. In English policies it is always expressed to have been received at the time of underwriting; "we the assurers confessing ourselves paid the consideration due unto us for this assurance by the assured." This being subscribed by the underwriter, it is a question, whether, if the premium were not actually paid at the time, he could afterwards maintain an action for it against the assured, who might then produce his subscription as evidence against himself. Only one case has been found upon the subject, and that is by no means satisfactory. It was an action of assumpsit, and the plaintiff declared, that the defendant

Fowk v.
Pinfache,
2 Lev. 153.

defendant was indebted to him in twenty pounds, for a premium upon a policy of assurance on such a ship. The defendant demurred specialty, because the plaintiff did not shew the consideration, certainly, what the premium was, or how it became due: but the objection was not allowed, for this is as good as an indebitatus pro quodam salario, which has been adjudged good. Here, however, is no decision upon the merits, nor does it appear, whether the defendant was the broker or the insured himself. It is true, in practice, policies in general are effected by the intervention of a broker; and by the usage of trade, open accounts are kept between the insurers and brokers, in which case, the underwriter may have an action against the broker for premiums received to his use. In one case, indeed, the question did arise, though nothing was done upon it.

It was an action by the insurer against the owners, who in this case acted, without the intervention of a broker, for money had and received to his use. The case was decided upon other grounds, for which it will be mentioned more at length hereafter; but just before the verdict was given, it was objected, that this action would not lie for premiums against the insured themselves. Lord Mansfield, however, thought the objection came too late, and would not, at that stage of the cause, when the jury were ready to give their verdict, enter into it; although he seemed to think there was nothing in the objection.

In an action brought by the assignees of a broker against the assured, for premiums paid by the bankrupt to the underwriters, the question came collaterally before the court: but I do not find that any point was reserved; and as the verdict was general, the law must be collected by inference.

Gist v.
Mason,
Mich. Vac.
1785, at Guildhall.

Airey and others Assignees of Milton v. Bland, Trin. Sitt. at Guildhall,
14 Geo. 3.

It was an action brought by the plaintiffs, as assignees of Milton, who was a broker at Newcastle, and who had procured an insurance to be effected by different persons for the defendant. The declaration stated, that in consideration that the bankrupt would procure an insurance to be made on the ship Jason, and would procure six hundred pounds to be insured thereon by good and sufficient persons, the defendant promised that he would pay the bankrupt the premiums, and a reasonable sum for his trouble. The first question was, whether credit was given by the underwriters to the assured or to the broker, where the premium was not paid down at the time the assurance was made. Milton, the bankrupt, swore, that in May 1764, he was told by the underwriters that they should look upon him as their debtor, and that they would have nothing to do with the insured, which was considered at Newcastle, as the London practice: that from that time he had always acted on this plan, and had paid since that time one thousand pounds to underwriters, which he had never received. His commission was five per cent. London insurance brokers were then called, who said, they understood the underwriters looked to them only; and that the underwriters did not once in ten times know who the insured were: and that in case of failure, the underwriter came upon the effects of the broker; the broker upon those of the insured.

Lord Mansfield said,—The plaintiff's case is stronger than referring to the general usage in London; for they act by a specific rule, which they suppose to be the rule in London: and if the usage in London were doubtful, still the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover. There was a verdict for the plaintiffs.

1 Mag. 84.

Eighthly. The day, month, and year, on which the policy is executed. This insertion seems very necessary, because by comparing the date of
of

of the policy with the date of facts, which happen afterwards, or are material to be proved, it will frequently appear, whether there is any reason to suspect fraud or improper conduct, on the part of the insured.

The ninth and last requisite of a policy of insurance is, that it be duly stamped.

It is enacted, that when any ship, goods, or merchandizes shall be insured, a policy duly stamped shall be issued within three days at farthest, on the forfeiture of one hundred pounds, to be paid by the insurers for every such offence, and all promissory notes for insurances shall be void. 11 Geo. 1.
c. 30. s. 44.

By a subsequent statute, it was declared, that if the properties of more than one person in any ship, cargo, or both, or of more than a particular number of persons in general partnership, or of more than one body politick or corporate, to a greater amount than one hundred pounds be insured in one policy, such policy shall be void, and the premium shall remain with the insurer: and if any adventure, distinct from that mentioned in the original policy, and upon which any further premium shall be given, shall be by any writing not duly stamped, added to the said original policy, such additional assurance shall be void, and the underwriters shall retain the premium. 5 Geo. 3.
c. 46. s. 3, 4. Provided that the property of any number of persons may be insured in one policy, stamped with five stamps at five shillings each.

This statute, however, having proved inconvenient to merchants residing out of the kingdom. By another statute, it was ordained, that policies for any number of persons, and to any amount not exceeding one thousand pounds, on ship, or cargo, or both, might be insured upon a stamp of five shillings, and to any higher amount upon a stamp of ten shillings. This statute also contains a clause, which makes additional 7 Geo. 3.
c. 44. s. 1, 2,

tional assurances to the original policy, not being duly stamped, void.

8 Geo. 3.
c. 25. f. 4.
& 5.

A doubt having arisen, whether the insurance upon the property of a single person required more than a five shillings stamp, whatever the amount might be, it was enacted, that wherever property, amounting to upwards of one thousand pounds, is insured, there must be two stamps of five shillings each. And if any person be sued for insuring upwards of one thousand pounds on a five shilling stamp, the onus probandi shall lie upon him.

17 Geo. 3.
c. 50. f. 17.

There is still another act of parliament, which has declared, that upon every skin or piece of vellum or parchment, or sheet of paper, on which any policy of insurance shall be written, whereby the property of one or more persons in houses or goods, or both shall be insured to a greater amount in the whole than one thousand pounds, over and above the several duties already imposed, there shall be an additional duty of five shillings: this statute seems only to relate to insurances against fire.

5 W. & M.
c. 21. f. 3.
9 & 10 W. 3.
c. 25. f. 37.
12 Anne lt.
2. c. 9. f. 21.
10 Anne c.
26. f. 67.

From a review of the several statutes upon this subject, the law seems to require that for every policy of insurance, not amounting to one thousand pounds, a six shilling stamp shall be necessary; and above that sum, a stamp of eleven shillings.

30 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 1. 5 Geo. 3. c. 35. f. 4. 16 Geo. 3. c. 34. f. 5.

Ord. of France, Article 69. Tit.
Assurance.

By the ordinances of France, and other maritime countries, all policies of insurance must be registered; but no such regulation prevails in England, either by the law, or in practice.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

Of the Construction of the Policy.

A POLICY of insurance, being a contract of indemnity, and being only considered as a parol contract, must always be construed, as nearly as possible, according to the intention of the contracting parties; and not according to the strict and literal meaning of the words. The mercantile law, in this respect, is the same in every part of the world; for from the same premises, the sound conclusions of reason and justice must ever be the same. Thus, as the benefit of the insured, and the advancement of trade, are the great objects of insurance, policies are to be construed largely, in order to attain those ends: for it would be absurd to suppose, that when the end is insured, the ordinary and usual means of attaining it can possibly be excluded; whatever, therefore, is done by the master of the ship, in the usual course, necessarily, et ex justâ causâ, although a loss happen thereon, the underwriter shall be answerable. 1 Burr. 347.
Roccus Not.
18.

But in the construction of policies, no rule has been more frequently followed than the usage of trade, with respect to the particular voyages or risks, to which the policy relates; and in the cases about to be quoted in support of these principles, it will be found, that the learned judges have always called in the usage of trade, as the ground, upon which the construction turns.

In stating the different cases upon this subject, as the point is nearly the same in all, the order of time, in which they were determined, is that which will be pursued, in order to prevent confusion.

The first to be mentioned is an anonymous Anonymous, Skins. 243. case in the time of James the Second; but it is from

from a reporter of very good authority. A policy of insurance shall be construed to run until the ship shall have ended, and be discharged of her voyage; for arrival at the port, to which she was bound, is not a discharge till she is unloaded: and it was so adjudged by the whole court, upon a demurrer.

But although this construction may be perfectly right, where the policy is general from A. to B. yet if it contain the words usually inserted "and till the ship shall have moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety" the underwriter is not liable for any loss, arising from seizure after she has been twenty-four hours in port; though such seizure was in consequence of an act of barratry of the master during the voyage, for, if it were extended beyond the time limited in the policy, it would be impossible to lay down any fixed rule, and all would be uncertainty and confusion.

Lockyer and Others v.
Osley,
Term Reports, p. 252.
for Easter 26
Geo. 3.

This was decided in an action on a policy of insurance on the ship Hope from Hamburg, to London, subscribed by the defendant for two hundred pounds at one guinea per cent. At the trial before Mr. Justice Buller, at Guildhall, a verdict was found for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the court, upon the following case: that the plaintiffs were interested in the ship to the amount of the sum insured. That in the course of the voyage, the master committed barratry by smuggling on his own account, by hovering and running brandy on shore in casks under sixty gallons. That on the first of September 1785, the ship arrived in safety at her moorings in the river Thames, and remained there in safety till the twenty-seventh of the said month of September, when she was seized by the revenue officers for the smuggling before stated. That about three weeks after the seizure, the plaintiffs informed the underwriters thereof; and that they would hold them liable on the policy. That on the twentieth of October, the plain-plaintiffs presented a petition to the commissioners of his majesty's customs, in which they imputed all the blame (which was certainly the truth) to the captain, and praying that their vessel might be restored, on paying something to the seizing officer. The answer was, "that the prosecution must proceed, as the ship had been guilty of a gross violation of the laws, but that the owners should be at liberty to compound, according to the rules of the Exchequer." That the ship was appraised at the sum of three hundred and forty-five pounds, and by the course of the court of Exchequer, the ship would have been restored to the plaintiffs, upon the payment of two hundred and thirty pounds, besides costs and charges, which would altogether have amounted to three hundred and twenty-nine pounds, nine shillings and seven pence. That in November, a notice was indorsed on the policy, binding the underwriters for all costs and charges expended about the recovery of the ship. That this was shewn to the underwriters, who refused to subscribe it.

This case was fully argued, in the absence of Lord Mansfield, and the court having taken time to deliberate, Mr. Justice Willes pronounced their unanimous opinion. There is no doubt in this case, but that the master was guilty of barratry, by smuggling on his own account, without the privity of his owners. Many definitions of barratry are to be found in the books, but perhaps this general one may comprehend almost all the cases: barratry is every species of fraud or knavery in the master of the ship, by which the freighters or owners are injured; and in this light a criminal or wilful deviation is barratry, if it be without their consent. The general question here is, whether, as the loss, which was occasioned by the barratry of the master, did not happen during the continuance of the voyage, the insurers are liable. I must own this appears to me to be a novel question, and not to have been decided by any former determinations. Difficulties occur on both sides in laying down any rule. The first thing to be observed is, that the policy, by the terms of it, is an undertaking for a limited time, during the voyage from Hamburg to London, till the ship has moored twenty-four hours in safety; and the ship was not actually seized till near a month afterwards. But it has been said that under the 24th of George the Third, chap. 47. and the excise laws, the forfeiture attaches the moment the act is done, and that the barratry was committed during the voyage. It may be so as to some purposes, as to prevent intermediate alterations or incumbrances; but I think the actual property is not altered, till after the seizure, though it may be before condemnation. I will put this case; suppose, before the seizure of the ship, she had gone another voyage, and on her return had been seized, would the crown be entitled to an account of her earnings, after deducting the expenses of the outfit? surely not. Till the seizure, it was not certain that the officers of the crown knew of the illicit trade carried on by the master, or whether they would take advantage of the forfeiture. It would be a dangerous doctrine to lay down, that the insurer should, in all cases, be liable to remote consequential damages. This has been compared to a death's wound received during the voyage, which subjected the ship to a subsequent loss. To this point the case of Mercetony v. Dunlop, seems very material. That was an insurance on a ship, for six months; and three days, before the expiration of the time, she received her death's wound, but by pumping, was kept afloat, till three days after the time: there the verdict, under the direction of Lord Mansfield, was given for the insurer; and it was afterwards confirmed by the court. I will put another case: suppose an insurance upon a man's life for a year, and some short time before the expira-

Easter 23
Geo. 3^d in
B. R.

expiration of the term, he receives a mortal wound, of which he dies after the year, the insurer would not be liable. The case of Vallejo v. Wheeler was cited for the plaintiff, but that does not conclude this question, for there the ship was lost, during the voyage. It was also argued, that this ship, even in the hands of a fair purchaser, would be liable to the forfeiture. I do not know that it ever has been so decided; it may depend on circumstances, such as length of possession, laches in seizing, or other matters. But suppose the law to be so, it does not follow from thence, that though the ship is always liable to confiscation, that the insurer at any distance of time is answerable for the loss, under a limited undertaking. And this brings me to that part of the case, which weighs most with the court, in favour of the defendant, and to which it does not appear to us, that any satisfactory answer has been given. It was agreed in the argument, that the custom-house officers might seize for the forfeiture within three years after the fact committed; and that the attorney-general might file an information, at any time whilst the ship was in being. Is the insurer during all this time to continue liable? Suppose the ship had gone several voyages afterwards; and suppose a partial loss paid, and the underwriter's name struck off, shall an action be afterwards brought upon the policy? His accounts could never be settled, nor could he be finally discharged, whilst the ship was in existence; such a position would be monstrous, and attended with infinite inconvenience. There must be some certain and reasonable limitation in point of time laid down by the court, when the insurer shall be released from his engagement. If he be liable for a month, he may be for a year, and so on. We all think that the law of insurances would be left unsettled, and in much confusion, if any other time were suggested, than that prescribed by the policy, namely, the continuance of the voyage.

voyage, and the ship's mooring twenty-four hours in safety. Judgment for the defendant.

Lethulier's
Case,
2 Salk. 443.

In an action upon a policy of insurance by the defendant at London, insuring a ship from thence to the East Indies, warranted to depart with convoy, the declaration shewed, that the ship went from London to the Downs, and from thence with convoy, and was lost. After a frivolous plea and demurrer, the case stood upon the declaration, and it was objected, that there was a departure without convoy. But by the court, the clause "warranted to depart with convoy" must be construed according to the usage among merchants, that is, from such place where convoys are to be had, as the Downs.

It is true, Lord Chief Justice Holt differed from the rest of the court, being of opinion, that it was no part of the law of merchants to take convoy in the Downs. His lordship's opinion, however, although it is one of the first legal authorities, is certainly contradicted by practice, it being almost the invariable custom for the convoy to meet the merchant ships only in the Downs.

Bond v.
Gonsales,
2 Salk. 445.

Case upon a policy of insurance, which was to insure the William galley in a voyage from Bremen to the port of London, warranted to depart with convoy. The case was, the galley set sail from Bremen, under convoy of a Dutch man of war to the Elbe, where they were joined by two other Dutch men of war, and several Dutch and English merchant ships, whence they sailed to the Texel, where they found a squadron of English men of war and an admiral. After a stay of nine weeks, they set sail from the Texel; the galley was separated in a storm, taken by a French privateer, and re-taken by a Dutch privateer, and paid eighty pounds salvage. It was ruled by Holt, Chief Justice, that the voyage ought to be according to usage, and that their going to the Elbe, though out of the way, was no deviation; for till after the year 1703, (prior to which time this policy was made) there was no convoy for ships directly from Bremen to London. Verdict for the plaintiff.
the

The ship Success was insured "at and from Leghorn to the port of London, and till there moored twenty-four hours in good safety." She arrived the 8th of July at Fresh Wharf and moored, but was the same day served with an order to go back to the Hope to perform a fourteen days quarantine. The men upon this deserted her, and on the 12th of the month the captain applied to be excused going back, which petition was adjourned to the twenty-eighth, when the regency ordered her back; and on the thirtieth, she went back, performed the quarantine, and then sent up for orders to air the goods; but before she returned, the ship was burnt on the twenty-third of August, and now the question was, whether the insurer was liable.

Waples v.
Eames,
2 Stra. 1243.

Lord Chief Justice Lee ruled, that though the ship was so long at her moorings, yet she could not be said to be there in good safety, which must mean the opportunity of unloading and discharging; whereas here she was arrested within the twenty-four hours, and the hands having deserted, and the regency taken time to consider the petition, there was no default in the master or owners: and it was proved that till the fourteen days were expired, no application could be made to air the goods; whereupon the jury found for the plaintiff.

In an insurance upon freight, if an accident happens to the ship before the voyage begins, which prevents her from sailing, the insured upon the policy cannot recover the freight which he would have earned, if she had sailed. The circumstances of the case were these:

The plaintiff insured on ship and freight, at and from Jamaica to Bristol. A cargo was ready to put on board; but the ship being careening, in order for the voyage, a sudden tempest arose, and Tonge v.

Watts,
2 Stra. 1251.

she and many others were lost. The rigging and parts of her were recovered and sold, and the defendant paid into court as much as, upon an average, he was liable to for the loss of the ship: but the plaintiff insisted to be allowed six hundred pounds for the freight the ship would have earned in the voyage, if the accident had not happened. But as the goods were not actually on board, so as to make the plaintiff's right to freight commence; Lord Chief Justice Lee held, he could not be allowed it; and he was nonsuited.

Gordon v.
Morley.
Campbell v.
Bordieu.
2 Str. 1265.

On an insurance from London to Gibraltar, warranted to depart with convoy; it appeared there was a convoy appointed for that trade at Spithead, and the ship Ranger, having tried for convoy in the Downs, , proceeded for Spithead, and was taken in her way thither. The insurers resisted the demand of indemnity, alledging, that as there was a French war, the ship should not have ventured through the Channel, but have waited for occasional convoy. Lord Chief Justice Lee, however, was of opinion, that the ship was to be considered as under the defendant's insurance to a place of general rendezvous, according to the interpretation of the words, warranted to depart with convoy. Salk. 443, 445. and if the parties meant to vary the insurance from what is commonly understood, they should have stated it. Two special juries of merchants found their verdicts agreeably to that direction.

Vide supra.

Motteux and Others, v.
the Gov. and Comp. of Lond. Assur.
1 Atk. 545.

This case has already been mentioned, on account of an alteration made in the policy after the time of underwriting; it shall now, however, be considered wholly independant of that circumstance. It was a bill filed in the court of Chancery, which stated, that the ship Eyles, late in the East India Company's service, was, in the year 1732, at Bengal, at which time the owner employed I. H. to insure the ship in the London Assurance Office for five hundred pounds. The adventure thereon was to commence from her arrival at Fort Saint George, and thence to continue till the said ship should arrive at London, and that it should be lawful for the said ship, in the said voyage, to stay at any ports or places without prejudice, and that the ship was, and should be rated at interest or no interest, without farther account; in consideration whereof, I. H. paid fifteen pounds premium. The Eyles came to Fort St. George in February, 1733, in her way to England, but being leaky, and in a very bad condition, upon the unanimous advice of the governor, council, commanders of ships, &c. she sailed to Bengal to be refitted, and after being sheathed, in her return upon her homeward-bound voyage, she struck upon the Engilee sands and was lost. Evidence was read on the part of the plaintiffs to prove, that Bengal was the most proper place to refit, and that she went thither for that reason; that this was a voyage of necessity, and not a trading voyage, for she took nothing on board, but water, provision, and ballast.
adventure

Lord Chancellor Hardwicke.—As to the question, whether there has been a breach, or, in other terms, a loss, within the meaning of this policy, the general principles laid down by the plaintiff's counsel are right, that stress of weather, and the danger of proceeding on a voyage, when a ship is in a decayed condition, are to be considered. In such a case, if she went to the nearest place, I should consider it equally the same as if she had been repaired at the very place from which the voyage was to commence, according to the terms of the policy, and no deviation.

It is a very material circumstance, that the governor ordered the lading to be taken out, to shew the necessity of the ship's being repaired, but there is not a syllable of proof why she might not have been equally well repaired at Fort Saint George. There is one part of this case, which which distinguishes it from all others whatever, and that is, as to the certain time the voyage was to commence. The fact is, the ship was lost in July, 1733, three weeks before the time of making this policy, so that clearly the ship was not at Fort Saint George at the time the agreement was made; and therefore it is a material question, whether it comes within the agreement. His Lordship directed an issue to try, whether the loss in July, 1733, was a loss during the voyage, and according to the adventure agreed upon; which issue was afterwards found for the plaintiffs upon a trial in the Common Pleas.

1 Atk. 548. In an action upon a policy of insurance, before Lord Chief Justice Hardwicke, it has been held, that the words “at and from Bengal to England,” meant the first arrival at Bengal; and it was agreed, that when such words are used in policies, first arrival is always implied and understood.

Chitty v. Selwin.
2 Atk. 359. It has likewise been held, that when a ship is insured at and from a place, and it arrives at that place, as long as the ship is preparing for the voyage upon which it is insured, the insurer is liable: but if all thoughts of the voyage be laid aside, and the ship lie there five, six, or seven years, with the owner's privity, it shall never be said the insurer is liable; for it would be to subject him to the whim and caprice of the owner.

Camden v. Cowley.
1 Black. 417. This was an action on a policy of insurance on a ship, at and from Jamaica to London. The ship had also been insured from London to Jamaica generally, and was lost in coasting the island, after she had touched for some days at one port there, but before she had delivered all her outward-bound cargo at the other ports of the island. This was an action on the homeward policy; and in order to shew when the homeward-bound risk commenced, it was necessary to shew at what time the outward-bound risk determined; and the jury, which was special, after an examination of merchants as to the custom, by their verdict, decided, that that the outward risk ended, when the ship had moored in any port of the island, and did not continue till she came to the last port of delivery.

In the Trinity term following, a motion was made for a new trial, but it was refused; because it had been thoroughly tried, and no new light could be thrown upon it, although Lord Mansfield said, the inclination of his opinion at the trial was the contrary way. Mr. Justice Wilmot thought, the construction put upon the policy by the jury was the right one. 1 Black. 418.

In a similar case, Lord Mansfield laid down the same doctrine to the jury, namely, that the outward risk upon the ship ended twenty-four hours after its arrival in the first port of the island, to which it was destined: but that the outward policy upon goods continued till they were landed. Barrats v. The Lond. Assurance. Sittings after Hilary 1782, at Guildhall.

But the great and leading cases, upon questions of construction, are two, Tiernay v. Etherington, and Pelly v. the Royal Exchange Assurance Company; the former determined by Lord Chief Justice Lee, and the latter by Lord Mansfield. In these cases, the principles, which are to be observed in the construction of policies, are so fully considered, and the application of them to the particular circumstances of the different cases is made with so much accuracy and perspicuity, that they are to be regarded as the pole star to direct our enquiries upon all similar occasions.

The first of these causes, was an action upon a policy of insurance “on goods, in a Dutch ship, “from Malaga to Gibraltar, and at and from “thence to England and Holland, both, or either: “on goods, as hereunder agreed, beginning “the adventure from the loading, and to continue till the ship and goods be arrived at “England or Holland, and there safely landed.” The agreement was, “that upon the arrival of “the ship at Gibraltar, the goods might be unloaded, and re-shipped in one or more British “ship Tiernay v. Etherington, before Lee, Chief Justice, 5 Mar. 1743. 1 Burr. 348.

“ ship or ships for England and Holland, and to “ return one per cent. if discharged in England.”
 It appeared in evidence, that when the ship came to Gibraltar, the goods were unloaded, and put into a store ship, (which it was proved was always considered as a warehouse) and that there was then no British ship there. Two days after the goods were put into this store ship, they were lost in a storm. The question was, whether this was a loss, within the construction of the policy.

Lee, Chief Justice.—It is certain, that in the construction of policies, the strictum jus, or apex juris, is not to be laid hold of: but they are to be construed largely, for the benefit of trade, and for the insured. Now it seems to be a strict construction, to confine this insurance only to the unloading and reshipping, and the accidents attending that act. The construction should be according to the course of trade in this place;
 and this appears to be the usual mode of unloading and reshipping in that place, viz. that when there is no British ship there, then the goods are kept in store ships. Where there is an insurance on goods on board such a ship, that insurance extends to the carrying the goods to shore in a boat. So, if an insurance be of goods to such a city, and the goods are brought in safety to such a port, though distant from the city, that is a compliance with the policy; if that be the usual place, to which the ships come.
 Therefore, as here is a liberty given of unloading and reshipping, it must be taken to be an insuring under such methods as are proper for unloading and reshipping. There is no neglect on the part of the insured, for the goods were brought into port the nineteenth, and were lost the twenty-second of November. This manner of unloading and reshipping is to be considered as the necessary means of attaining that, which was intended by the policy; and seems to be the same, as if it had happened in the act of unshipping from one ship into another. And as this is the known course

course of the trade, it seems extraordinary, if it was not intended. This is not to be considered as a suspension of the policy; for as the policy would extend to a loss, happening in the unloading and reshipping from one ship to another, so any means to attain that end come within the meaning of the policy. The plaintiff had a verdict.

Afterwards a new trial was moved for; but it was refused by Lee, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Chapman, and Mr. Justice Denison, against the opinion of Mr. Justice Wright. Easter Term, 1743.

The next of these causes came before the court upon a case reserved for their opinion, after a trial and verdict for the plaintiff, at Guildhall, before Lord Mansfield. It was an action of covenant upon a policy of insurance. Pelly v. The Governor and Comp. of the Royal Exch. Assur. 1 Burr. 341.

The case states, that the plaintiff, being part owner of the ship Onslow, an East India ship, then lying in the Thames, and bound on a voyage to China, and back again to London, insured it “at
“ and from London, to any ports or places be“ yond the Cape of Good Hope, and back to Lon- “ don, free from average under ten per cent. upon
“ the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, muni“ tion, artillery, boat, and other furniture of,
“ and in the said ship: beginning the adventure “ upon the said ship from and immediately fol“ lowing the date of the policy, and so to con“ tinue and endure until the ship shall be arrived
“ as above, and there anchored twenty-four “ hours in good safety.” The perils mentioned in the policy were the common perils, viz. “ of “ the seas, men of war, fire, &c.” The ship arrived in the river Canton, in China, where she was to stay to clean and refit, and for other purposes. Upon her arrival there, the sails, yards, tackle, cables, rigging, apparel, and other furniture, were, by the captain’s order, taken out of her, and put into a warehouse, or storehouse, called a bank-saul, built for that purpose on a sand

OF THE CONSTRUCTION

land bank, or small island, lying in the said river, near one of the banks, called Bank-faul Island; in order to be there repaired, kept dry, and preserved, till the ship should be heeled, cleaned, and refitted. Some time after this, a fire broke out in the bank-faul, belonging to a Swedish ship, and communicated itself to another bank-faul, and from thence to that belonging to the Onslow, and consumed the same, together with all the sails, yards, &c. belonging to the Onslow, that were therein. The case states further, that it was the universal, and well-known usage, and has been so for a great number of years, for all European ships, which go a China voyage, except Dutch ships (who for some years past have been denied this privilege by the Chinese, and who look upon such denial as a great loss) when they arrive near this Bank-faul Island, in the river Canton, to unrig the ships, and to take out their sails, yards, tackle, cables, rigging, apparel, and other furniture; and to put them on shore in a bank-faul, built for that purpose on the said island (in the manner that had been done by the captain of the Onslow, on the present occasion) in order to be repaired, kept dry, and preserved, until the ships should be heeled, cleaned, and refitted. The case adds, that so doing is prudent, and for the common and general benefit of the owners of the ship, the insurers, and insured, and all persons concerned in the safety of the ship. The ship arrived from her said voyage in the Thames, having been again rigged, and put in the best condition, the nature of the place and circumstances of affairs would permit. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the insurers are liable to answer for this loss, so happening upon the bank-faul, within the intent and meaning of this policy.

The court, after a solemn argument, took time to consider the question, and then Lord Mansfield delivered delivered the unanimous opinion of the court for the plaintiff.

Lord Mansfield. — By the express words of the policy, the defendants have insured the tackle, apparel, and other furniture of the Onslow, from fire, during the whole time of her voyage, until her return in safety to London, without any restriction. Her tackle, apparel, and furniture, were inevitably burnt in China, during the voyage, before her return to London. The event then, which has happened, is a loss within the general words of the policy; and it is incumbent upon the defendant to shew, from the manner, in which this misfortune happened, or from other circumstances, that it ought to be construed a peril, which they did not undertake to bear. If the chance be varied, or the voyage altered, by the fault of the owner or master of the ship, the insurer ceases to be liable; because he is only understood to engage that the thing shall be done safe from fortuitous dangers, provided due means are used by the trader to attain that end. But the master is not in fault, if what he did was done in the usual course, and for just reasons. The insurer, in estimating the price at which he is willing to indemnify the trader against all risks, must have under his consideration the nature of the voyage to be performed, and the usual course and manner of doing it. Every thing done in the usual course must have been foreseen, and in contemplation at the time he engaged: he took the risk, upon a supposition, that what was usual or necessary, would be done. In general, what is usually done by such a ship, with such a cargo, in such a voyage, is understood to be referred to by every policy, and to make a part of it, as much as if it were expressed. The usage, when foreseen, is rather allowed to be done, than what is left to the master's discretion, upon unforeseen events: yet if the master, ex justâ causâ, go out of the way, the insurance continues.

Upon

Upon these principles, it is difficult to frame a question, which can arise out of this case, as stated. The only objection is, that they were burnt in a bank-faul, and not in the ship; upon land, and not at sea, or upon water: and being appertinent to the ship, losses and dangers ashore could not be included. The answer is obvious: First, the words make no such distinction: Secondly, the intent makes no such distinction. Many accidents might happen at land, even to the ship. Suppose a hurricane to drive it a mile on shore; or an earthquake may have a like effect; suppose the ship to be burnt in a dry dock, or suppose accidents to happen to the tackle upon land, taken from the ship, while accidentally and occasionally refitting, as on account of a hole in its bottom, or other mischance; these are all possible cases. But what might arise from an accidental repair of the ship, is not near so strong, as a certain, necessary consequence of the ordinary voyage, which the parties could not but have in their direct and immediate contemplation. Here the defendants knew that this ship must be heeled, cleaned, and refitted in the river of Canton: they knew that the tackle would then be put in the bank-faul: they knew it was for the safety of the ship, and prudent that they should be put there. Had it been an accidental necessity of refitting, the master might have justified taking them out of the ship, ex justâ causâ: but describing the voyage is an express reference to the usual manner of making it, as much as if every circumstance were mentioned. Was the chance varied by the fault of the master? It is impossible to impute any fault to him. Is this like a deviation? No: 'tis ex justâ causâ, which always excuses. Had the insurers in this case been asked, whether the tackle should be put in the bank-faul, they must, for their own sakes, have insisted that it should. They would have had reason to complain, if, from their not being put there there, a misfortune had happened. In such a case, the master would have been to blame, and by his fault would have varied the chance. They have taken a price for standing in the plaintiff's place, as to any losses he might sustain in performing the several parts of the voyage, of which this was known and intended to be one. Therefore, we are all of opinion, that in every light, and in every view of this case, in reason and justice, and within the words, intent, and meaning, of this policy, and within the view and contemplation of the parties to the contract, the insurers are liable to answer for this loss.

So also in a very modern case, the same principles were adhered to, and the same rule of decision was adopted. The insurance was upon the ships, the Hope, and the Anne, at and from Dartmouth to Waterford, and from thence to the port, or ports, of discharge, on the coast of Labrador, with leave to touch at Newfoundland, and upon any kinds of goods and merchandizes; and also on the ships, till they should be arrived at their port of discharge, and should have moored at anchor twenty-four hours, and on the goods until the same should be there discharged and safely landed. By a clause in the policy, money advanced to the fishermen was insured. The Anne arrived safe on the coast of Labrador, on the 22d of June; and the Hope on the fourteenth of July, 1778. From the time of their arrival, the crews were employed in fishing, and had taken out none of their cargoes, except at leisure hours (partly on Sundays) such things as were immediately wanted. On the thirteenth of August, an American privateer entered the harbour, and took both the vessels, there being at that time nobody on board either of them. The action was brought to recover the value of the goods. The defence was, that there had been an unnecessary delay, in unloading the cargoes, in consequence of which they had been exposed to capture, and that the

Noble and Others v.
Kennoway.
Doug. 493.

underwriters ought not to be liable for what had happened from the negligence of the insured. The plaintiffs rested their case on the words of the policy, and the usage of the trade. They called the captain of the Anne, who swore, that he had been the same voyage three times in the three last years, and that they had proceeded in the same manner during each of the voyages; that he did not think the plaintiffs had warehouses sufficient to have held the goods, if they had been landed; and that there were no settlements on the coast of Labrador, but those belonging to the plaintiffs. One of the sailors swore to the same effect. The plaintiffs then called one French, to prove the custom of the Newfoundland trade. This evidence was objected to; but Lord Mansfield admitted it, and the witness swore, that, in the Newfoundland trade, it is customary to keep their goods on board several months, and that sometimes they have part of their homeward cargo of fish, and part of their old cargo on board, at the same time. That the first object is to catch fish, and they unload only at times when they cannot fish. The old cargo being chiefly salt and provisions, it is taken out gradually for curing the fish, and for consumption. The testimony of this witness was confirmed by one Newman. Neither Newman nor French had been at Labrador. Mr. Hunter was then called, who proved, that, some years since, he used to send vessels of his own, and also chartered vessels to Labrador, and that it was usual, in chartering vessels, to stipulate, that they should have sixty days allowed for discharging. That he apprehended they were oftentimes longer in fact, and that it was not so easy to discharge a cargo at Labrador, as at Newfoundland. Upon this evidence a verdict was found for the plaintiffs, and in the subsequent term the defendant moved to set it aside, which was not granted.

Lord

Lord Mansfield.—The trade of fishing on the coast of Newfoundland, especially from the west of England, has been known and practised for many years. Since the treaty of Paris, a new trade has been opened to Labrador. The insurance here is on the ships, and on the goods till landed. The defendant says, the plaintiffs have been guilty of an unreasonable delay in landing. That question was to be tried by the jury, and could only be decided, by knowing the usual practice of the trade. Every underwriter is presumed to be acquainted with the practice of the trade he insures, and, that, whether it is recently established or not. If he does not know it, he ought to inform himself. It is no matter if the usage has been only for a year. This trade has existed, and has been conducted in the same manner for three years. It is well known, that the fishery is the object of the voyage, and the same sort of fishing is carried on in the same way at Newfoundland. I still think the evidence on that subject was properly admitted, to shew the nature of the trade. The point is not analogous to a common law custom.

Mr. Justice Buller.—I think there was sufficient evidence, without calling in aid the usage of the Newfoundland trade; for it appeared, on the face of the policy, that the fishery was the purpose of the voyage: but I think the evidence objected to was properly admitted. If it can be shewn, that the time would have been reasonable in one place, that is a degree of evidence to prove, that it was so in another. The effect of such evidence may be taken off, by proof of different circumstances. It is very true, that the custom of one manor is no evidence of the custom of another; that has been determined in many cases: but the point here is very different, it is a question concerning the nature of a particular branch of trade.

Although the decisions in all the above causes, notwithstanding the vast variety of circumstances that are to be found in them, are so uniform in principle; and although we find, that the learned judges make a constant reference to the usage of trade; yet in no instance whatever has this been so apparent as in the cases of insurance upon East India voyages, in which the insurers have been held liable, not only for events which may possibly happen from the port of discharge, to that of delivery; but also for all intermediate, or country voyages, upon which the ship may be dispatched, by the order of the council of any of the East India Company's settlements abroad.

It is not that in these cases, the judges have given a greater latitude to the usage of trade, than in any other; but because from the great variety of cases that have arisen upon the subject, the usage with regard to the East India voyages is more notorious, and better established than in those, where the question has but seldom occurred. The grounds and reasons of such decisions seem to have been the terms, in which all the printed charter parties of the East India Company are conceived. By those charter parties, liberty is given to prolong the ship's stay for a year; besides which, it is very common by a new agreement to detain her a year longer: and the longer a ship is kept, it is the more beneficial to the owners. The words of the policy, too, are adapted to this usage, being without limitation of time or place, and without any reference to the first voyage particularly mentioned in the charter party. These charter parties, being printed, are matter of publick notoriety; and are so generally and universally known, or may be so, by an enquiry at the India House, that the chance of her stay is always one of the risks insured: and both the insured and insurer must be supposed to be fully apprized and sufficiently conversant of it. Indeed, the understanding of the policy depends so much on the course and usage of the East India trade, that it seems to be contradictory to the policy policy to say, that the underwriter did not underwrite for a country voyage.

All these principles were fully laid down by Lord Mansfield in a very few years after he took upon him the administration of justice in this country; and they have been frequently recognized, and invariably pursued in a multitude of decisions upon such policies since that time. The learned chief justice, when he laid down these rules, as the ground of his then opinion, and as the guide of future decisions, said, he did so, because the court esteemed this to be the most convenient way of determining the question: for whoever should thereafter insure on an East India ship would know, that he insured the contingencies, and might take proper precautions against them, if he pleased. Whereas if every person should be obliged to open to the insurer all the grounds of his expectations about the ship's continuance in the East Indies, or coming to England, it might produce great litigation and confusion in cases arising upon these policies.

The cases, in which these principles were settled, were the nine causes tried upon the ship Winchelsea, an East Indiaman; in all of which the policies were the same, the parties only being different; and all of which were at first tried with various success; but the nine verdicts were ultimately uniform for the plaintiffs, the insured, against the underwriters.

Salvador v.
Hopkins,
3 Burr. 1707.

The charter party was in the usual printed form, and contained a clause, empowering the company's servants abroad to detain the ship a year longer, if they pleased, than the time originally limited by the charter party. The insurance was in these words, "at and from Bengal,
"to any ports or places whatsoever in the East Indies,
" China, Persia, or elsewhere, beyond the Cape of " Good Hope, forwards and backwards, and during " her stay at each place, until her arrival at London,
" on money, &c." On the twenty-fifth of March 1762, the ship failed; on the nineteenth of September, tember, in the same year, she arrived at Bombay; and early in the November following, she left Bombay the first time. The ship arrived at Calcutta, in Bengal, on the fifth of March, 1763; and on the twenty-eighth of the same month, the president and council of Bengal entered into a new agreement with the captain, reciting, that the charter party would expire on the eleventh of February 1764, but that the president and council, finding it expedient to detain the ship in India, and being desirous of having the time limited in the charter party prolonged, &c. the indenture therefore witnesseth, that the captain lets the ship to freight, for one whole year from the said eleventh of February 1764. The ship arrived at Bombay a second time in July 1763: in December following, she again sailed for Bengal, and arrived there early in 1764: on the nineteenth of March in that year she left Bengal, in order to proceed for Bombay, and on the twenty-first of that month, subsequent to the expiration of the old charter party, the ship was lost. On the third of April 1764, Mr. Hume, the plaintiff in several of these actions, received a letter from the captain, dated the fourteenth of April 1763, inclosing a copy of the new agreement; which letter was publickly read in a coffee-house. The next day after the receipt of the letter, some insurances were made by Mr. Hume. On the seventeenth of July 1764, other insurances were effected by Mr. Hume, and all the other insurances 3 Burr. 1713. were made, after the captain's letter of the fourteenth of April 1763, had been received and publickly read in a coffee-house.

The court after laying down all those principles above stated, respecting the notorious usage of this branch of trade, enlarged upon the circumstances peculiarly distinguishing these causes.
 “ No mention was made or question asked, at “ the time of underwriting, when the ship
 “ was chartered; when she sailed from England; “ when she arrived in India; whether she
 “ was

" was detained a year according to the proviso
 " in the charter party: and yet her continuance
 " in the East-Indies depended upon all these facts.
 " If they ought necessarily to be disclosed, the " policy was void, to the knowledge of the un" derwriters, at the time they took the premium.
 " The evidence in all the causes was very strong,
 " that her staying a year longer, if known,
 " would not have varied the premium. This " ship was insured at the same premium after
 " the prolongation of her stay in India was " known. None of the defendants desired to " be off, after they knew that an account of the " new agreement had been received in England
 " upon the third of April, 1764, which was no" torious to them all, before the intelligence of " her loss, which came in the October following.
 " So that if there had been any force in the ob" jection, it would have been waived by the ac" quiescence of the underwriters, after they were " fully apprized of the whole."

So also, in an action upon a policy " on the " goods, specie, and effects, of the plaintiff, on " board the ship on her voyage from London to " Madras and China, with liberty to touch, stay,
 " and trade, at any ports or places whatsoever,"
 a similar question arose upon the following facts.
 When the ship arrived at Madras, she was too late to go to China that year; upon which she was employed by the council there to go from Madras to Bengal to fetch rice, which voyage she performed once, and, in attempting to perform it a second time, was lost. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

A new trial was afterwards moved for on two grounds, one of which only is material here, viz.
 that these intermediate voyages were not insured under the policy; for that the words " to touch,
 " stay, and trade at any ports or places whatso" ever" only meant, to give a licence to stay at such places, as it should be necessary to stop at in the course of the voyage.

Gregory v.
 Christie,
 B. R. Trinity
 24 Geo. 3.

Vide supra
 chapter the first. p. 13.
 where the other point is stated.

Lord Mansfield.—To understand this policy you must refer to the course of trade, to which it relates. What is the course of trade with the East India Company? If an India ship come to Madras too late in the season to proceed to Cbina, the council employs her in an intermediate voyage. It is beneficial to all parties so to employ her; the underwriters are perfectly well acquainted with this usage, and are bound to take notice of it. Before the year 1780, it was usual to insure both the outward and homeward bound voyage in one policy, and then the words "backwards and forwards" were inserted: but since that time, they have separated the insurance, and insure the outward voyage in a distinct policy. The policy in question differs from others; because it contains a permission to trade as well as to touch and stay, at any ports or places, which is not usual in policies of this nature: for in general they only permit them to touch and stay, which words can only be intended to give a permission so to do, if necessity oblige them; but to touch, stay and trade are words so large, that they seem to include the intermediate voyage. It would narrow the construction very much, indeed, to say, that the policy relates to those places only, at which they shall stop in the voyage. The words made use of certainly take in the intermediate voyage; and the usage of trade confirms this construction. The consequence of this opinion was, that the verdict of the jury was held to be right.

Farquharson
v. Hunter,
B. R. Hilary
25 Geo. 3.

So also, in an action on a policy of insurance upon the ship Blandford, "at and from London to "Madras and Bengal, beginning the risk upon "the said ship, &c. at London, and so to continue till the arrival of the said ship at Madras "and Bengal, with liberty to touch and stay at "any port or place in this voyage:" the facts were these. The Blandford arrived at Madras; where her cargo was unloaded, by order of the presipresidency; she was then sent for rice to Visagipatnam, and by an entry in the council book, her voyage to Bengal is said to be postponed. That part of her outward bound cargo, which was intended for Bengal, was sent thither in the Lord Mulgrave, and afterwards the Blandford was sent to Bengal in ballast, and was taken in the passage; for which loss this action was brought. At the trial, Lord Mansfield thought the words in the policy would not admit of such a latitude of construction, as to take in the intermediate voyage, the words being much narrower than those in Gregory v. Christie: upon which the plaintiff was nonsuited.

However, in the following term, when a motion was made to set aside the nonsuit, his lordship said, "This is a policy on the ship: it is an India voyage: and the usage as to the intermediate voyages is notorious to both parties; and the contract refers to it. The insurance here is from London to Madras and Bengal. What is the usage of the trade? That when the ships arrive at Madras, the council may send them elsewhere."—The other judges concurred; and the rule for setting aside the nonsuit was made absolute.

From these cases it is evident, that in the construction of East India policies, whether the words be large and comprehensive, as in Salvador v. Hopkins, and Gregory v. Christie; or restrained and limited as in the last case, the usage of trade shall always be considered, and the intermediate or country voyages held to be insured. At the same time, though the general rule be so, the parties contracting may, by their own agreement, prevent such a latitude of construction; and so Lord Mansfield said in Salvador v. Hopkins. In order to do this, it is not necessary that express words of exclusion should be inserted in the policy; but if, from the terms used, the court can collect that such was the intention of the parties, that con-

construction, which is most agreeable to their intention, shall most assuredly prevail.

Lavabre v.
Wilson, and Lavabre v.
Walter,
Douglas 271.

Thus, in an action upon a policy, the voyage insured was described in these words: "at and
" from Port L'Orient to Pondicherry, Madras,
" and China, and at and from thence back to the " ship's port or ports of discharge in France,
" with liberty to touch, in the outward or homeward bound voyage, at the isles of France and
" Bourbon, and at all or any other place or places
" what or wheresoever." In a subsequent part of the policy, there was this clause, "and it shall " be lawful for the said ship in this voyage, to " proceed and sail to, and touch and stay at any " ports or places whatsoever, as well on this " side, as on the other side of the Cape of Good " Hope, without being deemed a deviation." The ship arrived at Pondicherry, and after remaining there one month, she sailed for Bengal, instead of going to China: having wintered at Bengal, and received considerable repairs, she returned to Pondicherry; and having taken in a homeward bound cargo, proceeded in her voyage back to L'Orient, but was taken by the Mentor privateer. The question in that case, as far as it is material to us in this part of our work, was, whether the voyage to Bengal was insured within the construction of this policy. The reporter of this case says, it was insisted, in the opening for the plaintiffs, that, under the general liberty given by the policy, of touching at all places whatsoever, the vessel might go to Bengal, which, by the operation of those words, was as much part of the voyage, as if it had been expressly named,—Lord Mansfield, however, having intimated a clear opinion, that the general words were, by the expressions of "in the outward or homeward bound voyage," and "in this voyage," qualified and restrained so as to mean all places whatsoever in the usual course of the voyage "to " and from the places mentioned in the policy," this ground

Mr Douglas.

ground was immediately abandoned, and never farther mentioned by the counsel for the plaintiffs in the progress of these causes.

But although the judges have been thus liberal in their constructions of this contract, and have gone as far as possible to effectuate the intention of the parties; yet they have never extended those equitable principles to such a length as to say, that, when a man has insured one species of property, he shall recover damage, which he has suffered by the loss of a description of property, different from that named in the policy. Thus a man, who has insured a cargo of goods, cannot recover under such a policy, the freight, which he has paid for the carriage of that cargo; nor shall it be permitted to an owner of a ship, who insures the ship merely, to demand satisfaction for the loss of merchandize laden thereon, or to ask from the insurers extraordinary wages paid to the seamen, or the value of provisions consumed, by reason of the detention of the ship at any port, longer than was expected.

Such attempts have, indeed, been made, but they have always been resisted: for to admit of such demands would introduce an infinite variety of frauds, and would be repugnant to the most settled maxims of insurance law, and to the constant practice and usage of trade. In Molloy it is said, that if a merchant insure a ship generally, and the ship happen then to be laden, and if it afterwards miscarry, the insurer shall not answer for the goods, but only for the ship. This position stands uncontradicted by any foreign writer ancient or modern, and is supported by several decisions of the first authority in this country.

In an insurance upon the ship Tartar at and from London to Newcastle, and Marseilles, and at and from Marseilles to her discharging port or ports in the West Indies (Jamaica excepted), the facts were, that the ship being distressed bore away for Minorca, and put into Port Mahon, where the captain

Molloy b. 2.
c. 7. f. 8.

Roccus de Assicur. Not.
16.

Fletcher and Others v.
Poole,
Sitt. after East. 1769, before Lord Mansfield at
Guildhall.

captain obtained leave from the vice admiralty court, to have his ship surveyed, in consequence of which, she was long detained; and the action was brought to recover the extraordinary wages, and the provisions expended during the detention for these repairs.

Lord Mansfield was of opinion, that such articles as sailors wages and provisions expended, while a ship is detained to refit, can never be allowed as a charge against the insurer on the ship; and a verdict was accordingly given for the defendant.

Baillie v.
Moudigli-
ani, B. R.
Hil. 25 Gec.
3.

In another cause, after a trial at Guildhall, a special case was reserved for the opinion of the court, stating, that this was an action upon a policy of insurance on goods at and from Nevis to Bristol. The ship sailed from Nevis; but, before her arrival at Bristol, she was captured and taken into Morlaix, and there condemned. An appeal was lodged in the parliament of Paris, where the sentence was reversed, and the ship and cargo were decreed to be restored. Before the sentence of restitution, the ship and cargo had been sold; but the money was paid, the charges of prosecuting the appeal being deducted. The defendants have paid all the charges of the suit, and the salvage, except the sum now in demand, which was paid by the plaintiffs, as owners of the goods to the owner of the ship for freight pro rata itineris: and for which freight this action is brought on the policy on goods.

After time taken to deliberate, Lord Mansfield delivered the unanimous opinion of the court for the defendants: the item now in litigation, his lordship said, is that which was paid for freight, by the owner of the cargo to the proprietor of the ship pro rata itineris. The question is, whether he can charge these underwriters for it. As between the owners of the ship and cargo, in case of a total loss, no freight is due: but as between them no loss is total, where part of the property is saved, and the owner takes it to his own use. In this case, the value of the goods was restored in money, which is the same as the goods; and therefore freight was certainly due pro rata itineris. But as between the owners of the goods, and the underwriters upon the cargo, the latter have nothing to do with the freight. The owner of the ship has a lien for his freight; but in a total loss, literally so called, no freight is due. In case of a loss, total in its nature, with salvage, the owner may either take the part saved, or abandon: but in neither case, can he throw the freight upon the underwriters; because they have not engaged to indemnify him against it.
pro-

This also was an action on a policy of insurance, which was on the ship and goods from Ostend to Dominique. The following facts appeared in evidence: that the ship met with bad weather, and was in great distress: that the crew threatened to take the command from the captain unless he would make for the first port: that he then went to Ferrol to repair his ship, and by the time the repairs were finished, the crew forsook her: that he then got another crew, and at the moment he was going to sail, the Spanish governor stopped him: that after a detention of 37 days, she was discharged, and then arrived at Dominique. This action was brought for the expence incurred by wages, provisions, &c. during the demurrage at Ferrol. On the part of the insurer it was contended, and so held by Mr. Justice Buller, who presided upon that trial, that the freight, and not the ship, is liable for this loss, and that the charge of demurrage could not be allowed upon this policy. The plaintiff was nonsuited.

Eden v.
Poole, Sitting, after
Hil. 1785.

Agreeably to the above doctrine, there is a very modern decision of the whole court of King's Bench. That also was an action on a policy of insurance, on the ship Dumfries at and from London to Africa during her stay and trade there, and at and from thence to her port or ports of discharge

Robertson v.
Ewer, B. R.
Hil. 26 Geo.
3. Term Re-
ports, p. 127.

charge in the British West India islands, to recover a partial loss. The facts were, that this ship, in the course of the last war, after performing her voyage to Africa, in coming from thence laden with slaves, to the West Indies, touched at Barbadoes in December 1781, for the purpose of watering, at which island an embargo was laid on all ships, by order of Lord Hood, the commander in chief upon that station; and the vessel was detained a considerable time. The captain applied for leave to depart; but was refused: whereupon he attempted to sail away privately in the night, but was pursued by the Salamander, sloop of war, and after a slight engagement, he was brought back, the Dumfries not having sustained any damage, for which the underwriters could be charged, on account of a clause, exempting them from partial losses, not amounting to 3 per cent. Lord Hood, in consequence of this breach of embargo, upon her return took almost all the men out of the Dumfries, dispersed some of the crew among the ships of war, the captain and the rest of the crew were confined; and the ship was detained at Barbadoes, till the April following. This detention however was not proved to have arisen solely from the embargo, as it appeared, that for some part of the time, the small-pox prevailed among the slaves, and that the embargo was frequently taken off and renewed between December and April. The action was brought to recover from the insurer upon the ship the additional wages paid to the seamen, and the charges for provisions, during this detention.

Mr. Justice Buller was of opinion, at the trial, that the only damages proved, being items for seamen's wages, provisions, and demurrage, during the detention, could not be recovered under this policy on the ship only. To make the underwriter liable, there must be a loss of the ship, for the policy is on the body of the ship only; and if she arrive safe at her port of delivery, be the voyage ever so long, you cannot recover under such a policy: if, indeed, she be in such a state as to prevent her from completing her voyage, it is certainly a loss. The plaintiff was nonsuited.
the

In the following term a motion was made to set aside the nonsuit, which, after argument, was refused by the whole court to be done, and upon that occasion Lord Mansfield said: There is no authority to shew, that on this policy, the insured can recover for such a loss; but it is contrary to the constant practice. On a policy on a ship, sailors wages or provisions are never allowed in settling the damages. The insurance is on the body of the ship, tackle, and furniture; not on the voyage or crew. In this case it is admitted, that there was no damage done to the ship, tackle, or furniture; and therefore I think the direction was right, and that the plaintiff ought not to recover.

Mr. Justice Buller.—I take it to be perfectly well settled, that you are not to recover on a policy on the body of the ship for seamen's wages or provisions; these are not the subject of the insurance. The case put at the bar proves the rule. For if the ship had been detained in consequence of any injury which she had received in a storm, though the underwriter must have made good that damage, yet you could not have come upon him for the amount of wages or provisions, during the time she was so repairing. Here the ship itself is safe; and the court only look to the thing itself, which is the subject of insurance; and the wages and provisions are no part of the thing insured.

It is also necessary, in order to intitle the insured to recover, that the loss, which has happened, be a direct and immediate consequence of the peril insured, and not a remote one. This doctrine was laid down in a case before Lord Mansfield, and the decision of the jury was agreeable able to the principle stated by the Chief Justice.

Jones v.
Schmoll.
Guildh. Tr.
Vac. 1785.
Term Rep.
for Hil. 1786.
p. 130. Note
(a.)

It was an action on a policy of assurance " at
" and from Bristol to the coast of Africa, during " her stay and trade there, and from thence to " her port or ports of discharge in the West In- " dies." There was a memorandum on the policy, that "the assurers are not to pay any loss that " may happen in boats during the voyage (morta" lity by natural death excepted) and not to pay
" for mortality by mutiny, unless the same a" mount to 10 l. per cent. to be computed upon
" the first cost of the ship, outfit, and cargo, va" luing negroes so lost at 35 l. per head." The demand upon the policy was the loss of a great many slaves by mutiny. The evidence of the captain was, that he had shipped 225 prime slaves on board : that on the third of May, before he sailed from the coast of Africa, an insurrection was attempted ; that the women seized him on the quarter deck, and endeavoured to throw him overboard, but he was rescued by the crew ; that the women and some men threw themselves down the hatchway, and were much bruised. That he sent the ringleader on shore, and twelve men and a woman afterwards died of those bruises, and from abstinence : that on the 22d of May there was a general insurrection, the crew were forced to fire upon the slaves, and attack them with weapons, it being a case of imminent necessity. Several slaves took to the ship's sides, and hung down in the water by the chains and ropes, some for about a quarter of an hour, three were killed by firing, and three were drowned, the rest were taken in, but they were too far gone to be recovered ; many of them were desperately bruised, many died in consequence of the wounds they had received from the firing during the mutiny, some from swallowing salt water, some from chagrin at their disappointment, and from abstinence ; several of fluxes

fluxes and fevers; in all to the amount of 55. The underwriter had paid at the rate of 15 per cent. for 19, who were either killed during the mutiny, or had afterwards died of their wounds. Another consequential damage was stated, that the mutiny had lessened the remaining slaves in the estimation of the planters, and reduced their price.

Lord Mansfield said, as to the latter loss, I think the underwriter is not answerable for the loss of the market, or the price of it: that is a remote consequence, and not within any peril insured against by the policy.

The question for the jury will be, whether any of those who died by any other means, except by being fired upon, or in consequence of the wounds and bruises which they received during the struggle, are within the meaning of the policy, which insures against damage by mutiny. This policy is in the common form, and if it were not for the memorandum, I should say, the case was not within the instrument. But as it now stands, it is very clear, that those who were killed by the firing, or died in consequence of their wounds, are within the policy; the other complicated cases must be left to the jury. The first class, such as were killed in the fray, certainly come within the meaning of the policy; and the second class also, those who died of the wounds they received. The third class are, I think, as clearly not within it, such as being baffled in their attempts, in despair chose a mode of death, by fasting, or died through despondency: that is not mortality by mutiny, but the reverse, for it is by failure of mutiny. The great class are such as received some hurt by the mutiny, but not mortal, and died afterwards of other causes, as those who swallowed water, jumped overboard, &c. This is the great point.

The jury found, that all who were killed in the mutiny, or died of their wounds, were to be paid for.

F

for. That all those who died of their bruises, which they received in the mutiny, though accompanied with other causes; were to be paid for. That all who had swallowed salt water, and died in consequence thereof, or who leaped into the sea, and hung upon the sides of the ship, without being otherwise bruised, or who died of chagrin, were not to be paid for.

In the construction of policies of insurance for time, which are very frequent, the same liberality, equity, and good sense, have always prevailed, as in all other insurances: and the courts have gone, as far as possible, to decide according to the intention of the parties.

Syers and Others v.
Bridge.
Dougl. 509.

In an action on a policy of insurance on the ship Mary, a letter of marque, the words of the policy were, “ at and from Liverpool to Antigua, “ with liberty to cruise six weeks, and to return “ to Ireland, or Falmouth, or Milford, with any “ prize or prizes.” This ship having been taken, this action was brought, and came on to be tried before Baron Hotbam, at Lancaster, when a verdict was found for the plaintiffs.

Upon a motion for a new trial, the material parts of the evidence were, that the policy was made on the 9th of February, 1779, and there was no time fixed in it for the commencement, or the duration of the voyage. The captain of the ship, being called on the part of the plaintiffs, swore that he in fact, sailed from Liverpool on the 28th of February: he was five days before he cleared the land; and he proceeded on his direct voyage till the 14th of March, chasing, however, at different times, from the 7th to the 14th, at which time he began his cruise, giving notice thereof to the crew, and ordering a minute of it to be entered in the log-book, which was done. From the 14th of March, he continued cruising about the same latitude till the 17th or 18th of April; when he discontinued the cruise, of which he also gave notice, intending ing to go to the Burlings, off Lisbon, in the course of his voyage. On the 23d he renewed the cruise, of which he gave notice, as before, and ordered a minute, to that purpose, to be entered in the log-book. From that time he continued cruising till the 28th of April, when he was taken by an American privateer. Many witnesses were examined, some of whom thought, that the liberty of cruising, given by the policy, meant six successive weeks; others conceived, that if the separate times of cruising, when added together, should not exceed the space of six weeks, the terms of the insurance would be complied with: but none of them could prove any usage, as none of the witnesses ever knew a case exactly circumstanced like the present.

Lord Mansfield.—This was merely a question of construction, on the face of the policy, and unless an usage could have been shewn in favour of this desultory cruising, calling witnesses to support it, was calling them to swear to mere opinion. None of those produced knew of any instance; and, therefore, their evidence ought not to have been received. Yet, I dare say, their testimony had great weight with the jury. The meaning of words depends upon the subject. The instructions were not read, but they shew the meaning very clearly, for they run thus: "To cruise six weeks, and then proceed to Antigua." There can be no general rule. Here the subject matter, in my opinion, is decisive to shew, that the six weeks meant one continued period of time. A cruise is a well known expression for a connected portion of time. There are frequently articles for a month's cruise, a six weeks cruise, &c. Such a liberty, as in this case, to a letter of marque, is an excuse for a deviation. But what is contended for by the plaintiffs is impossible in practice. Suppose the ship returns directly back, cruising for the space of a week. She may then perhaps take three weeks to return to where she had been. Can she then renew the cruise, return again, and so repeatedly? The voyage, in that way, might last for years. But the true meaning is, "I will excuse a deviation for six weeks." The instructions, although it happens they were not read, strike me much. Another argument: Six weeks is a continuation, a congregate denomination of time. If they had meant separate days, they would have said forty-two days. The rule for a new trial was made absolute.

Having said thus much of construction in general, by which it appears, that the material rules to be adhered to, are the intention of the parties entering into the contract, and the usage of trade; it will be proper to consider more particularly, what shall be construed a loss within the meaning of the policy. This mode of treating the subject naturally leads us to consider losses by perils of the sea; losses by capture, and by detention of princes or people; and losses by the barratry of the master or mariners; which are the great divisions of perils insured, and which will furnish materials for the three following chapters.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

Of Losses by Perils of the Sea.

THE subject matter of this chapter may be reduced to a very small compass; as very few questions have ever been agitated in the English courts of law, upon this point. It may, in general, be said, that every thing which happens to a ship, in the course of her voyage, by the immediate act of God, without the intervention of human agency, is a peril of the sea.

Thus, in an insurance against perils of the sea, every accident happening by the violence of wind or waves, by thunder and lightning, by driving against rocks, by the stranding of the ship, or by any other violence which human prudence could not foresee, nor human strength resist, may be considered as a loss within the meaning of such a policy: and the insurer must answer for all damage sustained, in consequence of such accident. In cases where the loss is not total, but only partial, arising from a leak, from the stranding of the ship, or from the loss of her masts, cables, or rigging, the insurers upon the cargo are liable to restore the value of all the damaged goods, and the underwriter upon the ship is also answerable for all the injury which she has sustained.

1 Shower 323.
Roccus,
Not. 64.

1 Magens 52.
76.

In charter parties, if the vessel freighted was robbed or taken by pirates, that was held to be a loss within the meaning of the words "perils of the sea." It is also said, that the same rule of construction prevails as to policies of assurance. That possibly might, and would be the true construction upon those words: but as it is now the universal custom to insure against the attacks of pirates, by express words inserted in the policy, that question can now hardly arise.

2 Roll. Abr.
248. pl. 10.
Comberbatch
56.

Although the courts in this case, as in all others, will endeavour to give effect to this species of contract, by a liberal and equitable construction; yet they will be cautious not to extend the principle so far, as to say, that the acts of the parties shall be made to operate beyond their intention; and therefore they will attend to the words of the contract, and see, that the loss, which is proved to have happened, is really one of those risks against which the underwriter has insured.

An action was brought upon a policy of insurance for the value of certain slaves, insured by that policy. The declaration stated, "that by F 3 "perils

Gregson v.
Gilbert, B. R.
Easter.
23 Geo. 3.

“ perils of the sea, contrary winds, currents, and “ other misfortunes, the voyage was so much re“ tarded, that a sufficient quantity of water did “ not remain for the support of the slaves, and “ other people on board, and that certain of the “ slaves, mentioned in the declaration, perished “ for want of water.” The facts, appearing in evidence, were, that the ship, being bound from Guinea to Jamaica, had missed the island, and the crew were reduced to great distress for want of water: that the captain consulted with the crew, and it was unanimously agreed upon, that some of the slaves should be thrown overboard, in order to preserve the rest: that at the time this resolution was formed, there remained but one day’s full allowance of water, at two quarts per man. The jury, upon this evidence, found a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages at 30*l.*
 a head for every slave thrown overboard.

A motion was afterwards made for a new trial, upon the ground, that this was not a loss by perils of the sea.

Lord Mansfield.—This is a very uncommon case, and deserves a further consideration. There is great weight in the objection, that the loss is stated, by the declaration, to have arisen from perils of the sea, and that the currents, &c. had made the ship foul and leaky. Now does it appear by evidence, that the ship was foul and leaky? On the contrary, the loss happened by mistaking Jamaica for another place. Besides, a fact has been mentioned by the counsel of throwing some overboard after the rain fell, a fact, which is not agreed on by both sides, though a very material one.

Mr. Justice Buller.—The declaration does not, in any part of it, state the loss, which has been the occasion of this demand; and it would be very mischievous, if we were to overturn this objection. Suppose, for a moment, that the underwriters, in all cases, are liable for the mistake
 of

of the captain, it would be impossible for the defendant in this case to move in arrest of judgment; for the facts of the case, as proved, are different from those stated in the declaration. The point of law in arrest of judgment can only be argued from the facts stated on record; and the declaration in this case states the loss of the plaintiff to have happened by perils of the sea. The rule for a new trial was made absolute, on payment of costs.

If a ship has been missing, and no intelligence received of her within a reasonable time after she sailed, it shall be presumed that she has foundered at sea.

The ship Charming Peggy was insured in 1739, from North Carolina to London, with a warranty against captures and seizures; and in an action the loss was laid in the declaration to be by sinking at sea. All the evidence given was, that she sailed out of port on her intended voyage, and has never since been heard of. Several witnesses proved, that, in such a case, the presumption is, that she perished at sea, all other sorts of losses being generally heard of. It was insisted for the defendant, that as captures and seizures were excepted, it lay upon the plaintiff to prove, that the loss happened in the particular manner declared on. But Lord Chief Justice Lee said, it would be unreasonable to expect certain evidence of such a loss, where every body on board is presumed to be drowned: and all that can be required is the best proof the nature of the case admits of, which the plaintiff has given. He, therefore, left it to the jury, who found according to the plaintiff's declaration.

The same doctrine was held in a more modern case before Lord Mansfield. It was an action of covenant on a deed, in the nature of a policy of insurance, by which the defendants were bound to insure against any loss happening before the 30th of November, 1762, free from average. The Green v. Brown.

2 Stra. 1199.

Newby v. Read.
Sittings after Michaelmas.
3 Geo. 3.

ship sailed from Newcastle to Copenhagen, which is usually about ten days voyage. She was soon after taken by a French privateer, but ransomed; and she then proceeded on her voyage to Copenhagen, (as was proved by the ransomers) in a bad condition. She was never heard of afterwards, though all due diligence had been used; and several ships, which sailed after her, were proved to have arrived safe at Copenhagen.

Lord Mansfield told the jury, that this evidence was a sufficient ground to presume that she perished at sea, unless the contrary appeared. The jury accordingly found for the plaintiffs.

I have not been able to find any regulation in the law of England, or the usage of merchants, fixing a limited time, within which the assured may demand payment for his loss, in case no accounts arrive of the ship, upon which insurance is made. Indeed, from the nature of the thing, what shall be a reasonable time, in such cases, must always depend upon a variety of obvious circumstances. I understand, however, a practice has prevailed among insurers, which seems reasonable enough, that a ship shall be deemed lost, if not heard of in six months after her departure, (or after the time of the last intelligence from her) for any part of Europe; and in twelve months, if for a greater distance. The only objection to such a practice is, that the latter period does not seem sufficient in India voyages. However, that is a matter for the insurer's consideration; and even if he should pay the money under a mistake, supposing the ship lost, when it really is not, he might, as we shall see hereafter, if the insured were unwilling to refund, recover it back, in an action for money had and received to his use.

Salk. 22.

Vide Post,
chap. 20.

In Spain and France, this matter, however, is not left to uncertainty; but the time, within which such losses may be demanded, is fixed and ascertained by express regulations. By the ordinances

2 Magons 33.

nances of the former, if any ship insured on going to, or coming from the Indies, is not heard of in a year and a half after her departure from the port where she loaded, it is declared that she is, and shall be deemed lost; by those of the latter it is said, that if the insured receive no news of his ship, he may, at the expiration of a year for common voyages, reckoning from the day of the departure, and after two years for those at a greater distance, make his cession to the underwriters, and demand payment, without being obliged to produce any certificate of the loss.

2 Magens
177.
Ord. of Lewis 14.
L. 31. art. 58.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

Of Losses by Capture and Detention of Princes.

CAPTURE, as applied to the subject of marine insurances, may be said to be a taking of the ships or goods belonging to the subjects of one country, by those of another, when in a state of public war. What shall be considered as a capture, so as to render an insurer liable under a policy, insuring against captures, has now become a question of very little difficulty.

The law upon this subject is perfectly settled in England, between the insurer and the insured; and it is this, that the ship is to be considered as lost by the capture, though she be never condemned at all, nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy: and the insurer must pay the value. If, after a condemnation, the owner recover or retake her, the insurer can be in no other condition, than if she had been retaken or recovered

2 Burr. 694.
1st Point in Goss v. Withers.

recovered before condemnation. The insurer runs the risk of the insured, and undertakes to indemnify; he must, therefore, bear the loss, actually sustained, and can be liable to no more. So that if, after condemnation, the owner recovers the ship in her complete condition, but has paid salvage, or been at any expence in getting her back, the insurer must pay the loss so actually sustained. No capture by the enemy can be so total a loss, as to leave no possibility of a recovery. If the owner himself should retake at any time, he will be intitled; and by a late act of parliament, if an English ship retake the vessel captured, either before or after condemnation, the owner is intitled to restitution upon stated salvage. This chance does not, however, suspend the demand for a total loss upon the insurer: but justice is done, by putting him in the place of the insured, in case of a recapture.

Rocci Selecta
responsa.

Resp. 34.

2 Burr. 683.

These principles, which are agreeable to the ideas of foreign writers, were settled by Lord Mansfield, and the whole court of King's Bench, in Goss against Witbers, (which will be cited at length when we come to treat of abandonment) and which have never since been disputed. It has likewise been held, that where a capture has been made, whether it be legal or not, the insurers are liable for the charges of a compromise made, bonâ fide, to prevent the ship from being condemned as prize. It is true, the only case I have been able to find to this point is a nisi prius note; but when we consider the high authority, from which this doctrine is taken, and that the thing in itself is not at all repugnant to the general principles of the law of insurance, it certainly has a claim to our attention.

Berens v.

Rucker.

1 Black. 313.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on a Dutch ship, called the Tyd, and it's cargo, at and from Saint Eustatius to Amsterdam, warranted a Dutch ship, and the goods Dutch property, and not laden in any French port in the West Indies.

The

The cargo was worth 12,000*l.* and was insured at a premium of fifteen guineas per cent. which was advanced to this high rate, on account of the number of captures, made by the English, of neutral vessels, on suspicion of illicit trade, and the detention of those vessels, by the proceedings in the courts of Admiralty. The defendant underwrote 82*l.* of the plaintiff's, for a premium of 12*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* In May 1758, the ship was at Saint Eustatius, taking in her cargo, which consisted of sugar and indigo, and other French commodities, which were put on board her, partly out of barks from sea, partly from the shore of the island. On the 18th of June, 1758, she sailed on her voyage; on the 27th she was taken by an English privateer, and carried into Portsmouth. On the 1st of August, the sailors were examined upon the standing interrogatories, prescribed by the statute 29 Geo. 2. c. 34. and the captain entered his claim in the Admiralty court. In October 1758, the claimants were cited to specify what part of the goods was taken from the shore of Saint Eustatius, and what from the barks. Citation was continued from court to court till February 1759, when an interlocutory decree was pronounced for the contumacy of the claimants in not specifying, and that therefore the goods should be presumed French property. There was an appeal to the lords commissioners of prizes: but as many causes stood before it, as the market was very high, and as the cargo was in part perishable, the agent of the owners agreed with the captors, to give them 800*l.* and costs, to obtain the reversal of the sentence. The reversal was had by consent, and, in order to give costs to the captor, it was decreed by consent, that there was a sufficient cause for seizure; and thereupon costs were decreed to the captors, and restitution of the cargo to the owners was also ordered. The ship, when restored, proceeded to Amsterdam; and after her arrival there, the Chamber of Insurances in that city settled the average of the plaintiff towards the loss and expences at 14*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* occasioned by the capture, detention and litigation; and for this sum the action was brought.
of

Lord Mansfield.—The first question is, whether this was a just capture? Both sentences are out of the case, being done and undone by consent. The capture was certainly unjust. The pretence was, that part of this cargo was put on board off Saint Eustatius, out of barks, supposed to come from the French islands, and not loaded immediately from the shore. This is now a settled point by the Lords of Appeal, to be the same thing as if they had been landed on the Dutch shore, and then put on board afterwards; in which case there is no colour for seizure. The rule is, that if a neutral ship trade to a French colony, with all the privileges of a French ship, and is thus adopted and naturalized, it must be looked upon as a French ship, and is liable to be taken. Not so, if she have only French produce on board, without taking it in at a French port; for it may be purchased of neutrals.

Second question is, whether the owners have acted bona fide, and uprightly, as men acting for themselves, and upon a reasonable footing; so as to make the expences of this compromise a loss to be borne by the insurers. The order of the judge of the Admiralty to specify was illegal, contrary to the marine law and the act of parliament, which is only declaratory of the marine law; because if they had specified, it could be of no consequence, according to the rule I before mentioned. The captors were, however, in possession of a sentence, though an unjust one: and a court of appeal cannot, or seldom does, upon a reversal, give costs or damages, which have accrued subsequent to the original sentence; for these damages arise from the fault of the judge, not of the parties. Under all these circumstances, there-therefore, the owners did wisely to offer a compromise. The cargo was worth 12,000 l. the appeal was hazardous; the delay certain. The Dutch deputy in England negotiated the compromise; the Chamber of Commerce at Amsterdam ratified it, and thought it reasonable. Had the whole sentence been totally reversed, the costs must have sat heavy on the owners. I therefore think the insurers liable to answer this average loss, which was submitted to, in order to avoid a total one. The jury found for the plaintiff, agreeably to the above direction.

But though the law upon this subject is so clearly defined, that at this day it seems almost impossible to raise a question, yet it formerly occasioned much doubt and litigation, what effect a recapture might have upon this kind of contract; and how long it was necessary for goods to remain in the hands of the enemy, in order to divest the original proprietor of his property in case of a recapture.

All these doubts are now entirely removed, and can never again be agitated in this country, between an insurer and insured; Lord Mansfield, for himself and his brethren, having declared, in giving judgment in Goss v. Withers, that these questions could never have been started in policies upon real interest, because, as we have seen, they never could have varied the case. But wager policies gave rise to them; for it was necessary to set up a total loss, as between third persons, for the purpose of their wager, though in fact the ship was safe, and restored to the owner. His Lordship laid down the same doctrine in Hamilton v. Mendez; the consequence of which is, that as wager policies are now expressly prohibited by statute, these questions can never arise upon a policy of insurance.

2 Burr. 695.

Vide begin.
of this Chap.

2 Burr. 1198.

19 Geo. 2.

c. 37.

The only two possible cases, in which they can be material, are: 1st. Between the owner and a neutral person who has bought the capture from the

2 Burr. 693.

the

the enemy : and 2dly, Between the owner and recaptor : But whatever rule ought to be followed, in favour of the owner, against a recaptor or vendee, it can no way affect the insurance, between the insurer and insured.

Notwithstanding this point is now, as far as relates to our present enquiry, no longer a subject of uncertainty, it cannot but afford pleasure to the mind, and, I trust, it will not be considered as impertinent, to trace the opinion of foreign writers upon this question, and to state briefly several cases which have been decided in our courts of law here, upon capture and recapture, previous to the statute of 19 Geo. 2.

It seems to be generally agreed by foreign writers, that it is not every taking and subsequent possession under that taking, which will constitute a capture in the legal sense of the word, or make it become the property of the captor ; but that there must be a firm possession. In this they all agree ; but what shall be such a possession, as to vest the absolute property in the captor, is so much a matter of doubt, that it is difficult to find two writers of the same opinion. Upon this subject, various lines have been drawn by arbitrary rules, partly from policy, to prevent too easy dispositions to neutrals ; and partly from equity, to extend the jus postliminii in favour of the owner. And it is not to be wondered at, that there is so great an uncertainty and variety of notions amongst the writers on this subject, about fixing a positive boundary by the mere force of reason, where the subject matter is arbitrary, and not the object of reason alone.

Grotius de
jure belli,
lib. 3. c. 6.
f. 3.

Grotius is of opinion, that the captor shall be said to have the property in him, as soon as the former owner shall have lost the hope of recovery, and the ability to pursue, and that property shall then be said to be taken, when it is brought within the enemy's fortrefs. Whence it follows as a consequence, that in marine captures, the

the capture shall be deemed complete, when the ships or goods taken shall be brought within the harbours or ports of the enemy, or to that place where their whole fleet is stationed; for then the recovery may be despaired of. But by a more recent law introduced among the European nations, it seems, that, that only is deemed a capture, which has been twenty-four hours in the possession of the captor. The former part of this opinion, I find, was adopted in a case in March's Reports, where it is said, that the property is not altered, unless it be brought infra prasidia of the enemy: and some nations have made twenty-four hours quiet possession by the enemy, the criterion of their judgment. Thus by the ordinances of Lewis the Fourteenth it is declared, that if any of the ships of French subjects be retaken from their enemies, after having been twenty-four hours in their hands, they shall be good prize; and if it be before twenty-four hours, they shall be restored to the owners, with all that is in them, and one third shall be given to the ship that retakes them. Bynkershoek, however, states the opinion of Grotius, controverts it with much ability, and seems to think, that the spes recuperandi is the ground on which the question is to be decided. He mentions the opinion of some writers, who think, that it is necessary for the ship to have arrived in the enemy's port, to have been condemned, to have sailed out again; and arrived in a friend's port, before the property can be said to be changed. Roccus rather states the various opinions of others, than asserts one of his own; but he seems to lean to the idea, that it is necessary to bring the ship within the confines of the captor, and to keep it there a night in safe custody. But as was said by Lord Mansfield, all these circumstances are very arbitrary, and therefore are generally exploded.

By the marine law of England, as practised in the court of Admiralty, previous to the passing of any March 110.

Ord. of Lew.
f. 34. art. 8.

Bynkershoek
quæst. publ.
juris, lib. 1.
c. 4.

Roccus Not.
66.
2 Black.
Com. 401.

2 Burr. 694.

2 Burr. 694.

any act of parliament, which commanded restitution, or fixed the rate of salvage, it was held, that the property was not changed so as to bar the owner, in favour of a vendee or recaptor, till there had been a sentence of condemnation. Agreeably to this principle, judgment was given in that court, decreeing restitution of a ship retaken by a privateer, though she had been fourteen weeks in the enemy's possession. Another case also, upon the same principle, was decided against the vendee after a long possession, two sales, and several voyages.

Thus stands the marine law of England, by which it appears, that the jus postliminii continues till condemnation, which, by the act of parliament, about to be quoted, is extended, and now continues for ever.

29 Geo. 2.
c. 34. s. 24.

It is enacted, and a similar provision had been made by the 13th of George the Second, chap. 4.
 “ That if any ship, vessel, or boat, taken as “ prize, or any goods therein, shall appear, and “ be proved in the Admiralty court, to have be“ longed to any of his majesty's subjects, which “ were before taken by any of his majesty's enemies “ and at any time afterwards retaken by any of “ his majesty's ships of war, or any private man “ of war, or other ship, vessel, or boat, under “ his majesty's protection and obedience, that “ then such ships, vessels, boats, and goods, “ shall in all cases be adjudged to be restored, and “ shall be, by decree of the said court of Admi“ ralty, accordingly restored to the former owners, “ they paying in lieu of salvage, if retaken from
 “ the enemy by one of his majesty's ships of war,
 “ one eighth part of the true value of the pro“ perty restored: and if retaken by a privateer, “ or other ship, before it has been in the pos“ session of the enemy twenty-four hours, one-“ eighth part of the true value of such goods;
 “ and if it has been in the possession of the ene“ my above twenty-four, and under forty-eight “ hours,

“ hours, a fifth part thereof; and if above forty-“ eight and under ninety-six hours, a third part “ thereof; and if above ninety-six hours, a moiety “ thereof; all which payments are to be made to “ any privateer or other ship, without any deduc-“ tion: and if such ship, so retaken, shall appear to “ have been set forth by the enemy, as a man of “ war, the former owners shall pay for salvage a “ moiety of the true value upon the recovery “ thereof.”

From hence it is clear, that by the marine law received and practised in England, there is no change of property, in case of a capture, before condemnation, and that now by the act of parliament just recited in case of a recapture, the jus postliminii continues for ever. However, as has been already said, the change of property is not at all material as between the insurer and insured, upon policies of real interest, which are the only policies that can now by law be effected.

I proceed then to state the cases, which were determined upon this point, on wager policies, previous to the act of parliament, prohibiting such insurances.

The first case is one in the 10th year of Queen Anne's reign, in which the facts upon a special verdict appeared to be, that the plaintiff had insured a certain sum of money upon a ship, called the Rush, in a certain voyage, in which ship the plaintiff was found not to be at all interested. It happened that this ship was taken by the enemy, and kept in their possession for nine days, and then before it was carried infra præsidia, it was retaken by an English man of war. Upon these facts, the question was, whether or not this was such a taking as should enable the plaintiff to recover the sum insured against the defendant.

Affievedo v. Cambridge.
 10 Mod. 77.

After argument, the court seemed to think (but a second argument was ordered, which does not appear from any reporter ever to have been made.) that the defendant was intitled to judgment.

G

Upon

2 Burr. 695.

Upon this case Lord Mansfield has observed, that the man of war, which retook the ship, brought her into the port of London, and restored her to the owner upon reasonable redemption; that this appears from the special verdict, although it is not stated in the printed case; and then, as the owner did not abandon the ship, he could only have come upon the insurers for the redemption; and no question could have arisen upon the change of property. Besides, the policy being interest or no interest, without benefit of salvage, the question arose upon the terms and meaning of the wager. But that case was not determined.

Depaiba v.
Ludlow.
Comyn's
Rep. 360.

This also was an action of assumpsit on a policy of insurance, where the defendant insured the plaintiff, interest or no interest, against all enemies, pirates, takings at sea, and all other damages whatsoever. And upon trial it appeared, that the ship was taken by a pirate of Sweden, and was in his possession for nine days, and was then retaken by an English man of war, and after the suit commenced, was brought into Harwich. The question was, whether, in such a case, the defendant was responsible.

It was determined for the plaintiff. But although it was objected, that the insurer was only responsible, where the plaintiff had a property, and that the term of insuring, interest or no interest, was introduced since the Revolution; yet it was said, that such insurance was good, and the import of it is, that the plaintiff has no occasion to prove his interest, and that the defendant cannot controvert it. And though the ship was here retaken, yet the plaintiff received a damage, for his voyage was interrupted; and the question is not, whether the plaintiff had his ship, and did not lose his property, but what damage he sustained.

2 Burr. 695.

Lord Mansfield has also observed upon this case, that it was a wager policy, and the property could could not be changed, for there was then no war or declaration of war; that the court held, that as the ship was once taken in fact, the event had happened, though she was afterwards recovered. His Lordship said, that the same observations were applicable to the case of Pond v. King.

That was an action on a policy of insurance upon the Salamander privateer (of which the plaintiff was part owner) from the Downs to any port or place where she should sail for three months from the 1st of December, 1744, interest or no interest, free from average, and without benefit of salvage; the insurance was against such perils as are usually mentioned in policies: the breach assigned is, that the Salamander was taken by a French ship of war within the three months, and was wholly lost, whereby she could not prosecute her voyage or cruise. The jury found a special verdict, stating, that the Salamander was taken by a French ship of war within the three months; that 117 of her men were taken out of her, and carried into France, and her guns taken out, and that she remained in the possession of the enemy from four o'clock in the afternoon of the 2d of February till five o'clock in the afternoon of the 5th of February; that before she was carried into any port, she was retaken by an English privateer, and by the captain of the privateer kept eight days upon the high seas without failing, and at the end of eight days the captain of the privateer took a French prize, and, together with her and the Salamander, endeavoured to come into some English port, but the wind not permitting, he carried them into Lisbon: that the Salamander remains there for the benefit of those to whom she belongs; that the plaintiff is interested, exceeding the sum insured; that the ship was prevented from finishing her three months cruise by the capture, but that she was a living ship at the end of three months: that Lisbon is a neutral port; that the master of the privateer obtained a decree

Pond v. King.
1 Wils. 191.
and Lex
Merc. red.
4th edit. 302.

in the court of Admiralty at Gibraltar, that the ship should be restored to the owners, on payment of one third part for salvage.

Lord Chief Justice Lee, after two arguments, delivered the unanimous opinion of the whole court: The question is, whether the capture of this ship, which was never carried infra præsidia hostis before she was retaken, and upon the matter as found by the verdict, shall be considered as a total loss, so as to entitle the insured to recover the whole sum insured. And although by the civil law it may not perhaps be adjudged a total loss, yet the rules of that law are not to govern us, but we must give our judgment, according to the common law of England, and upon this agreement between the parties, whose intention appears, and must guide us. By the civil law, there must be a total loss to entitle the assured to recover, but the policy in this case extends to captures and other accidents. The meaning of the parties here is plain; the insured paid his premium in consideration of the insurer's undertaking, that the Salamander should cruise safely during three months; the jury have found that she was disabled from prosecuting her cruise for three months. We are all of opinion for the plaintiff, and that this is not an average, but a total loss to the insured: the insurance is to be understood for the voyage of three months, and in common sense it cannot be otherwise; so that as soon as the voyage is broken or interrupted, it is at an end. Safety during the three months is what is meant; but it appears that the ship was taken and detained within that time, and that the plaintiff was hindered in his cruise; and this, by our law, is a total loss to the plaintiff. I have avoided saying any thing whether this was a prize or not, as being never carried infra præsidia hostis, because we are all of opinion, that this is a total loss. Judgment for the plaintiff.

In

In the case of Spencer v. Franco, the plaintiff had caused himself to be insured on the Prince Frederick, from Vera Cruz to London, interest or no interest, free of average, and without benefit of salvage. The ship was afterwards seized by order of the viceroy of Mexico, and the Spaniards turned her into a man of war, called the Saint Philip, and sent her as commodore, with a squadron of Spanish men of war, to the Havannah, they having first taken out the South Sea company's arms, and made several alterations in her, and there was a war between England and Spain, and Gibraltar was actually besieged by the Spaniards. The defendants proved the signing of preliminary articles of peace before the seizure of the ship, and therefore insisted, that this seizure did not alter the property, and consequently the defendants were not liable: for if the property was not altered, this insurance made by the plaintiff, who had no interest, cannot bind, as nothing comes within the policy but a total loss: and though there be those general words in the policy, restraint, or detainment of princes, Lord Chief Justice Hardwicke declared, that a war might begin without an actual declaration or proclamation, as in this case, by laying siege to Gibraltar, a garrison town; that as a war may begin by hostilities only, so it may end by a cessation of arms; and these preliminary articles being signed before the seizure of the ship, and there being a cessation of arms, he thought the ship being taken afterwards, not to be a taking by enemies, unless the jury took the caption to begin from the time the South Sea arms were seized, which was before the articles: that supposing the ship not taken by enemies, whether his detention for near the space of a year was, in this sort of policies, viz. interest or no interest, a detention within the policy; or whether in such policies the insurers are ever liable, but in case of a total loss; and if so, this ship being afterwards restored,

Spencer v. Franco,
cor. Lord
Hardwicke,
Dec. 1736.
Lex. Merc.
red. 4th edit.
316.

then he directed the jury to find for the defendants, which they accordingly did.

Dean v.
Dicker.
2 Stra. 1250.

In another case, the insurance was on goods by the Dursley galley, interest or no interest, at and from Jamaica to Bristol. In her passage she was taken by a Spanish privateer, and carried into Mores, a port in Spain, kept eight days, and then cut out by an English ship. The plaintiff insisted, that this insurance, though on goods, was to be considered as a wager on the bottom of the ship; and therefore brought his action for a total loss. The defendant said, that by the stat. of 13 Geo. 2. c. 4. the ship is to be restored to the owners upon paying salvage, and consequently this is only an average loss; and the plaintiff can only recover upon a total one. Lord Chief Justice Lee held, that the plaintiff ought to recover: for this is a wager upon a total loss in the voyage, and here has happened one; for being carried into port and detained eight days makes one. Where the policy is, "interest or no interest," the provisions of the act in cases of valued policies cannot take place. The act does not declare that the property is not gone by such a capture, but only provides for restoring the ship to whom it did, and shall be proved to have belonged. He said, it might be otherwise, where the ship was recaptured, before it was carried infra presidia, or in case of goods actually on board, and upon a valued policy.

Whitehead
v. Bance.
B. R. Mich
1749.

An insurance was made on the Dispatch galley, interest or no interest, free of average, &c. from Jamaica to Hull. In her voyage she was taken by a French privateer, and carried to Hamburg, and after being twelve days in the hands of the enemy, she was retaken by an English ship, and brought to London; where she was adjudged to be restored to the owner, paying salvage. The owner sold the ship, and paid the salvage. An action being brought on the policy, it was held to be a loss of the voyage; and a verdict was given accordingly.

These

These cases have been laid before the reader, without any comments, except such as have occurred from time to time to Lord Mansfield, as he has had occasion to mention them; and it was the less necessary to observe upon each particular case, as one general observation is applicable to all, namely, that they were not policies upon real interest. Let it suffice then to repeat, that, at this day, in cases of capture, the underwriter is immediately responsible to the insured. But, if the ship be recovered before a demand for indemnity, the insurer is only liable for the amount of the loss actually sustained at the time of the demand: or if the ship be restored at any time subsequent to the payment by the underwriter, he shall then stand in the place of the insured, and receive all the benefits and advantages resulting from such restitution. All these regulations certainly have their foundation in the great principles of equity and justice; an observation which must be obvious to every one who recollects, that a policy of insurance is nothing more than a contract of indemnity.

Having thus endeavoured to explain the nature of captures by an enemy, as far as they affect the subject of insurances, I proceed now to treat of losses arising from another species of capture, namely, by detention; a part of our enquiry which will not demand a long or tedious discussion. The underwriter, by the express terms of his contract, is answerable for all loss or damage arising to the insured, "by the arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality whatsoever."

The only question then is, what shall be considered as such detention: And indeed the words used are so large and comprehensive, as hardly to admit of a doubt even upon that head. The learned Roccus is of opinion, "ut si merces capta assess Not. 54.

Roccus de

"a potestate, seu iudice iustitiam administrante in

Not. 65.

“ illo loco, aut a populo, aut ab aliâ quâcunque “ personâ per vim, absque pretii solutione, tenentur “ affecutores solvere estimationem dominis mer“ cium, factâ prius per dominos mercium cessione ad “ beneficium affecutorum pro recuperandis illis mer“ cibus, vel pretio ipsorum a capientibus.” In another place he says, “ Regis & principis factum “ connumeratur inter casus fortuitos; ideo si rex et “ princeps retineant navem oneratam frumento ex “ causâ penuriæ, quapropter navis non potuerit fru“ menta asportare ad locum destinatum, tenentur af“ fecutores.”

Malynes 110.

2 Burr. 696.

Malynes lays down the law to be, that the insurers are liable for all losses by arrests, detainments, &c. happening both in time of war and peace, committed by the public authority of princes. And Lord Mansfield has said, that the insured may abandon in case merely of an arrest or embargo by a prince, not an enemy; and consequently such an arrest is a loss within the meaning of the word detention.

Lex Merc.
 red. 4th edit.
 269.

An embargo is an arrest laid on ships or merchandize by publick authority, or a prohibition of state commonly issued to prevent foreign ships from putting to sea in time of war, and sometimes also to exclude them from entering our ports.
 This term has also a more extensive signification, for ships are frequently detained to serve a prince in an expedition, and for this end have their loading taken out, without any regard to the colours they bear, or the princes to whose subjects they belong. The legality of such a measure has been doubted by some, but it is certainly conformable to the law of nations, for a prince in distress to make use of whatever vessels he finds in his ports; that may contribute to the success of his enterprize. Embargoes laid on shipping in the ports of Great Britain, by royal proclamation, in time of war, are strictly legal, and will be equally binding, as an act of parliament, because such a proclamation is founded on a prior law, namely,

Grot. de jure
 belli, lib. 2.
 cap. 2. §. 10.

1 Black. Com.
 270.

that the king may prohibit any of his subjects from leaving the realm. But in times of peace the power of the king of Great Britain to lay such restraints is doubtful; and therefore where such a proclamation issued in the year 1766, although absolutely necessary for the prevention of a dearth in this country, it was necessary to procure an act of the legislature to indemnify those who advised, or who acted under, that proclamation. But to return to our subject. 7 Geo. 3. c. 7.

In case of detention by a foreign power, which in time of war may have seized a ship at sea, and carried it into port to be searched for enemy's property, all the charges consequent thereon must be borne by the underwriter: and whatever costs may arise from an improper detention, must always fall upon them. 1 Magens. 67.

This was held by Willes, Ashurst, and Butler, justices, in the absence of Lord Mansfield, in a case, the circumstances of which are as follows; It was an insurance on the ship Thetis, a neutral ship; and upon the trial, a special case was reserved for the opinion of the court, stating: that the plaintiffs were Tuscan subjects, resident at Leghorn, sole owners of the ship Thetis, which sailed from Leghorn, and was captured by a Spanish ship off the coast of Barbary, with neutral goods on board, consigned to London. She was condemned as prize in the court of Vice Admiralty in Spain, which sentence was reversed; but upon another appeal to a superior court, the latter sentence was also reversed, and the former confirmed. The grounds of condemnation were two: 1st. That the ship Thetis refused to be searched, and resisted with force, having fired at the Spanish ship: 2dly. That she had no charter party on board. The captain of the Thetis answered these two grounds: 1st. that he resisted and fired, because the Spaniard hailed him under false colours: 2dly. that he had taken the goods on board by the piece, and had not freighted his ship Saloucci v. Johnson.
B. R. Hil.
25 Geo. 3.

ship to any individual; in which case a manifesto was sufficient without a charter party. The sentence of the last court of appeal, although it condemns, admits the neutrality, for it states the vessel to be "a Tuscan ship." The last ground relative to the charter party was not insisted upon. Upon the other, the three learned judges above mentioned were of opinion, that a neutral ship is not obliged to stop to be searched; that the captain had not been guilty of barratry; that the searcher stops a neutral ship at his peril; that this was to be considered as a case of improper detention, and consequently that the plaintiff upon this policy was entitled to recover.

But though an underwriter is liable for all damage arising to the owner of the ship or goods from the restraint or detention of princes, yet that rule shall not be extended to cases where the insured shall navigate against the laws of those countries, in the ports of which he may chance to be detained, or to cases where there shall be a seizure for non-payment of customs. This was so ruled by Lord Commissioner Hutchins in Chancery, in the year 1690: and the reason of it is obvious, because there is a gross fraud on the part of the owner of the property insured; and no man shall take advantage of his own misconduct. If indeed any of those acts were committed by the master of the ship, without the knowledge of the insured, the underwriter would be liable, if not for losses by detention, at least for a loss by the barratry of the master, to which such conduct would most certainly amount.

Vide the next chapter.

It appears to have been a question, whether the insurers were liable for the payment of damage arising by the detention or seizure of ships by the government of the country, to which they belong. I have only been able to find one common law case where this point was expressly in issue, and that was not decided.

In

In evidence upon the trial in an action upon a policy of insurance, the case appeared to be, that the insurers agreed to insure the ship from her arrival at — in Jamaica during her voyage to London; and an embargo was laid upon the ship by the government; who afterwards seized the ship, converted her into a fireship, and offered to pay the owners. The question was, if this would excuse the insurers? Holt, Chief Justice, seemed to incline, that it would not, and that this was within the words, detention of princes, &c. but he gave no absolute opinion, the cause having been referred to three of the jury.

Green v. Young.
2 Ld. Raym.
840.
2 Salk. 444.

The very general words made use of in policies go to support the idea entertained by Lord Holt, and although I have found no case where this point was expressly considered, yet it seems to have been taken as settled in many cases, which have come before the court. One instance immediately occurs, in the case of Robertson v. Ewer, which was cited in a former chapter. There an embargo had been laid by Lord Hood on all shipping at Barbadoes; and it never was doubted that the insurer was liable for any loss which might have been sustained by such detention, provided the loss had happened to any of the property specifically insured. It is true, that it is declared by the ordinances of France, “that if any ship be stopped by our orders in any of the ports of our kingdom before the voyage be begun, the insured shall not, on account of this detention, abandon or cede their effects to the insurers.” A similar regulation is to be found in Bilboa, by which it is ordained, “that if any ship or ships insured, with or without goods, shall be detained by his majesty’s order, in the ports of these kingdoms of Spain, before the commencement of the voyage she is bound on, it shall be judged that no cession can be made of them, but rather the insurance in such case ought to be held null.” If these ordinances, when 176.

Vide ante p.
61.

2 Magna

2 Magna
417.

when they use the words, "commencement of the voyage," mean commencement of the risk insured, they are certainly right; because the underwriter can never be answerable for any thing happening before that period: but surely when the risk insured is "at and from," if the ship be detained by the order of the sovereign before her departure for the voyage, but after the risk commenced, the insurer is liable for the damage occasioned by such detention, as the words in the policy do in themselves import no restriction to restraints and embargoes by foreign potentates only.

§ Mageas
175. 416.

‡ Magens 23.

By what has been said it appears, that before the insured can recover against the underwriter in cases of detention, he must first abandon to the insurers his right, and whatever claims he may have to the goods insured. This point will be fully treated of in the chapter of abandonment. It will be sufficient here to remark, that in most of the countries on the continent, the time for abandonment in such cases is fixed to a limited period after the event has happened. In Bilboa and France the cession must be made within six months, if the loss has happened in any part of Europe; and within a year, if in a more distant country. A similar regulation as to time is established by the ordinances of Middleburg in Zealand. By the law of England, there is no positive rule on this subject, consequently an insured has a right to abandon immediately upon hearing of the detention. But it should seem, that in order to prevent the underwriters from being harassed, the insured ought to make his election, whether he will abandon or not, within a reasonable time; and what that shall be, must in general depend upon the circumstances of the case.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

Of Losses by the Barratry of the Master or Mariners.

IT does not seem to have been any where precisely ascertained, from what source the term barratry has been derived.

Indeed the derivations of barratry have rather tended to confound, than to throw any light upon the subject: for its root has been so frequently altered, according to the caprice of the particular writer, that it is impossible to decide which is the true one. The English, however, most probably have taken it from the French, barrateur, which is to be traced to the Italians: but where the latter found this word is a thing by no means clear.

Whatever the derivation may be, the word Cowp. 154. seems to have been originally introduced into commercial affairs by the Italians, who were the first great traders of the modern world. In the Italian dictionary, the word barratrare means to cheat; and whatsoever is done by the master amounting to a cheat, a fraud, a cozening, or a trick, is barratry in him. Postlethwaite, in his dictionary of trade and commerce, defines barratry thus: "barratry is committed when the 1 vol. p. 214.
 " master of the ship, or the mariners, cheat the " owners, or insurers, whether it be by running " away with the ship, sinking her, deserting her,
 " or embezzling the cargo." In another place, the same author observes, "one species of bar- 1 vol. 136.
 " ratry in a marine sense is, when the master of " a ship defrauds the owners or insurers, by car" rying a ship a course different from their or" ders." These definitions are so very comprehensive, that they seem to take in every case of barratry, known to the law of England, as far as we

1 Stra. 581.

2 Stra. 1173.

Cowp. 143.

Term Rep.

323.

we can collect the principles from the several cases that have been decided. From a review of those cases, and they are but few, it appears, that any act of the master, or of the mariners, which is of a criminal nature, or which is grossly negligent, tending to their own benefit, to the prejudice of the owners of the ship, without their consent or privity, is barratry.

Cowp. 155.

It is not necessary, in order to entitle the insurer to recover for barratry, that the loss should happen in the act of barratry; that is, it is immaterial, whether it take place during the fraudulent voyage, or after the ship has returned to the regular course; for the moment the ship is carried from its right track with an evil intent, barratry is committed.

Lockyer v. Offley.

Term Rep.

for Easter,

26 Geo. 3.

p. 252.

Vide ante

ch. 2. p. 34.

But the loss, in consequence of the act of barratry, must happen during the voyage insured, and within the time limited by the policy, otherwise the underwriters are discharged. Thus, if the captain be guilty of barratry by smuggling, and the ship afterwards arrive at the port of destination, and be there moored at anchor twenty-four hours in good safety; the underwriters are not liable, if, after this, she should be seized for that act of smuggling.

From the above descriptions of barratry, it will appear, that if the act of the captain be done with a view to the benefit of his owners, and not to advance his own private interest, no barratry has been committed. I have said, that to constitute barratry, it must be without the knowledge or consent of the owners; because nothing can be so clear as this, that no man can complain of an act done, to which he himself is a party. But it is material to consider, in what sense the word owner is to be understood, in this definition. It has been argued, that if A. be the owner of a ship, and let it out to B. as freighter, who insures it for the voyage; and if the deviation be with the knowledge of A. though unknown known to B. the insurer is discharged. But the court over-ruled that argument, and said, that, in order to discharge the insurer from the loss by barratry, it must appear, that the act done was by the consent, or with the privity of the owner, pro hac vice, that is, the freighter, the person insured.

Cowper 154.

These principles being advanced, it will now be sufficient to shew that they are supported and established by the cases which have been decided. But before they are quoted, it will be proper to observe, that by the positive regulations of Middle- 2 Magens 73 burg, Amsterdam, Hamburgh, and other countries 130. 215.
in Europe, the underwriters are universally held to be answerable for losses arising by the barratry of the master or mariners. By the ordinances of 2 Magens 89.
Rotterdam, the owners of ships are prohibited from making insurances against the barratry of the masters, whom they themselves shall appoint; but they may insure against their neglect, and also against the villainy of the sailors, and of such masters, as may happen to succeed to the command of the ship in foreign parts, without the knowledge of the owners, on account of the decease or absence of the master originally appointed. No such rule prevails in the law of England; but the insurer undertakes generally and by express words inserted in the policy, to indemnify the owner of the ship or cargo against all losses which he may happen to sustain by the barratry of the master or mariners, even though the master should have been appointed by himself: a circumstance which is rather singular, for the insurer to undertake for the conduct of a man whom he can neither appoint nor dismiss.

In an action upon the case on a policy of insurance, on the ship Riga Merchant, “at and from Knight v. Cambridge.
“Port Mabon to London, against the barratry of 2 Ld. Raym. 1349.
“the master (among other things), and all other 1 Stra. 581.
“dangers, damages and misfortunes which “should happen to the prejudice and damage of
“the

OF LOSSES BY THE BARRATRY

“the said ship,” the breach assigned in the declaration was the loss of the ship “by the fraud and negligence” of the master. The plaintiff had judgment in the court of Common Pleas. The defendant brought a writ of error, and it was contended by his counsel, that the words “fraud and negligence,” used in the declaration, were more general than the word barratry; and, that the breach should have been express, that the ship was lost by the barratry of the master: that if the word barratry do import fraud, yet it does not import neglect; and the fact here alledged is, that the ship was lost by the fraud and negligence of the master.

But the court were unanimously of opinion, that there was no occasion to aver the fact in the very words of the policy; but that if the fact alledged came within the meaning of the words in the policy, it would be sufficient. Barratry imports fraud; and he, that commits a fraud, may properly be said to be guilty of a neglect, viz. of his duty. Barratry of a master is not to be confined to the master's running away with the ship; but it extends to any fraud of the master. The end of insuring is to be safe in all events; and, it would be very prejudicial if we were to make loopholes to get out of these policies. The judgment was affirmed.

Stamma v.
Brown.
2 Stra. 1173.

In another case, the ship the Gotbick Lyon being advertised to go to Marseilles, goods were shipped on board her on behalf of the plaintiff; and a bill of lading was signed by the master, whereby he undertook to go straight to Mar-seilles, and the defendant underwrote a policy from Falmouth (where the goods were taken in,) to Marseilles. Before the ship departed from the port of London, another advertisement was published for goods to Genoa, Leghorn, and Naples; and the plaintiff's agent was told, that it was intended to go to those ports first, and then come back back to Marseilles; but he insisted that his bargain was to go directly to Marseilles; and, he would not consent to let her pass by Marseilles, or alter his insurance.

The ship, however, did pass by Marseilles; and after delivering her cargo at the other ports, set out on her return for Marseilles with the plaintiff's goods; but in her voyage thither, was blown up in an engagement with a Spanish ship. In an action upon the policy, the breach assigned was a loss by the barratry of the master.

Lord Chief Justice Lee told the jury, that this voyage, being against the express agreement to go first to Marseilles, seemed to be more than a common deviation, as it was a formed design to deceive the contractor. He compared it to the case of sailing out of port without paying the duties, whereby the ship was subjected to forfeiture, and which has been held to be barratry.

The jury staid out some time; and, upon their return, asked the Chief Justice, whether, if the master were to have no benefit to himself by passing by Marseilles, and went only to the other places first for the benefit of his owners, that would be barratry. And the Chief Justice having answered, No, they found for the defendant.

A new trial being moved for, the case was argued; and all the judges of the King's Bench were of opinion, that the verdict was right: for the master has acted consistent with his duty to his owners; and the plaintiff's agent knew of the intended alteration before the goods were put on board, and might have refused to ship them, or have altered the insurance. The court also held, that to constitute barratry, there must be something of a criminal nature, as well as a breach of contract; and, that as the breach was assigned upon the barratry only, it was not supported by the evidence. So the defendant had judgment.

H

In

Elton v.
Brogden.
2 Stra. 1264.

In Sir John Strange's reports we find another case upon the subject of barratry. The ship Mediterranean went to sea in the merchants' service, having also a letter of marque; and was insured by the defendant, being bound from Bristol to Newfoundland. In her voyage she took a prize, returned with it to Bristol, and received back a proportionable part of the premium. Another policy was then made, and the ship set out, the captain having first received express orders from the owners, that if he took another prize, he should put some hands on board such prize, and send her to Bristol; but that the ship in question should proceed with the merchants' goods. Another prize was taken in the due course of the voyage; and the captain gave orders to some of the crew to carry the prize to Bristol, and designed to go on to Newfoundland: but the crew opposed him, and insisted that he should go back, though he acquainted them with his orders; upon which he was forced to submit, and, on his return, his own ship was captured, but the prize got in safe.

In an action against the insurers, it was insisted, that this was such a deviation, as discharged them. But Lord Chief Justice Lee, and the jury held, that this deviation was excused by the force upon the master, which he could not resist; and therefore, fell within the plea of necessity, which had always been allowed. The plaintiff's counsel thought it was barratry; but the Chief Justice was of opinion, that it did not amount to that, as the ship was not run away with, in order to defraud the owners. But as this was a case, not of wilful deviation, but of a deviation through necessity; the insurers were held to be answerable, and the plaintiff had a verdict for the sum insured.

These are all the common law cases, which are to be found on the subject of barratry, during a long series of years, viz. from the first origin of insurances, insurances, till the year 1774, when a case arose, in which all the doctrine on this head was fully considered.

It was an action on a policy of insurance upon goods on board the Thomas and Matthew, from London to Seville. The policy was made in the common form, with liberty to touch at any ports or places, &c. The loss was assigned different ways in the declaration: First, by storms and perils of the sea, in consequence of which, the ship was obliged to go to Dartmouth to be repaired; and, that afterwards a further loss happened by storms, &c. Secondly, that it happened by storms and perils of the seas in the voyage generally; and Thirdly, by the barratry of the master.

Vallejo and Another v.
Wheeler.
Cowp. Rep.
143.

The cause was tried before Mr. Justice Ashurst at Guildhall, at the sittings after Easter term, 1774, by a special jury. On the trial it was proved, that this ship was put up as a general ship from London to Seville; and was let to freight to one Darwin, to whom she was chartered by Brown the captain: that it is the course of vessels going on this voyage, to stop at some port in the west of Cornwall, to take in provisions: that this ship, having taken her cargo on board, sailed from London to the Downs: that while she lay there, all the other ships bound to the westward, bore away; but she staid till the night after, and then sailed to Guernsey, which was out of the course of the voyage: that the captain went there for his own convenience, to take in brandy and wine on his own account; after which he intended to proceed to Cornwall: that the night after the ship quitted Guernsey, she sprung a leak, which obliged her to put into Dartmouth. When she was refitted, she set sail again, and proceeded for Helford in Cornwall, where it was always intended she should stop to take in provisions; but in her way she received further damage, and on her arrival there, was totally incapable of proceeding ceeding on the voyage, and the goods were much damaged. It was attempted on the part of the defendant to prove, that one Willes was the owner of the ship: that the voyage to Guernsey was on his account; and, that the goods, taken on board there, were his property: but this evidence went little further than information and belief, except that it was proved, that when the ship arrived at Helford, the wine was delivered to him in his cellar. The learned judge directed the jury, that if the going to Guernsey was without the knowledge of Darwin, it was barratry, and they ought to find for the plaintiff; but if done with his knowledge, then it was not barratry: that if they should be of opinion, that it was without the knowledge of Darwin he desired them to say, whether they thought it was with the knowledge of Willes or not. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and said, they thought the going to Guernsey was without the knowledge of Darwin, whom they looked upon to be the true owner; but they were of opinion, it was with the knowledge of Willes.

A motion was afterwards made for a new trial; and the case, being a question of great consequence to the mercantile world, was twice argued at the bar; after which the judges were unanimously of opinion, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, but they delivered the reasons of their judgment seriatim.

Lord Mansfield.—The ground of the motion for a new trial in this case is, that under the circumstances, as they were given in evidence to the jury, the carrying the ship to Guernsey, was merely a deviation, but not barratry. Much more stress was laid at the trial, than in either of the arguments, upon this fact; namely, that the deviation being with the knowledge of Willes, the owner (though not owner pro hac vice) of the ship, it could never be barratry; and therefore, the jury were pressed to say, whether it was with the consent of Willes or not; and they said, it was.

was. To be sure nothing is so clear, as that if the owner of a ship insure, and bring an action on the policy, he can never set up as a crime a thing done by his own direction or consent. It was therefore a material fact to proceed upon, if Willes had had any thing to do in the case; but he had not. It appeared to me, that the nature of barratry had not been judicially considered, or defined in England with accuracy. In all mercantile transactions, the great object should be certainty: and therefore, it is of more consequence that the rule should be certain, than whether the rule is established one way or the other; because speculators in trade then know upon what ground to proceed. His lordship then stated the three cases above quoted from Strange; and after giving a definition of the word barratry, he proceeded thus: in this case, the underwriter has insured against all barratry of the master; and we are not now in a case where the owner or freighter is privy to it: if we were, it is evident, that no man can complain of an act, to which he is himself a party. In this case, all relative to Willes may be laid out of it: he is originally the owner; but not the insurer here. Darwin was the freighter of the ship; and the goods that were on board were his: if any fraud be committed on the owner, it is committed on Darwin. The question then is, what is the ground of complaint against the master? He had agreed to go on a voyage from London to Seville; Darwin trusts he will set out immediately, instead of which, the master goes on an iniquitous scheme, totally distinct from the purpose of the voyage to Seville: that is a cheat and a fraud on Darwin, who thought he would set out directly; and whether the loss happened in the act of barratry, that is, during the fraudulent voyage, or after, is immaterial, because the voyage is equally altered, even tho' there is no other iniquitous intent. But in the present case, there is a great deal of reason to say, that the loss sustained, was in consequence of the alteration of the voyage. The moment the ship was carried from its right course, it was barratry; and here the loss happened immediately upon the alteration. Suppose the ship had been lost afterwards, what would have been the case of the insured, if he were not secured against the barratry of the master? He would have lost his insurance by the fraud of the master; for it was clearly a deviation, and the insured cannot come upon the underwriters for a loss, in consequence of a deviation. Therefore, I am clearly of opinion, that this smuggling voyage was barratry in the master.

Mr. Justice Aston.—I wonder that there should remain a doubt at this day, what is meant by barratry in the master. In different ordinances, different terms are used; but they all have the same meaning. In one of the ordinances of Stockholm, it is called “knavery of the master or mariners;” and the facts, stated here, clearly fall within that description. Where it is a deviation with the consent of the owner of the vessel, and the master is not acting for his own private interest; in such case it is nothing but a deviation with the consent of the owner, and the underwriter is excused. In this case, the hulk of the ship belonged to Willes; but he had nothing to do with it, having chartered it to Darwin: the jury therefore did right in considering Darwin the owner pro hac vice. Having considered him in that light, the conduct of the master was clearly barratry; for he was acting for his own benefit, without intending any good to his owner, and without his consent and privity. Nobody knows when the first commencement of the injury happened; but most probably, on the return of the ship to Dartmouth from Guernsey, where he had been for the purpose of smuggling. Therefore, I am clearly of opinion, that this change of the voyage for an iniquitous purpose, was barratry; which is not confined to the running away with the ship, but comprehends every species of fraud, knavery or criminal conduct in the master, by which the owners or freighters are injured.

was

Mr. Justice Willes. The only doubt I had in this case was, at what time the loss happened: and I think it may reasonably be said to have happened in consequence of the smuggling voyage; for if the ship had proceeded on her first intended course, she would have escaped the storm. Though this was a deviation, yet it is a fair and just rebutter to say, that it was barratry in the master which is a peril insured against by the policy.

Mr. Justice Asbburst continued of the same opinion, which he held at the trial; and the rule for a new trial was discharged by the unanimous opinion of the whole court.

In another case, which has already been twice cited for another purpose, Mr. Justice Buller, who tried that cause, seemed to think, that the breach of an embargo was an act of barratry in the master.

Robertson v.
Ewer.
Vide the last chapter.

In the case of Vallejo v. Wheeler, it was settled, that the freighter of the ship is to be considered as the owner for that voyage: and it seems also clearly settled by the same case, that if an act be committed with the consent of the owners of the ship, that cannot be barratry. It was, however, in a very late case, insisted upon, that an act of the captain, without the consent of the owners of the goods, who were the insured, though with the consent of the owners of the ship, was barratry, so as to charge the underwriters. This doctrine, however, was over-ruled; and could not have been admitted without overturning all former decisions upon the subject. Barratry implies something contrary to the duty of master and mariners, in the relation in which they stand to the owners of the ship; and although they may make themselves

Nutt and Others,
assignees of Hague v.
Bourdicu.
Term Rep.
323. for Trin.
26 Geo. 3.

liable to the owners of the goods for misconduct, yet not for barratry, which can be committed against the owners of the ship, and them only.

The case, in which this point was settled, was an action on a policy of insurance, made by Hague, before he became a bankrupt, on goods laden in the ship Rachette, (otherwise the Bellona) for a voyage from London to Rochelle, subscribed by the defendant for 120*l.* at 1*l.* 10*s.* per cent. premium. The cause was tried at Guildhall before Mr. Justice Buller, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court, upon the following case: That the bankrupt shipped on board the vessel in question goods to the amount of 1800*l.* for Rochelle. That the captain, by the instigation and direction of Messrs. Le Grands, the owners of the ship, went with the ship and cargo to Bordeaux, instead of Rochelle, where the cargo was sold by the agent of Le Grands. That a petition was presented by the plaintiffs to the lieutenant general of the Admiralty of Guienne, stating the whole of the transaction between the bankrupt and the owners and captain; that in order to procure a landing at Bordeaux, their original destination being to Rochelle, false bills of loading were made out by the captain, at the instigation of Le Grand: the petition concluded with a prayer for relief. In consequence of this petition, a decree was passed, declaring René Guiné (the captain) guilty of the crime of barratry of the master, for having signed false bills of lading, &c. for reparation whereof, it sentenced him to perpetual service in the galleys. It also declared Dominique Le Grand guilty and convicted of having been an instigator and accomplice of the said barratry of the master, and adjudged him to five years servitude in the galleys: and also decreed, that the said René Guiné and Le Grand should pay to the plaintiffs the amount of their loss, and all charges and costs. The question on this case is, whether the plaintiffs tiffs were entitled to recover against the insurers. After the first argument,

OF THE MASTER OR MARINERS.

Lord Mansfield said, that with regard to the sentence which had been passed abroad, and which declared the master and owner to have been guilty of barratry, it was entirely out of the question. That though it was a most righteous judgment, yet that it was no part of the consideration of the court there, what was meant by barratry in an English policy. The question was left entirely open. That their idea of barratry was manifestly different from the construction put upon that word in our own courts, for they had found the owner guilty of barratry, which was entirely repugnant to every definition of barratry, which had ever been laid down in an English court of justice.

A few days afterwards the court declared, that they had not the smallest doubt as to the present question, and therefore thought it very unnecessary to hear a second argument.

Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion of the court.

All questions upon mercantile transactions, but more particularly upon policies of insurance, are extremely important, and ought to be settled. The general question here is on the construction of the word barratry in a policy of insurance. It is somewhat extraordinary that it should have crept into insurances, and still more, that it should have continued in them so long; for the underwriter insures the conduct of the captain, whom he does not appoint, and cannot dismiss, to the owner, who can do either. The point to be considered is, whether barratry, in the sense in which it is used in our policies of insurance, can be committed against any but the owners of the ship. It is clear, beyond contradiction, that it cannot; for barratry is something contrary to the duty of the master and mariners, the very terms of which imply, that it must be in the relation, lation, in which they stand to the owners of the ship. The words used are, master and mariners, which are very particular. An owner cannot commit barratry. He may make himself liable by his fraudulent conduct to the owner of the goods, but not as for barratry. And, besides, barratry cannot be committed against the owner, with his consent : for though the owner may become liable for a civil loss by the misbehaviour of the captain, if he consents, yet that is not barratry. Barratry must partake of something criminal, and must be committed against the owner by the master or mariners. In the case of Vallejo and Wheeler, the court took it for granted, that barratry could only be committed against the owner of the ship. The point is too clear to require any further discussion.

The postea was delivered to the defendant.

It is clear, that if the owner be also the master of the ship, any act, which in another master would be construed barratry, cannot be so in him; because such doctrine would militate against one of the rules laid down in a former part of this chapter; namely, that no man shall be allowed to derive a benefit from his own crime, which he would do, were he to recover against the insurers for a loss, occasioned by his own act. This rule has been extended in the court of Chancery to a case, where such an owner and master, after mortgaging his ship, had committed barratry; and when the mortgagee brought an action at law against the insurer to recover damages for the loss which he had sustained by this act of barratry, the court, still considering the mortgagor as the owner, granted an injunction.

Lewin v.
Suasso.
Chancery,
16 Geo. 2.
Postlethw.
Dictionary,
1 vol. 147.

The facts of that case were these. The plaintiff in equity, having been sued at law upon a policy of insurance against the barratry of the master, which was also the loss assigned in the declaration, brought his bill in Chancery to be relieved, and for an injunction. The voyage insured ured was from London to Marseilles, and from thence to some port in Holland. The master sailed with the ship to Marseilles, and then, instead of pursuing his voyage, sailed to the West-Indies, where he sold the ship, and died insolvent. The plaintiff by his bill suggested, that Matthews, the master, was also the owner of the ship: that he had, before the voyage, entered into a bottomry bond to the defendant for 200*l.* and afterwards, by a bill of sale, had assigned over his interest in the ship to the defendant, as a security for the 200*l.*: that Matthews was, nevertheless, in equity, to be considered as owner of the ship, though in law, the ownership and property would be looked upon to be in the defendant; and that the owner of a ship could not, either in law or equity, be guilty of a barratry concerning the ship; and therefore, he prayed an injunction, and that the policy might be delivered up. The matters of fact being confessed by the answer, an injunction was moved for on the principle, that a mortgagor is to be considered in equity as the owner of the thing mortgaged; and that Matthews, the master, being owner, could not be guilty of barratry.

Lord Hardwicke.—Barratry is an act of wrong done by the master against the ship and goods; and this being the case of a ship, the question will be, who is to be considered as the owner? Several cases might be put, where barratry may be assigned as the breach of an insurance; and barratry or not, is a question properly determinable at law: but in this case it is not so, for courts of law will not consider a mortgagor as having any right or interest in the thing mortgaged; and a man may frequently come into equity for relief in respect of a part only of his case. It might, indeed, be considered at law, whether what the master has done, whether he be owner or not, did not amount to a breach of contract as master, and so to a barratry: it may likewise likewise be so considered in this court. But at law, a defendant cannot read part of a plaintiff's answer to a bill filed against him here : the whole answer must be read, which has often been a reason for this court to interpose by injunction upon a plaint at law ; and considering the mixed nature of this case, I think an injunction ought to be granted.

Hitherto we have considered barratry only, as it affects the rights of the insurer and insured, which is certainly the material point of view in our present enquiry : but, before we come to the conclusion of this chapter, it will be proper to take notice of those positive regulations, which exist in this and other countries, for the punishment of those who are guilty of some of the more heinous acts of barratry.

2 Magens 77.
112. 215.

By the ordinances of Middleburg, Rotterdam, and Hamburgh, if any act of barratry be committed by the master, various degrees of punishment, sometimes amounting even to death, are inflicted upon him, proportioned to the enormity of his guilt.

We do not find that any punishment was expressly provided, by the law of England, for offences of this nature, till the reign of Queen Anne, at which time, as may be collected from the preamble of the statute, the wilful casting away, burning or destroying of ships by the master or mariners, was become very frequent.

1 Anne, stat.
2. c. 9. f. 4.

To prevent these evils that statute ordains, “ that if any captain, master, mariner, or other “ officer, belonging to any ship, shall wilfully “ cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship “ unto which he belongeth, or procure the same “ to be done, to the prejudice of the owner or “ owners thereof, or of any merchant or mer“ chants that shall load goods thereon, he shall “ suffer death as a felon.”

4 Geo. 1.
c. 12. f. 3.

Upon trial this act was found not to be sufficiently extensive ; and therefore, by a subsequent statute,
it

it was declared, "that if any owner of, or captain, master, mariner, or other officer belonging to any ship, shall wilfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship of which he is owner, or unto which he belongeth, or in any manner direct or procure the same to be done, to the prejudice of any person or persons that shall underwrite any policy or policies of insurance thereon, or of any merchant or merchants that shall load goods thereon, he shall suffer death."

Notwithstanding this statute, doubts still remained as to the nature of the offence, and the mode of trial, and punishment to be inflicted for the same; wherefore, it seemed expedient to the legislature to pass an explanatory law, declaring, "that if any owner of, or captain, master, officer or mariner belonging to any ship or vessel, shall wilfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship or vessel, of which he is owner, or to which he belongeth; or in any wise direct or procure the same to be done, with intent or design to prejudice any person or persons that hath underwrote, or shall underwrite any policy or policies of insurance thereon, or of any merchant or merchants that shall load goods thereon, or of any owner or owners of such ship or vessel, the person or persons offending therein, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be deemed and adjudged a felon or felons, and shall suffer, as in cases of felony, without benefit of clergy." 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. l. 6.

The following section directs, that if the offence be committed within the body of a county, the same shall be tried as all felonies are in the common law courts: but if upon the high seas, then to be tried agreeably to the directions of the 28th H. 8. c. 15. 7th. Section.

These are the only positive regulations, known to the law of England, for the punishment of those who who wilfully destroy ships to the prejudice of such persons as are interested in their preservation.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Of Partial Losses, and of Adjustment.

HAVING, in the preceding chapters, treated fully of the different kinds of losses, for which the underwriters are answerable, the subject naturally leads one to consider, when losses shall be said to be total, and when partial, or average, as they have been most commonly denominated. When we speak of a total loss, we do not always mean to signify, that the property insured is irrecoverably lost or gone: but that, by some of the perils mentioned in the policy, it is in such a condition, as to be of little use or value to the insured, and so much injured, as to justify him in abandoning to the insurer, and in calling upon him to pay the whole amount of his insurance, as if a total loss had actually happened. But the idea of a total loss, in this sense of the word, is so intimately blended and interwoven with the doctrine of abandonment, that it will add much to clearness and precision, to refer what may be said on this subject, till we come to the chapter on abandonment. In this place it will be sufficient to remark, that in case of a total loss, properly so called, the prime cost of the property insured, or the value mentioned in the policy, must be paid by the underwriter; at least, as far as his proportion of the insurance extends. This is evident from the nature of the contract; for the insurer engages, as far as to the

2 Burr. 1170.

the amount of the prime cost, or value in the policy, that the thing insured shall come safe: he has nothing to do with the market; he has no concern in any profit or loss which may arise to the merchant from the sale of the goods. If they be totally lost, he must pay the prime cost, that is, the value of the thing he insured, at the outset; he has no concern in any subsequent value. So likewise, if part of the cargo, capable of a several and distinct valuation at the outset, be totally lost; as if there be one hundred hogsheads of sugar, and ten happen to be lost, the insurer must pay the prime cost of those ten hogsheads, without any regard to the price, for which the other ninety may be sold. Thus much at present for total losses.

The subject of this and the following chapter, seems to be of all others the most intricate and perplexing, in the whole law of insurance; an intricacy, which arises from several causes. In the first place, the subject of average has very seldom fallen under the cognizance of courts of judicature in this country; consequently there are very few adjudged cases to be found. In this scarcity of settled principles, recourse must be had to the writers of foreign nations, and to such of our own as have written upon commerce in general: but the research is by no means attended with satisfaction, much less with conviction. Another ^{3 Burr. 1555-} source of perplexity upon this subject is, the irregularity and confusion, which we meet with in the present form of policies of insurance. Ambiguities frequently arise in them, by using the same words in different senses; and, in no instance, is this absurdity more glaring than in the use of the word average. This word in policies has two significations; for it means "a contribution to a general loss;" and it also is used to signify "a particular partial loss." In commercial affairs, indeed, it has no less than four different meanings; and therefore, it cannot be wondered wondered at, if much confusion of ideas has arisen upon the subject. In order to prevent that, if possible, in the subsequent part of this work, I shall here endeavour to distinguish between the four different senses of the word "average;" and wherever I shall have occasion in future to speak of a damage arising to goods or other property, not total, except when I am reciting the words of a policy, I shall take the liberty of calling it, as I have already done at the head of this chapter, a partial, not an average loss.

Lex Merc.
red. 147.

When goods or merchandizes carried by sea, are thrown overboard in a storm, for the purpose of lightening the ship; the owners of the ship and of the goods saved contribute for the relief of those, whose goods are ejected, in such manner, that all, who profited by the lightening of the ship, may bear a proportional loss of the goods, thus thrown overboard for the common safety. This contribution is what is called general or gross average; the full discussion of which will be the business of the next chapter.

Mage ns 72.

Cowel.
2 Mag. 180.
278.

Small or petty averages are the next species; and, as these never fall upon the underwriters, I shall here set down all that is necessary upon that subject. Petty average consists in such charges and disbursements, as, according to occurrences, and the custom of every place, the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage. These charges are, lodemage, which, as appears by Cowel's interpreter, means the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another; towage, pilotage, light-money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge-toll, quarantine, river charges, signals, instructions, passage money by castles, expences for digging a ship out of the ice when frozen up, that it may be brought into a proper harbour; and at London, by custom, the fee paid at Dover pier. These seem to be all the articles which come under the denomi-denomination of petty or accustomed average; as well in this as in foreign countries.

For these charges, the insurers are never answerable; but one third of the expence is borne by the ship, and two thirds fall upon the cargo. But in order to discharge the insurer, it must appear, that the disbursements were usual and customary in the voyage; for if they were incurred for any extraordinary purpose, or in order to relieve the ship and cargo from some impending danger, they shall then be reputed a general average, and consequently be a charge on the insurer. In lieu of these petty averages, it has become usual at some places to pay 5 per cent. calculated on the freight, and 5 per cent. more for primage to the captain. 1 Mag. 72.

Another species of average, in matters of commerce, is that which we are accustomed to meet with in bills of lading, "paying so much freight for the said goods, with primage and average accustomed." In this sense it signifies a small duty, which merchants, who send goods in the ships of other men, pay to the master, over and above the freight, for his care and attention to the goods so entrusted to him. This kind of average may also be laid out of the present enquiry, as it is too insignificant a charge to fall upon the underwriter. Jacob's Law Dict. title Average.

Having thus disposed of the different kinds of average, so as to prevent a confusion of ideas, we shall now proceed to the main subject proposed, namely, what shall be considered as a partial loss; how such a loss shall be adjusted, and in what proportion it shall be paid. I said, at the beginning of this chapter, that these were questions of intricacy; and so most undoubtedly they formerly were: but much light has been thrown upon them by my Lord Mansfield, in his elaborate and very learned argument in the case of Lewis v. Rucker; and, as that case has been frequently recognized, and has ever since been looked up to, 1 Burr. 1167.

as the rule and standard of decision, upon similar occasions, I have drawn most of my ideas upon this subject from the reasoning there made use of by his lordship in delivering the opinion of the court.

Partial loss, ex vi termini, implies a damage, which the ship may have sustained, in the course of her voyage, from any of the perils mentioned in the policy: when applied to the cargo, it also means the damage which goods may have received, without any fault of the master, by storm, capture, stranding or shipwreck, although the whole, or the greater part thereof may arrive in port. These partial losses fall upon the owners of the property so damaged, who must be indemnified by the underwriter. For if the goods arrive, but lessened in value through damage received at sea, the nature of an indemnity speaks demonstrably, that it can only be effected by putting the merchant in the same condition in which he would have been, if the goods had arrived free from damage.

Vide the Appendix,
No. 1.

The underwriters of London expressly declare, as appears from a memorandum at the foot of the policy, that they will not answer for partial losses, not amounting to 3 per cent. This clause was introduced into English policies about the year 1749, having long before that time been generally used in almost all the trading countries in Europe; and it was intended to prevent the underwriters from being continually harassed by trifling demands. But at the same time, that they provide against trifling claims for partial losses, they undertake to indemnify against losses, however inconsiderable, that arise from a general average; because that can never happen but in cases of imminent danger when it is for the common interest that such expences should be incurred.

It has been observed by a very sensible merchant, who has written upon insurances, that almost most all the ordinances seem deficient, in not fully explaining in what cases, and in what manner, the damage arising from a partial loss, shall be deemed to exceed 3 per cent. To illustrate his meaning, he states this case. Suppose, says he, a merchant has shipped 101 chests of goods, of which on arrival, three chests are, by the sea, or by some accident, so spoiled, as to be worth nothing; if the damage be calculated as on the whole value of 101 chests, it will not exceed 3 per cent. and it is thought by most insurers not to be recoverable, in such a case, by the insured: especially if the insurance be made, without expressly declaring, in the policy, the particular sum insured on each chest. We cannot help thinking, however, that if such a case came to be rightly explained to a jury of merchants, the insurers would be condemned to pay the value of these three chests, in the same manner, as they would have been, if it had been expressed, how much was insured on each chest.

However great the doubt, upon this point, might formerly have been, Magens seems to be perfectly right in his last idea, as it seems to fall within a rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, and, as it appears to me, is exactly the case put by his Lordship, in illustration of the principle he advanced. If, said Lord Mansfield, the cargo be totally lost, the underwriter must pay the value of the thing he insured. So, if part of the cargo, capable of a several and distinct valuation at the outset, be totally lost; as if there be 100 hogsheds of sugar, and ten happen to be lost, the insurer must pay the prime cost of those ten hogsheds, without any regard to the price for which the other 90 may be sold. So in the case put by Magens, the three chests of goods seem to be as capable of a distinct and several valuation, as the three hogsheds of sugar; and consequently are to be paid for, as for a total loss.

loss. However, I find no express adjudication upon this point; and I dare not hazard an opinion.

As clearness and precision are necessary upon all subjects, and more especially upon this, it will be proper to observe, that when we speak of the underwriter being liable to pay, whether for total or partial losses, it must always be understood, that they are liable only in proportion to the sums which they have underwritten, and to the premiums which they have received. Thus, if a man underwrite 100*l.* upon property valued at 500*l.* and a total loss happen, he shall be answerable for 100*l.* and no more, that being the amount of his subscription: if only a partial loss, amounting to 60*l.* or 70*l. per cent.* upon the whole value; he shall pay 60*l.* or 70*l.* being his proportion of the loss.

1 Magens 35. When a total loss happens, the insured is entitled to recover against the underwriter, as soon as he has proved the value of the thing insured: but when the value is inserted in a policy, the insurer, by allowing such insertion, has admitted the value to be as stated; and nothing remains but to prove, that the goods insured were actually on board the ship. It is only in cases of total loss that any difference consists between a valued, and an open policy: in the former case, the value is ascertained; in the latter, it must be proved. But where the loss is partial, the value in the policy can be no guide to ascertain the damage; which then necessarily becomes a subject of proof, as much as in the case of an open policy.

Vide ante,
c. 1. §. 1.

When a partial loss happens, the first enquiry which naturally arises is this; for what does the insurer undertake to indemnify the owner, in case of a partial loss? To answer this question, regard must be had to the nature of the contract, between the underwriter and the merchant. What is the nature of the contract? That the goods shall come safe to the port of delivery; or if they do not, that the insurer will indemnify the owner to the amount of the value of the goods, stated in the 2 Furr. 1172.

1173.

the policy. Wherever then the property insured is lessened in value, by damage received at sea, justice is done by putting the merchant in the same condition (relation being had to the prime cost or value in the policy) which he would have been in, if the goods had arrived free from damage; that is by paying him such proportion of the prime cost or value in the policy as corresponds with the proportion of the diminution in value occasioned by the damage. The question then is, how is the proportion of damage to be ascertained? It certainly cannot be by any measure taken from the prime cost: 2 Burr. 1170. but it may be done in this way. Where an entire thing, as one hogshead of sugar happens to be spoiled, if you can fix, whether it be a third, a fourth, or a fifth worse, then the damage is ascertained to a mathematical certainty. How is this to be found out? Not by any price at the port of discharge; but it must be at the port of delivery, where the voyage is completed, and the whole damage known. Whether the price at the latter be high or low, it is the same thing; for in either case it equally shews, whether the damaged goods are a third, a fourth, or a fifth worse than if they had come sound: consequently, whether the injury sustained be a third, fourth, or fifth of the value of the thing. And as the insurer pays the whole prime cost, if the thing be wholly lost; so if it be only a third, fourth, or fifth worse, he pays a third, fourth, or fifth, not of the value for which it sold, but of the value stated in the policy. And when no valuation is stated in the policy, the invoice of the cost, with the addition of all charges, and the premium of insurance, shall be the foundation, upon which the loss shall be computed. 1 Magens 37.

This rule of ascertaining damage, occasioned by a partial loss, seems to be fraught with so much good sense, to be so very comprehensive, and so intelligible to every understanding, that it will now be only necessary to shew, that the decided cases have been agreeable to that rule: first requesting the reader to bear in mind, what has already been mentioned, namely, that the value, upon which the foregoing calculation rests, is the prime cost of the commodity, wholly independent of the rise or fall of the market; or the schemes or speculation of the merchant.

Dick and Another v.
Allen, at Guildh. after Mich. Term,
1785.

In an action upon a policy of insurance to recover an average loss upon goods, Mr. Justice Buller observed, that in such cases, whether the goods arrived to a good or bad market was immaterial; for the true way of estimating the loss was to take them at the fair invoice price.

Lewis and Another v.
Rucker.
2 Burr. 1467.

A rule having been obtained by the plaintiffs, who were the insured, for the defendant (the insurer) to shew cause, why a verdict, obtained by him, should not be set aside, and a new trial had.

The court, after hearing the matter fully debated, took time to advise, and their unanimous opinion was delivered to the following effect.

Lord Mansfield.—This was an action brought upon a policy, by the plaintiffs, for Mr. James Bourdieu, upon the goods on board a ship, called the Vrota Martha, at and from St. Thomas Island to Hamburg, from the loading at St. Thomas Island, till the ship should arrive, and land the goods at Hamburg. The goods, which consisted of sugars, coffee and indigo, were valued; the clayed sugars at 30 l. per hoghead; the Muscavado sugars at 20 l. per hoghead; and the coffee and indigo were likewise respectively valued. The sugars were warranted free from average, (that is, partial loss) under 5 l. per cent.; and all other goods free from average under 3 l. per cent. unless general, or the ship be stranded.

In the course of the voyage the sea water got in; and when the ship arrived at Hamburg, it appeared that every hoghead of sugar was damaged. The damage the sugars had sustained, made it necessary to sell them immediately; and they were accordingly sold: but the difference between the price which they brought, on account of the damage, mage, and that which they might then have been sold for at Hamburg, if they had been found, was 20*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* per hoghead is to 23*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* per hoghead: (that is, if found, they would have been worth 23*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* per hoghead; as damaged, they were only worth 20*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* per hoghead.)

The defendant paid money into court, by the following rule of estimating the damage: he paid the like proportion of the sum, at which the sugars were valued in the policy, as the price of the damaged sugars bore to sound sugars at Hamburg, the port of delivery. All this was admitted at the trial; though perhaps upon an accurate computation, there may be a mistake of about 17*s.* on the money paid in. But no advantage was attempted to be taken of this slip; it was admitted, that the money paid in was sufficient, if the rule, by which the defendant estimated the loss, was right: and the only question was, by what measure or rule the damage, upon all the circumstances of the case, ought to be estimated.

To distinguish this case, under its particular circumstances, out of any general rule, the plaintiff's counsel called Mr. Samuel Challet, clerk to Mr. Bourdieu, who proved, that upon the 15th of February, the time of the insurance, sugars were worth at London and Hamburg 35*l.* a hoghead; that the proposal of a Congress to be holden, and the expectation of a peace, had, on a sudden, sunk the price of sugars: that before the ship arrived at Hamburg, and before he could know that the sugars had received any damage, Mr. Bourdieu had sent orders, that the sugars should be housed at Hamburg, and kept till the price should rise above 30*l.* a hoghead: that he had many hundred hogheads of sugar lying at Amsterdam, to which place he had sent the like orders; that the congress not taking place, in fact sugars rose 25 per cent.: that what he sold of the sugars, which he had at Amsterdam, brought 30*l.* per hoghead, and upwards: that he might have sold these sugars at the same price, if they had been kept, according to his orders; and the only reason for which they were not kept was, because they were rendered perishable from the sea water, which had got in. Therefore, said they, the necessity of an immediate sale, and the consequence thereof, ought to be computed into the damage.

The special jury (amongst whom there were many sensible merchants) found the defendant's rule of estimation to be right, and gave their verdict for him. They understood the question very well, and knew more of the subject of it, than any body else present; and they formed their judgment from their own notions and experience, without much assistance from any thing that passed.

The counsel for the plaintiff, in the outset, chiefly rested upon the particular circumstances of this case. The defendant offered to call witnesses to prove the general usage of estimating the quantity of damage, when goods are injured.

I was at first struck with the argument, that the immediate necessity of selling in this case might be taken into consideration, as an exception to the general rule; and proposed that the cause might be left to the jury upon that point. But Mr. Winn for the defendant argued, that the necessity of selling, and the consequence thereof ought not to be regarded: and what he said, had so much weight, that it very much changed my way of thinking.

There was nothing to sum up; but the jury asked, whether I would give them any directions. I said, I left it to them, "Whether the " difference between the sound and the damaged
 " sugars, at the port of delivery, ought to be the " rule; or, whether the necessity of an immediate sale, certainly occasioned by the damage,
 " and the loss thereby, should be taken into consideration."

"sideration." I told them, though it had struck me at first, this might be an exception; yet what the counsel for the defendant said to the contrary, seemed to have great weight. The verdict was for the defendant; and a new trial has been moved for.

No fact is now disputed; the only question is, whether the jury have estimated the damage by a proper measure. To make this matter more intelligible, I will first state the rule, by which the defendant and the jury have gone; and then I will examine whether the plaintiff has shewn a better.

The defendant takes the proportion of the difference between sound and damaged at the port of delivery, and pays that proportion upon the value of the goods specified in the policy; and has no regard to the price in money, which either the sound or the damaged goods bore in the port of delivery. He says, the proportion of the difference is equally the rule, whether the goods come to a rising or a falling market. For instance, suppose the value in the policy to be 30*l.* the goods are damaged; but sell for 40*l.*: if they had been sound, they would have sold for 50*l.* The difference then between the sound and damaged is a fifth; consequently the insurer must pay a fifth of the prime cost, or value in the policy, that is 6*l.* e converso, if they come to a losing market, and sell for 10*l.* being damaged, but would have sold for 30*l.* if sound, the difference is one half: the insurer must pay half the prime cost, or value in the policy, that is 15*l.*

To this rule, two objections have been made. First, that it is going by a different measure in the case of a partial, from that which governs in case of a total loss; for upon a total loss, the prime cost, or value in the policy must be paid. The answer to which objection is, that the distinction is founded in the nature of the thing. Insurance is a contract of indemnity against the perils

perils of the voyage, to the amount of the value in the policy; and therefore, if the thing be totally lost, the insurer must pay the whole value which he insured at the outset. But where a part of the commodity is spoiled, no measure can be taken from the prime cost to ascertain the quantity of the damage sustained. The only way is to fix, whether the thing be a third or fourth worse than the sound commodity; and then you pay a third or fourth of the prime cost, or value of the goods so damaged. (a)

The next objection, with which this case has been entangled, is taken from the circumstance of the policy in question being a valued policy.

I am a little at a loss to apply the arguments drawn from thence. It is said, "that a valued" "is a wager policy, like interest or no interest;" "and if so, there can be no partial loss, and the" "insured can only recover as for a total loss," "abandoning what is saved, because the value" "specified is fictitious."

Vide post.
chap. 14th.

A valued policy is not to be considered as a wager policy, or like "interest or no interest." If it were, it would be void, by the statute of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. The only effect of the valuation, is fixing the amount of the prime cost, just as if the parties admitted it at the trial: but in every argument, and for every other purpose, it must be taken, that the value was fixed in such a manner, as that the insured meant to have an indemnity only, and no more. If it be undervalued, the merchant himself stands the insurer for the rest. If it be much overvalued, it must be done with a bad view, either to gain, contrary to the 19th

(a) In Lord Mansfield's argument, in answer to the first objection, I have taken the liberty of abridging much of what fell from his lordship, having already inserted it, in the former part of the chapter, where I laid down the rules of decision upon this point.

19th of George the Second, or with some view to a fraudulent loss; therefore, the insured never can be allowed to plead in a court of justice, that he has greatly overvalued, or that his interest was merely a trifle.

It is settled, that upon valued policies, the merchant need only prove some interest to take them out of the 19th Geo. 2.; because the adverse party has admitted the value: and if more proof were required, the agreed valuation would signify nothing. But if it should come out in proof, that a man had insured 2000 l. and had interest on board to the value of a cable only; there never has been, and I believe, there never will be a determination, that, by such an evasion, the act of parliament may be defeated. There are many advantages from allowing valued policies: but where they are used merely as a cover to a wager, they would be considered as an evasion. To argue that there can be no adjustment of a partial loss upon a valued policy, is directly contrary to the very terms of the policy itself. It is expressly subject to average, if the loss upon sugars exceed 5 per cent.; and even if it were not subject to average, the consequence would not be, that every partial loss must thereby become total; but only the event, to entitle the insured to recover, would not happen, unless there was a total loss. Consequently the plaintiff in this case would not be entitled to recover at all; for there is no colour to say that this was a total loss: besides the plaintiffs have taken the goods and sold them.

In opposition to the measure the jury have gone by, the plaintiffs contend, that they ought to be paid the whole value in the policy, upon one of two grounds.

1st. Because the general rule of estimating should be the difference between the price the damaged goods sell for, and the prime cost or value in the policy. Here the damaged sold at 20l.

0 s. 8 d.

Vide supra
Dick v. Allen
p. 118.

cs. 8*d.* per hoghead; and the underwriter should make it up 30*l.* To this I answer, that it is impossible that should be the rule: it would involve the underwriter in the rise or fall of the market: it would subject him, in some cases, to pay vastly more than the loss; in others, it would deprive the insured of any satisfaction, though there was a loss. For instance, suppose the prime cost or value in the policy 30*l.* per hoghead; the sugars are injured; the price of the best is 20*l.* a hoghead; the price of the damaged is 19*l.* 10*s.* The loss is about a fortieth, and the insurer would be to pay above a third. Suppose they come to a rising market, and the sound sugars sell for 40*l.* a hoghead, and the damaged for 35*l.* the loss is an eighth, yet the insurer would be to pay nothing.

The 2d ground, upon which the plaintiffs contend that the 30*l.* should be made up, is, that it appears the sugars would have sold for that price, if the damage from the sea water had not made an immediate sale necessary. The moment the jury brought in their verdict, I was satisfied that they did right, in totally disregarding the particular circumstances of this case: and I wrote a memorandum, at Guildhall, in my note-book, that the verdict seemed to me to be right. As I expected that the other cause upon the same point would be tried, I thought a good deal upon the question, and endeavoured to get what assistance I could, by conversing with some gentlemen of experience in adjustments. The point has now been fully argued at the bar; and the more I have thought, the more I have heard upon the subject, the more I am convinced, that the jury did right to pay no regard to these circumstances.

The nature of the contract is, that the goods shall come safe to the port of delivery, or if they do not, that the insurer will indemnify the plaintiff to the amount of the prime cost. If they arrive, rive, but lessened in value ; in order to indemnify the owner, he must be put in the same condition, in which he would have been if the goods had arrived free from damage : that is by paying such proportion or aliquot part of the prime cost, as corresponds with the proportion or aliquot part of the diminution in value occasioned by the damage.

The duty accrues upon the ship's arrival and landing her cargo at the port of delivery : the insured has then a right to demand satisfaction. The adjustment never can depend upon future events or speculations. How long is he to wait ? a week, a month, or year ?

In this case, the price rose : but if the Congress had taken place, or a peace had been made, it would have fallen. The defendant did not insure, that there should be no congress or peace. It is true Mr. Bourdieu acted upon political speculation, and ordered the sugars to be kept till the price should be 30*l.* and upwards : but no private scheme or project of trade of the insured can affect the insurer ; for he knew nothing of it. The defendant did not undertake that the sugars should bear a price of 30*l.* a hoghead. If speculative destinations of the merchant, and the success of such speculations were to be regarded, it would introduce the greatest injustice and inconvenience : the underwriter knows nothing of them : the orders here were given after the policy was signed. But the decisive answer is, that the insurer has nothing to do with the price ; and that the right of the insured to a satisfaction arises immediately upon their being landed at the port of delivery.

We are of opinion, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to have the price, for which the damaged sugars were sold, made up 30*l.* per hoghead : and it seems to us as plain as any proposition in Euclid, that the rule by which the jury have gone, is the right measure.

In

Le Cras v.
Hughes,
B. R. East.
22 Geo. 3.
Vide post.
c. 14.

In a subsequent case, which will hereafter be mentioned for another purpose, Lord Mansfield said, that the case of Lewis v. Rucker should be the rule in all similar cases, that is, wherever there was a specific description of casks or goods: but in Le Cras v. Hughes, the property, which consisted of various goods taken from an enemy, was valued at the sum insured, and part was lost by perils of the sea; consequently the same rule could not be adopted, on account of the nature of the thing insured. The only mode was to go into an account of the whole value of the goods, and take a proportion of that sum, as the amount of the goods lost.

M. 21 Geo. 2.

Since the 19th of Geo. 2. the constant usage has been to let the valuation fixed in the policy remain, in case of a total loss; and the parties are estopped from altering it: but a partial loss opens the policy. This custom, said Lord Mansfield, was introduced by Lord Chief Justice Lee, in a case of Erasmus v. Banks; and in another case of Smith v. Flaxney, which happened about the same period, the same rule of decision was adopted.

2 Magens
228.

By the ordinances of Hamburg it is declared, that in case of a damage to goods, the assured is not to open the damaged goods, but in the presence of the assurers or their deputies; but if time and circumstances do not give opportunity to call them, yet the goods must not be opened, but in the presence of a notary, and some witnesses. I can find no such regulation in the law of insurance in England, nor do I understand, that any such is adopted in practice. Indeed, it seems to be needless; because an assured, in order to entitle himself to recover for a partial loss, must prove by disinterested witnesses, to the satisfaction of the jury, the quantity of goods damaged in the course of the voyage. The parties may, however, insist upon being present.

It will be proper here to remark that some goods are of a perishable nature; and therefore, when they are damaged by such natural and inherent principle of corruption in themselves, the underwriters, by the ordinances of most countries, are held to be discharged. The underwriters of London have, indeed, by express words inserted in their policy, declared, that they will not be answerable for any partial loss, happening to corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed, unless it arise, by way of a general average, or in consequence of the ship being stranded. This clause was introduced by the underwriters, to prevent the vexation of trifling demands, which must have arisen in every voyage, on account of the very perishable nature of those commodities, which we have just had occasion to enumerate. This form was formerly used by the two Insurance companies, as well as by the private insurers, till the year 1754, when a ship having been stranded, and got off again, the insured recovered a small partial loss against the London Assurance Company, since which period, the Companies have left out the words, "or the ship be stranded;" and are now only liable, in cases of a general average: but the old form is still retained by private insurers.

Ord of France,
Stockholm,
and Ham-
burgh.

Vide Appendix, No. 1.

Cantillon v.
the London
Assur. Comp. cited in 3
Burr. 1553.

Upon this clause there have been several determinations, in all of which it has been uniformly held, that the underwriters can in no case be answerable for a partial loss to such commodities: and that no loss shall be deemed a total one, but the absolute destruction of the thing insured; for that while it specifically remains, though perhaps wholly unfit for use, no loss has happened within the meaning of this memorandum. It may also be proper to premise that corn is a general term, and includes many particulars; peas and beans have been held to come within the meaning of the word.

Mason v.
Skurray.
Vide post.

An action upon a policy of insurance was brought for the recovery of $\text{£}61. 19s. 8d. \text{ per cent.}$

Wilson v.
Smith.
being 3 Burr. 1550.

being the damage received by a cargo of wheat on board the Boscawen; insured at and from Lancaster to Rotterdam. The wheat was valued by agreement at 30s. per quarter. The policy was in the ordinary form, with the usual clause at the bottom, that corn, fish, fruit, &c. should be warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded. The defendant underwrote this policy for 100l.. The defendant having pleaded the general issue, the cause came on to be tried; and a special case was reserved for the opinion of the Court, stating, that after the ship's departure from Lancaster, and before her arrival at Rotterdam, she met with a violent storm: that she was by and through the force of winds and stormy weather, obliged to cut away and leave her cable and anchor, for the safety of the ship and cargo: that she was also greatly damaged and obliged to run to the first port to refit: that the expence of refitting the ship amounted to 38l. 15s. per cent. which the defendant in this case had paid, being a general average. The case then states, that the hatches were not opened at Liverpool: (the place where she had gone to repair) but the ship, being refitted, proceeded on her voyage, and arrived at Rotterdam, where her cargo of wheat was landed: that upon unloading it, it appeared that it had received damage by the said storm to the amount of 56l. 19s. 8d. per cent.

The single question was, upon the true construction and meaning of the words, "free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded," whether the plaintiff could under the circumstances recover in this action for the damage of 56l. 19s. 8d. per cent. After two arguments, the Court gave judgment for the defendant.

Lord Mansfield.—Policies of insurance, according to their present form, are very irregular and confused: an ambiguity arises in them from using the same words in different senses; particularly cularly, in the use of the word average. It is used to signify a contribution to a general loss; and it is also used to signify a particular partial loss.

But whether it be considered in one, or other of these senses, it will not avail the plaintiffs in this case. For, if it here signify contribution, the insurer is to be free from contribution, unless the contribution be general. If it signify loss, then plainly it is warranted free from all particular loss. The insurer is liable to all losses arising from the ship being stranded; and in all cases, where there is a general average: but all other partial losses are excluded by the express terms of the policy.

The word "unless" means the same as "except;" and never can be construed as a condition, in the sense that the counsel for the plaintiffs would put upon the word "condition," namely, to be free from partial loss, unless in two events, viz. a general average, or the stranding of the ship: but if either of those events did happen, then to be liable to all other average. The words "free from average unless general," can never mean to leave the insurer liable to any particular damage. It is clear then that the plaintiff ought not to recover; and that judgment ought to be given for the defendant.

In a very modern case, a question arose upon the memorandum. It was an action brought upon a policy of insurance to recover against the underwriters for a total loss of the cargo. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court upon a special case.

Cocking v. Fraser. B. R. East. 25 G. 3. Vide ante p. 22.

The case states, that the ship sailed from Newfoundland on the 2d of December 1783, with a cargo of fish: that on the 11th they hove overboard 40 quintals for the general preservation of the ship and cargo: that on the 20th, they threw over 20 quintals more for the same purpose. The ship had exceeding bad weather till her arrival at Lisbon, on the 10th of January 1784, the ship being bound to Figara. When she arrived at Lisbon, a survey was had at the request of the captain, who was also the consignee of the goods, by the Board of Health; and it appeared to them, and so the fact was, that the cargo was of no value, through sea damage. The ship did not proceed to Figara. The defendant has paid into Court the amount of the partial loss sustained by the ship, and also the general average upon the cargo.

K

ing

Lord Mansfield. Most litigations arise from improper statements of cases, and from not properly defining terms. This clause, relative to fruit and fish, is now a very old one in policies of insurance. The insurer undertakes for all losses, except particular damage, unless the ship be stranded: he engages against a total loss. What is a loss? The total loss of the thing insured is the absolute destruction of it, by the wreck of the ship. The fish may all come to port; though from the nature of the commodity, it may be damaged, it may be stinking: still as the commodity specifically remains, the underwriter is discharged.

The other judges concurred, Mr. Justice Buller observing, that from the first introduction of the clause in the year 1749, till the present time, the underwriter never has been held answerable, but in cases where there has been a total loss of the commodity.

There is indeed a case in Sir John Strange's reports, which seems to militate against the above decisions.

Boyfield v.
Brown.

3 Stra. 1065.

Upon the execution of a writ of enquiry before Lord Hardwicke, when Chief Justice, it appeared, that the defendant was an insurer to the amount of 200*l.* upon corn, the value of which was 217*l.*: that the corn was so damaged in the voyage, that it sold for 67*l.* only, and the freight came to 80*l.* The question upon this case was, whether as the freight exceeded the salvage, this was not to be considered as a total loss.

The Chief Justice was of opinion, that within the reason of deducting the freight, when the salvage exceeds it; the plaintiff in this case, wherein it fell short, was entitled to have it considered as a total loss. The jury accordingly found for the plaintiff.

Upon this case, it may be observed, that it was decided prior to the introduction of the clause, upon which so much has lately been said; and consequently, such a decision can have no weight now, because the law is altered on account of the agreement of the parties. Indeed the case I am about to cite was exactly similar in circumstances to Bayfield v. Brown: but Lord Mansfield in his charge to the jury gave a very different direction; and the jury found accordingly.

It was an action brought on a policy of insurance on goods, on board the Happy Recovery at and from London to St. Augustine, to recover for a total loss. The cargo was peas, which, in a former cause on the same policy, were held to fall within the general denomination of corn, in the memorandum at the foot of the policy. The peas arrived at the place of destination; but being much damaged, the produce of them was less by about three fourths than the freight, which, on account of the ship's arrival at the port of discharge, became due.

Mason v.
Skurray.
Sittings after Hilary Term
1780. at Guildhall.
V. p. 127.

The defence set up by the underwriter was, that if the goods mentioned in the memorandum arrive at the market, though a loss amounting to a total one has happened, the underwriters are not liable. Four or five witnesses conversant in settling losses upon policies being called, proved, that the usage was, in such cases, to hold the underwriter discharged.

Lord Mansfield told the jury, this was a question of consequence, and it turned upon the general import of the exception: the witnesses examined have put it on that point; and they hold, that if the specifick thing come to the port of delivery, the underwriter cannot be called on. How did this matter stand before the year 1749? When the policy was general, and operated as an indemnity, there was little difference between a total and a partial loss. His lordship here stated the determination of Boyfield v. Brown, which, he observed, was prior to the clause in question. But the cases now stand upon the memorandum, which is in very general words. The question is, whether the usage has not explained the generality of the words: if it has, every man, who contracts in a policy under usage, does it, as if the point of usage were inserted in his contract in terms. The witnesses examined all swear it to be understood, that if the specifick thing comes to the market, the memorandum warrants the insurer to be free from any demands for an average, or partial loss. The jury found for the defendant.

Vide ante
c. 2. p. 63.

The case of Boyfield v. Brown has certainly been overturned by this decision, which was recognized as a proper determination in the case of Baillie v. Modigliani, before cited, where Mr. Justice Buller said, that the case in Strange's Reports had been expressly over-ruled by the court in the case of Mason v. Skurray.

When the quantity of damage sustained in the course of the voyage is known, and the amount, which each underwriter upon the policy is liable to pay, is settled, it is usual for the underwriter to endorse on the policy, "adjusted this loss, at so much per cent." or some words to the same effect. This is called an adjustment.

It has been determined, that after an adjustment has been signed by the underwriter, if he refuse to pay, the owner has no occasion to go into the proof of his loss, or any of the circumstances respecting it. This, it is said, has been the invariable custom upon this subject; which seems perfectly just, as the underwriter has under his hand expressly admitted, that the plaintiff has sustained sustained damage to a certain amount. To be sure, if any fraud were discovered in obtaining the adjustment, that might be a ground for setting it aside: but supposing the transaction fair, as we must always do till proof is given to the contrary, the rule of not suffering the adjustment to be contradicted, is fair and equitable.

An action was brought, by the plaintiff against the defendant, on a policy of insurance, which the latter underwrote in November 1743, on the ship George and Henry, captain Bower, at and from Jamaica to London, interest or no interest, free of average, and without benefit of salvage to the insurers, with a warranty annexed to the policy, that the ship should sail from Jamaica, with the fleet that came out under convoy of the Ludlow Castle man of war. The ship sailed with the fleet under that convoy, but was damaged so much, as to oblige her to bear away for Charlestown, where she was condemned and broken up. The plaintiff demanded his insurance; and all the underwriters, being satisfied of the truth of the case, paid their loss, except the defendant, who went so far as to settle it, and according to the custom upon these occasions, underwrote the policy in these words “adjusted the loss on this policy, at ninety-eight pounds per cent. which I do agree to pay one month after date, London 5th July 1745. Henry Gouldney.”

Hog v. Gouldney,
Sittings after Trin. 1745.
at Guildhall.
Beaves Lex
Mer. 310.

When the note became due, he insisted on fuller proof, particularly of the ship's sailing with convoy, and her condemnation: but as it always was the custom, after adjustment and a promise to pay, never to require any further proof, but to pay the loss; and Lord Chief Justice Lee being of opinion, that this was to be considered as a note of hand, and that the plaintiff had no occasion to enter into the proof of the loss, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. The same rule was pursued in the following year in another case,

Beaves Lex
Merc. 398.

Thelluson v.
Fletcher.
Dougl. 301.

Vide post.
c. 14.

before Lord Chief Justice Lee, between Hewitt and Flexney.

The spirit of this rule was adopted in a very modern case, in an insurance upon goods on board a foreign ship, "the policy to be deemed sufficient proof of interest in case of loss." The defendant suffered judgment to go against him by default; and on a motion to set aside the writ of enquiry, the court of King's Bench said, that although such a policy would be void in this country, by virtue of the statute of the 19th Geo. 2. c. 37, yet the statute did not extend to policies on foreign ships: and in this case the underwriter, having suffered judgment to go by default, has confessed the plaintiff's title to recover; and the amount of that loss was fixed, by his own stipulation in the policy, and which he cannot now controvert.

One rule relative to adjustments remains still to be mentioned, which is, that if an insurer pay money for a total loss, and in fact it be so at the time of adjustment; if it afterwards turn out to be only a partial loss, he shall not recover back the money so paid to the insured. But substantial justice is done, by putting him in the place of the insured, and giving him all the advantages that may arise from the salvage.

De Costa v.
Firth.
4 Burr. 1966.

This rule was settled by the King's Bench in the year 1766. It was an action on the case for 200 l. upon an indebitatus assumpsit, for so much money had and received to the use of the plaintiff. Non assumpsit was pleaded, and issue joined. It was brought by the insurer against the insured, to recover back what he had paid him. At the trial, a case was reserved for the opinion of the court. The facts were; that a policy had been underwritten by the plaintiff, for the insurance of any of the packet boats, that should sail from Lisbon to Falmouth, or such other port in England, as his majesty should direct, for one whole year, commencing the 1st of October, 1763, and to continue to the 1st of October, 1764, inclusive, upon any kinds of goods and merchandizes whatsoever: and it was agreed, that the goods and merchandizes should be valued at the sum insured on such packet boat, without farther proof of interest than the policy, and to make no return of premium for want of interest being on bullion or goods. And in case of loss or misfortune, the insured were to be at liberty to sue for labour and travel, for, in, and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the said goods, or any part thereof, without prejudice to the insurance, to the charges whereof the insurers were to contribute, each one according to the rate and quantity of his sum insured. The consideration paid by the insured was 10 per cent.; and in case of loss they were to abate nothing. Then follows the usual memorandum.

The case then states, that the defendant had an interest in bullion, on board the Hanover packet, being one of the king's packets between Lisbon and Falmouth: that on the 2d of December, 1763, it was totally lost off Falmouth, in a voyage between Lisbon and Falmouth; and the loss was adjusted, in writing under the policy, in the words following:—

“ Adjusted a loss on this policy of 100 l. per “ cent. the Hanover packet, captain Sherborn, “ being totally lost at Falmouth. Should any “ salvage hereafter be recovered, the insured “ promises to refund to the insurer whatever “ he may so recover, in such proportion as the “ sum insured bears to the whole interest.
 “ London, 23 October, 1764, for Richard Seward, “ Michael Firth.”

The insurer paid the whole money insured, which was 200 l. In April, 1765, the iron trunk, which contained all the bullion, was fished up; and thereby all the bullion was recovered without prejudice, and delivered to the defendant. The defendant's expence of salvage amounted to 63 L. 8 s. 2 d. of which the plaintiff's proportion came to 48 L. 4 s. which the defendant paid into court.

The question was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover?

Vide post.
c. 14.

The court held, that this was a policy of a peculiar sort; and that it was good within the exception of the 19th George 2. c. 37. which says, that certain policies of a particular form shall be void, except on effects from any port in Europe, or America, in the possession of the crowns of Spain or Portugal. This is a mixed policy; partly a wager policy, partly an open one: it is a valued policy, and fairly so, without fraud or misrepresentation. Therefore the loss having happened, the insured is entitled to recover as for a total loss. The insurer agreed to the value; and cannot be allowed to dispute it. The insured has received the money for a total loss: and there is no want of conscience in retaining it. The cases, cited at the bar, only tend to shew, that where it appears, before adjustment, to be but a partial loss, the underwriter shall pay no more than the real damage: the reason of which decision is, that the insured must shew the whole case, as it then stood. But in the present case, there was a total loss at the time of the adjustment. The adjustment in this case makes an end of the question. Here is a solemn abandonment, and a solemn agreement, "that the insurers shall be content with salvage in such proportion as the sum insured bears to the whole interest." There was a total loss at the time of the adjustment (which is the same as if the damages had then been recovered in an action.) Here is no sort of fraud, nor any thing that is against any law; and to refund more than in that proportion would be contrary to the underwriter's own agreement. Therefore the net proportion only, in respect to the plaintiff's subscription, after deduction of salvage, ought ought to be returned, and that is paid into court. The posse was ordered to be delivered to the defendant.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

Of General or Gross Average.

AVERAGE, in that sense in which we are ^{3 Burr. 1555.} now to consider it, signifies a contribution to a general loss: but in order to satisfy the reader, it will be necessary to give a more particular description of it.

Whatever the master of a ship in distress, with ^{1 Magens 55.} the advice of his officers and sailors, deliberately resolves to do, for the preservation of the whole, in cutting away masts or cables, or in throwing goods overboard to lighten his vessel, which is what is meant by jettison or jetson, is in all places permitted to be brought into a general or gross average: in which all who are concerned in ship, freight, and cargo, are to bear an equal, or proportionable part, of the loss of what was so sacrificed for the common welfare; and it must be made good by the insurers in such proportions, as they have underwritten. In the works of wri- ^{Beawes 147.} ters upon commercial affairs, we very often meet with the word contribution, also signifying the thing just described: and in a marine sense, average and contribution are synonymous terms.

This obligation, which, by the laws of all the maritime countries in Europe, binds the proprietor of the goods or ship saved to contribute to the relief of those whose goods are thrown overboard, is founded on the great principle of distributive justice: for it would be hard that

that one man should suffer by an act, which the common safety rendered necessary; and that those who received a benefit from that act should make no satisfaction to him who had sustained the loss.

Leg. Rhod.
f. 2. art. 9.

Laws of Wisbuy,
art. 20.
L. 2. c. 6. f. 3.

Beawes Lex
Merc. 148.

This obligation, which is tacitly entered into by all who have property at sea, was introduced by the Rhodians. Their laws most equitably enacted, that all the property on board should contribute to this necessary and general loss; and in modern constitutions we find very little alteration in the doctrine of averages, from that established at Rhodes. Similar regulations were made by the laws of Wisbuy, and as I have already said, they are now become general. From Molloy we learn, that the Rhodian laws upon this subject were introduced into England by William the Conqueror.

In order to make the act of throwing the goods overboard legal, three things must concur. 1st. That what is so condemned to destruction, be in consequence of a deliberate and voluntary consultation held between the master and men.

2dly, That the ship be in distress, and that sacrificing a part be necessary in order to preserve the rest.

3dly, That the saving of the ship and cargo be actually owing to the means used with that sole view.

Laws of Wisbuy,
art. 20.

Laws of O-leron, art. 8.

Beawes 148.
Molloy, l. 2.
c. 6. f. 2.

It appears also, by the laws of Wisbuy, that in an emergency of such a nature as to justify lightening the ship, it was necessary first to consult the owner of the goods or the supercargo; but if they would not consent, the merchandize might, notwithstanding their refusal, be ejected, if it appeared necessary to the rest of the people on board; a regulation evidently founded in necessity, to prevent a sordid individual from obstructing a measure so essential to the general safety.

If the ship ride out the storm, and arrive in safety at the port of destination, the captain must make

make regular protests, and must swear, in which oath some of the crew must join, that the goods were cast overboard for no other cause, but for the safety of the ship and the rest of the cargo. And as the law has authorized such proceedings in these cases of imminent necessity, it will protect those who act bonâ fide, and will indemnify them against all consequences. Thus in an action of trespass against a man for throwing goods overboard, he pleaded specially, that it was done in a storm, in a case of necessity, navis levandæ causâ; and if that act had not been done, that the passengers must all have perished. The court held, that the plea was good, and the defendant had judgment. Moufe's case, 12 Co. 63.

It is evident from one of the rules above stated, that there can be no contribution without the ejection of some goods, and the saving of others: but it is not always necessary for the purpose of contribution, that the ship should arrive at the port of destination.

But I wish to be better understood. If the jettison does not save the ship, but she perishes in the storm, there shall be no contribution of such goods as may happen to be saved; because the object, for which the goods were thrown overboard, was not attained. But if the ship, being once preserved by such means, and continuing her course, should afterwards be lost, the property saved from the second accident, shall contribute to the loss sustained by those whose goods were cast out upon the former occasion. Ord. Lew. 14. tit. Contribu. art. 15. 16, Ord. of Hamb. 2 Mag. 240. Ord. of Rotterdam. 2 Magens 98.

Magens, in his preliminary Essay on Insurances, advances a different doctrine, and contends, that if a ship be saved by throwing goods overboard, and afterwards perish by another calamity, the goods saved shall not contribute to the former loss. He puts a case to illustrate his meaning; but the ordinances above referred to, as will appear from the abstract of them in the preceding paragraph, directly contradict his 1 Mag. 56.

1 Mag. 57.

his positions, although he seems to have had those ordinances in view when he advanced them. It was necessary to say thus much, because the doctrines of such an useful writer are often received implicitly; erroneous opinions are adopted and confirmed, because they are not accurately examined: and the more respectable the writer is, the greater is the danger which is to be apprehended. But what is still more remarkable, in the very next paragraph to that I last mentioned, he puts a similar case, in which he admits that the goods saved ought to contribute.

Beawes Lex
Merc. 148.

1 Mag. 64.

Beawes 148.

The writers upon this subject have stated with much minuteness and accuracy, the various accidents and charges, that will entitle the party suffering to call upon the rest for a contribution. I doubt whether it be necessary to be so particular in this place; because, we may gather in general from the description given of average at the beginning of this chapter, that all losses sustained, and expences incurred voluntarily and deliberately; with a view to prevent a total loss of the ship and cargo, ought to be equally borne by the ship and her remaining lading. Such for instance is the damage sustained, in defending a ship against an enemy or pirate: such is the expence of curing, and attendance upon the officers or mariners wounded in such defence: and such also is the sum which the master may have promised to pay for the ransom of his ship to any privateer or pirate, when taken. A master who has cut his mast, parted with his cable, or abandoned any other part of the ship and cargo, in a storm, in order to save the ship, is well entitled to this compensation: but if he should lose them by the storm, the loss falls only upon the ship and freight; because the tempest only was the occasion of this loss, without the deliberation of the master and crew; and was not done with a view to save the ship and lading. Upon the same principle it is, that that by the naval laws of Wibury, which in this respect, as well as in many others, have been adopted by modern states, it was declared, that when a ship arrived at the mouth of a harbour, and the master, finding that his ship was too heavy laden to sail up, was obliged to put part of the cargo into hoys and barges; the owners of the ship and of the goods that remained, were obliged to contribute, if the lighters perished. But if the ship should be lost, and the lighters saved, the owners of the goods so preserved, were not to contribute to the proprietors of the ship and cargo lost. The difference is this, the lightening of the ship was an act of deliberation for the general benefit: whereas the circumstance of the lighters being saved, and the ship lost, was accidental, no way proceeding from a regard for the whole.

Art. 56.

Ordin. of France and Rotterdam.
2 Magens
96. 183.
Molloy, tit.
Average.
s. 12.

1 Mag. 56.

It is not only the value of the goods thrown overboard that must be considered in a general average; but also the value of such as receive any damage by wet, &c. from the jettison of the rest.

Beawes 148.
Molloy, l. 2.
c. 6. s. 8.

It is said, that if a ship be taken by force, carried in to some port, and the crew remain on board to take care of and reclaim her, not only the charges of reclaiming shall be brought into a general average; but the wages and expences of the ship's company during her arrest, from the time of her capture, and being disturbed in the voyage. In this idea Magens concurs, and asserts, that such expences are allowed as average in Londen, as well as elsewhere. He denies, however, and as it seems, justly denies, that an allowance would be made under general average, for sailors wages and victuals, when they are under a necessity of performing quarantine, in which case the master would have been obliged to maintain and pay them, though his vessel had arrived only in ballast. But at the same time he admits, that Beawes 150.

1 Mag. 67.

OF GENERAL OR

and hence their preservation will be a common benefit.

Both by law and custom, the wages of sailors are not to contribute to the general loss; a provision intended to make this description of men more easily consent to a jettison, as they do not then risk their all, being still assured that their wages will be paid.

1 Mag. 69.

The way of fixing a right sum, by which the average ought to be computed, can only be, by examining what the whole ship, freight and cargo, if no jettison had been made, would have produced neat, if they had all belonged to one person, and been sold for ready money. And this is the sum whereon the contribution should be made, all the particular goods bearing their net proportion.

Ord. of Genoa and France.

2 Mag. 207.
237. 339.

Vide the last chapter.

In no respect whatever do the ordinances of foreign states differ so much, as in the manner of settling the contribution of the ship and freight. In some places, the ship contributes for the whole of her value and freight; in others, for the half of her value, and one third of her freight: and again, in others, both ship and freight are to contribute for one half. By the laws of Koningsberg, Hamburg, and Copenhagen, the ship is to contribute for the whole of her value and freight: They also declare, that the value of the ship shall be that which she was worth when she arrived; and that from the freight a deduction shall be made of the men's wages, pilotage, and such other charges, as come under the name of petty average, of which it is customary every where, as we have before observed, for the cargo to bear two thirds, and the ship one.

The English writers upon commerce are totally silent in this respect; and therefore custom must be our guide: and I think from that we may collect, that the ship, freight, and cargo, are to bear an equal and proportional part of what was so sacrificed for the common good.

The

The sea laws of different countries vary no less than upon the former question, in fixing at what prices goods thrown overboard shall be estimated, and for what value those saved are to contribute.

By the ordinances of Rotterdam, Stockholm, and Copenhagen, if the accident, which occasioned the general average, hapened before half the voyage was performed, the jettison was to be estimated at prime cost; but if after that period, then at the price for which such goods would sell, at the place of discharge, freight, duties, and ordinary charges deducted. That distinction is now, however, exploded in England, and the custom has become general of estimating the goods saved and lost, at the price for which the goods saved were sold; freight and all other charges being first deducted. This rule is agreeable to the marine laws of Wibsey, which declare, that the goods thrown overboard, shall be brought into a gross average, and shall be rated at the same price for which other merchandize of the same sort, preserved from the sea or enemy, was sold. This custom mentioned by Molloy was certainly new in England at the time he wrote; for it appears by Malyne, that in 1622, the distinction was observed of estimating the goods at prime cost, if the jettison happened, before half the voyage was performed; and if after, at the price the rest of the goods sold for, at the place of discharge. However, Molloy is a more modern authority; and Magens says, that the prevailing mode of settling averages now adopted in England is conformable to that rule, which has abolished the distinction.

Gold, silver and jewels, at most places, contribute to a general average, according to their full value, and in the same manner as any other species of merchandize. It has been said, that an immemorial custom has prevailed at Amsterdam, that gold and silver shall only contribute for half their value: the reason for such a custom, tom,

L

2 Mag. 100.
285. 339.Molloy, tit.
Aver. f. 15.Leg. Wilsb.
art. 20.Malyne Lex
Merc. 1st part
c. 26.

1 Mag. 62.

Molloy, tit. Average, f. 4. tom, one is at a loss to conjecture. In England, no such custom prevails; but money and jewels must fall into the general average at their full price: and a modern writer assures us, that the practice was such in London when he wrote; and such, I believe it to be at this day.

1 Mag. 62.

Roccus de Navibus. Not. 96.

1 Mag. 60.

The contribution is in general not made till the ship arrive at the place of delivery: but accidents may happen, which may cause a contribution before she reach her destined port. Thus when a vessel has been obliged to make a jettison, or, by the damages suffered, soon after sailing, is obliged to return to her port of discharge; the necessary charges of her repairs, and the replacing the goods thrown overboard, may then be settled by a general average.

Thus I have endeavoured to lay before the reader an idea of what is meant by average; and, in order to do that more distinctly, I have defined what average is; I have shewn its origin; and what the necessary requisites are to render the act, whence averages arise, legal. I then stated in general what accidents or expences would authorize the sufferer to call for a contribution; the different kinds of property that were subject to such contribution; and lastly, the mode by which the value of this property was to be ascertained.

It only remains now to state, that the insurers are liable to pay the insured for all expences arising from general average, in proportion to the sums they have underwritten. Roccus says, Roccus de assicurationibus. Not. 62.

“ Factu facto, ob maris tempestatem, pro sublevanda
 “ navi, an teneantur assicuratores ad solvendum “ æstimationem rerum jactarum domino ipsarum? Dic “ eos non teneri, quia pro rebus jactis fit contribu- “ tio, inter omnes merces habentes in illa navi pro “ solvendo pretio domino ipsarum, et ideo si assen- “ ratus recuperat pretium rerum jactarum, non “ potest agere contra assicuratores; tamen tenentur “ assuratores ad reficiendum illam ratam et por- “ tionem, quam solvit assicuratus in illam contribu- “ tionem

"honem faciendo inter omnes, habentes merces in illa navi, quæ portio cum non recuperetur ab aliis, babetur pro deperdita, et proinde ad illam por-tionem tenentur asscuratores."

The opinion of this learned civilian is agreeable to the laws of all the trading powers on the continent of Europe, as well as to those of England, where the insurer, by his contract, engages to indemnify against all losses arising from a general average.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

Of Salvage.

SALVAGE is so necessarily connected with the two former chapters, that it will be proper to take it into consideration here, before we proceed to the other parts of this enquiry.

Salvage is an allowance made for saving a ship, or goods, or both from the dangers of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies : and it is also sometimes used to signify the thing itself, which is saved; but it is in the former sense only, in which we are at present to consider it.

The propriety and justice of such an allowance must be evident to every one; for nothing can be more reasonable than that he, who has recovered the property of another from imminent danger, by great labour, or perhaps at the hazard of his life, should be rewarded by him, who has been so materially benefited by that labour. Accordingly, all maritime states, from the Rhodians down to the present time, have made certain regulations, fixing the rate of salvage in some instances, and leaving it, in others, to depend upon the particular circumstances.

Beaves Lex
Merc. 146.

Kaim's Princ. of Eq. Introduct. p. 6.

Leg. Rhod.
l. 2. art. 65.
46. 47.

The law of England, the decisions of which are not surpassed by those of any other nation, in justice and humanity, was not backward in adopting a doctrine so equitable in its nature, and so beneficial to those whose property was endangered.

Hartfort

v. Jones.

1 L.J. Raym.

393.

2 Saik. 654.

Thus in an action of trover, the defendants pleaded, that the goods, for which the action was brought, were in a ship, which took fire, and that they hazarded their lives to save them: but that they were ready to deliver the goods, if the plaintiff would pay 4*l.* for salvage. The court, upon a general demurrer to this plea, were obliged to give judgment for the plaintiff, because the special plea did not confess a conversion. But upon the general point, for which this case is cited, Lord Chief Justice Holt held, that the defendants might retain the goods till payment of the salvage, as well as a taylor, an ostler, or a common carrier: and salvage is allowed by all nations; it being reasonable, that a man should be rewarded, who hazards his life in the service of another. Therefore his lordship, in favour of so just a claim, allowed the defendant to waive his special plea, and plead the general issue.

As the propriety of such an allowance is admitted by all, the only difficulty that can arise upon the subject is, to ascertain in what proportions these gratuities and rewards must be allowed.

Vide the passages last cited.

Leg. Oler.
art. 4.

The laws of Rhodes fixed the rate of salvage in several instances, sometimes giving for salvage one-fifth of what was saved; at other times, only a tenth; and at others, one half. The regulations of Oleron left it more unsettled, and declared, that the courts of judicature should award to the salvors, such a proportion of the goods saved, as they should think a sufficient recompense for the service performed, and the expence incurred. Almost every state has regulations on this head peculiar to itself; and the legislature of this country has by various statutes expressed its ideas ideas upon the subject. I shall first consider what rule it has established in cases of wreck; and then what the rate of salvage is in cases of recapture.

When a ship has been wrecked, the law of England has followed the laws of Oleron, in declaring, that reasonable salvage only shall be allowed. But the statute will best shew the idea of the legislature.

It appears from the preamble, that the infamous practices, which a former statute of 27. Edward 3. c. 12. had endeavoured to suppress, of plundering those ships which were driven on shore, and seizing whatever could be laid hold of as lawful prize, still continued; or that if the property were restored to the owners, the demand for salvage was so exorbitant, that the inevitable ruin of the trader was the immediate consequence. The statute, in order to prevent these mischiefs in future, enacted, that if a ship was in danger of being stranded, or run ashore, the sheriffs, justices, mayors, constables, or officers of the customs, nearest the place of danger, should, upon application made to them, summon and call together as many men as should be thought necessary to the assistance, and for the preservation of such ship in distress, and her cargo; and that if any ship, man of war, or merchantman, should be riding at anchor near the place of danger, the constables and officers of the customs might demand of the superior officers of such ship, assistance by his boats and such hands as could be spared: and that if the superior officer should refuse to grant such assistance, he should forfeit 100 l. 12 Anne, Stat. 2. c. 18.

Then follows the section respecting salvage. Sect. 1.

“ And for the encouragement of such persons “ as shall give their assistance to such ships or “ vessels, so in distress as aforesaid, be it enacted, “ that the said collectors of the customs, and the “ master and commanding officer of any ships or “ vessels, and all others, who shall act or be “ employed in the preserving of any such ship or “ vessel in distress, or their cargoes, shall, with-

 “ in thirty days after the service is performed, “ be paid a reasonable reward for the same, by “ the commander, master, or other superior of“ ficer, mariners, or owners of the ship or vessel
 “ so in distress, as aforesaid, or by the merchant, “ whose vessel or goods shall be so saved; and in “ default thereof, the said ship or vessel so saved “ shall remain in the custody of the officers of “ the customs until all charges are paid, and un“ til the officers of the customs, and the master “ or other officer of the ship or vessel, and all “ others employed in the preservation of the ship, “ shall be reasonably gratified for their assistance “ and trouble, or good security given for that “ purpose, to the satisfaction of the parties that “ are to receive the same: and if any disagree“ ment shall take place between the persons, “ whose ships or goods have been saved, and
 “ the officer of the customs, touching the mo“ nies deserved by any of the persons so em“ ployed, it shall be lawful for the commander “ of the ship or vessel so saved, or the owner of “ the goods, or the merchant interested therein, “ and also for the officer of the customs, or his “ deputy, to nominate three of the neighbour“ ing justices of the peace, who shall thereupon “ adjust the quantum of the monies or gratui“ ties to be paid to the several persons acting “ or being employed in the salvage of the said “ ship, vessel, or goods; and such adjustments “ shall be binding upon all parties, and shall be “ recoverable in an action at law: and in case
 “ it shall so happen, that no person shall appear “ to make his claim to all or any of the goods “ that shall be saved, that then the chief officer “ of the customs of the nearest port to the “ place where the said ship or vessel was so in “ distress, shall apply to three of the nearest “ justices

“ justices of the peace, who shall put him, or “ some other responsible person in possession of “ the said goods, such justices taking an ac“ count in writing of the said goods to be sign“ ed by the said officer of the customs: and if “ the said goods shall not be legally claimed “ within the space of twelve months next ensu“ ing, by the rightful owner thereof, then pub“ lic sale shall be made thereof, and if perishable “ goods, forthwith to be sold, and after all “ charges deducted, the residue of the monies “ arising from such sale, with a fair and just ac“ count of the whole, shall be transmitted to “ her majesty’s Exchequer, there to remain for “ the benefit of the rightful owner, when ap“ pearing, who upon an affidavit, or other proof “ made of his or their right or property thereto, “ to the satisfaction of one of the barons of the “ coif of the Exchequer, shall, upon his order, re“ ceive the same out of the Exchequer.”

The statute then goes on to declare, that any Sect. 3.
 other persons, than those mentioned in the preceding clause, endeavouring to enter such ship or vessel without the permission of the superior officer of the ship, or of the officer of the customs, &c. or molesting or hindering them in the preservation of the ship, or defacing the marks of the goods on board such ship, shall make double satisfaction to the party grieved, or, on default thereof, shall be sent to the house of correction for twelve calendar months: and that it shall be lawful for the officers of the ship to repel by force persons so endeavouring to enter without leave.

It is also enacted, that if any goods, stolen Sect. 4.
 from such ship, shall be found on any person,
 they shall be delivered up to the true owner;
 or, on default, such person shall pay treble the value.

The next section declares, that any person, Sect. 5.
 boring holes in a ship in distress, or stealing a pump belonging thereto, shall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy.

This act was made perpetual by the 4 Geo. 1. c. 12.; and as far as relates to our present subject, we can collect, that in cases of wreck, the rate of salvage is not fixed, but must be reasonable; that is, it must be a sufficient recompense to those, who have encountered dangers for the preservation of the ship and cargo, regard at the same time being had to the circumstances of the owner of the property saved: and what shall be a sufficient recompense is to be ascertained by three justices of the peace.

26 Geo. 2.
c. 18.

Notwithstanding this salutary law had passed, the enormities complained of by the statute of queen Anne still continued, to the disgrace of humanity and a civilized people; upon which the legislature were again obliged to interpose by a subsequent statute, which I should perhaps not have mentioned, had it not contained some additional regulations respecting salvage.

Sect. 1.

The statute ordains, that persons, convicted of stealing goods from a ship wrecked, or in distress, or of obstructing the escape of any person from a wreck, or of putting out false lights to lead such ship into danger, shall suffer as felons without benefit of clergy.

Sect. 2.

But where goods of small value shall be stolen, without any circumstances of cruelty, the offender may be indicted for petty larceny.

Sect. 3.

Justices of the peace, upon information of shipwrecked goods being stolen or concealed, are empowered to issue search warrants; and the persons in whose custody they may be found, refusing to deliver them on demand, or to give a satisfactory account how they became possessed thereof, shall be committed to the common gaol for six months, or until payment of the treble value of such goods.

Sect. 4.

Goods offered to sale, suspected of being shipwrecked, are to be stopped; and notice shall be immediately given to a justice of the peace,
and

and if the person offering the same to sale cannot make out the property to be lawfully in him, the goods shall be returned to the owner, upon a reasonable reward for such seizure, (to be ascertained by the justice :) and the offender shall be committed to the common gaol for six months, or until payment of the treble value of the said goods.

And be it further enacted, “ that in case any Sect. 5.
 “ person or persons, not employed by the master,
 “ mariners or owners, or other persons lawfully “ authorized in the salvage of any ship or vessel; “ or the cargo or provision thereof, shall, in the “ absence of the persons so employed and autho“ rized, save any such ship, vessel, goods, or “ effects, and cause the same to be carried, for “ the benefit of the owners or proprietors, into “ port, or to any near adjoining custom-house,
 “ or other place of safe custody, immediately “ giving notice thereof to some justice of the “ peace, magistrate, or custom-house or excise “ officer; or shall discover to such magistrate,
 “ or officer, where any such goods or effects “ are wrongfully bought, sold, or concealed,
 “ then such person or persons shall be entitled to a “ reasonable reward for such services, to be paid “ by the masters or owners of such vessels or “ goods, and to be adjusted in case of disagree“ ment about the quantum, in like manner as the “ salvage is to be adjusted and paid, by virtue “ of a statute made in the 12th of queen Vide supra.
 “ Anne.”

“ And be it further enacted, that for the bet- Sect. 6.
 “ ter ascertaining the salvage to be paid in pur“ suance of the present act, and the act before “ mentioned, and for the more effectual putting “ the said acts in execution, the justice of the “ peace, mayor, bailiff, collector of the customs, “ or chief constable, who shall be nearest to the “ place where any ship, goods, or effects, shall “ be stranded or cast away, shall forthwith give “ publick

“ publick notice for a meeting to be held as soon
 “ as possible of the sheriff or his deputy, the jus“ tices of the peace, mayors, or other chief ma“ gistrates of towns corporate, coroners or com“ missioners of the land tax, or any five or more “ of them, who are hereby empowered and re“ quired to give aid in the execution of this and “ the said former act, and to employ proper per“ sons for the saving of ships in distress, and “ such ships, vessels, and effects, as shall be “ stranded or cast away; and also to examine “ persons upon oath, touching or concerning
 “ the same, or the salvage thereof, and to adjust “ the quantum of such salvage, and distribute the “ same among the persons concerned in such sal“ vage, in case of disagreement among the par“ ties, or the said persons; and that every such “ magistrate, &c. attending and acting at such “ meetings, shall be paid four shillings a day “ for his expences in such attendance out of the “ goods and effects saved by their care or di“ rection.”

Sec. 7.

“ Provided always, that if the charges and “ rewards for salvage, directed to be paid by the “ former statute, and by this act, shall not be “ fully paid, or sufficient security given for the “ same, within forty days next after the said “ services performed, then it shall be lawful for “ the officer of the customs concerned in such “ salvage, to borrow or raise so much money as “ shall be sufficient to satisfy and pay such charges “ and rewards, or any part thereof, then re“ maining unpaid, or not secured as aforesaid,
 “ by or upon one or more bill or bills of sale, “ under his hand and seal, of the ship or vessel,
 “ or cargo saved, or such part thereof, as shall “ be sufficient, redeemable upon payment of “ the principal sum borrowed, and interest for “ the same, at the rate of 4 per cent. per “ annum.”

The

The act also declares, that the commissioners Sect. 9.
of the land tax, the deputy-sheriff, the coroner, and the officers of excise in each county, shall be the proper officers for putting these acts in execution, together with those persons respectively named in the act of queen Anne. In the Sect. 10.
Cinque Ports however, the execution of these acts is entrusted to the lord warden of the Cinque Ports, the lieutenant of Dover Castle, the deputy warden of the Cinque Ports, the judge official and commissary of the court of Admiralty of the Cinque Ports, two ancient towns, and the members thereof, and to all and every other person and persons appointed, or to be appointed by the lord warden of the Cinque Ports.

The statute proceeds to say, that persons con- Sect. 11. and victed of assaulting any magistrate or officer, when 124.
in the exercise of his duty respecting the preservation of any ship, vessel, goods or effects, shall be transported for seven years; and the justices, in the absence of the sheriff, may take a sufficient force with him to repress violence. It directs in Sect. 15.
the last place, that the officer of the customs who shall act in preserving any ship or vessel in distress, or the cargo thereof, shall cause all persons belonging to the said ship or vessel, and others who can give any account thereof, or of the cargo thereof, to be examined upon oath before some justice of the peace, as to the name or description of the said ship or vessel, and the names of the master, commander, or chief officer, and owners thereof, and of the owners of the said cargo, and of the ports or places from, or to which the said ship or vessel was bound, and the occasion of the said ship's distress; which examination the justices are to take down in writing, and they shall deliver a true copy thereof, together with a copy of the account of the goods, to the officer of the customs, who shall transmit the same to the secretary of the Admiralty for the time being, that he may publish the same, or so much thereof, in the London

Sect. 18.

London Gazette, as shall be necessary for the information of persons interested therein. This act is not to extend to Scotland.

Thus anxiously has the legislature provided for the preservation of property wrecked, thereby diminishing those calamities which must unavoidably happen to all concerned in foreign commerce; and with no less anxiety and wisdom, it has appointed certain magistrates to ascertain what shall be a sufficient allowance for the salvage of a ship or goods in cases of wreck. The necessity of leaving the quantum to the arbitration of proper persons, to be decided according to the circumstances of each case, is obvious; because it is impossible to suppose two instances of such a calamity so similar to each other, that the trouble, danger and expence of both shall be exactly equal. It would be contrary, therefore, to the first principles of justice to decide, that the same sum should be the allowance, or recompense for every possible case of salvage. For instance, if a ship be found adrift at sea, having been abandoned by the master and crew, it seems reasonable, that the allowance for salvage should be greater than in a case where a man merely picks up goods cast upon the shore, and carries them to a place of security. Thus much for salvage in case of a wreck.

Vide ante,
c. 4. p. 80.

We have formerly seen, that when the ships or goods of British subjects were retaken from an enemy, the original owner was entitled, by the marine law, to have them restored, upon paying to the recaptors a reasonable salvage, provided the recapture was before condemnation. It was also observed, that the statute law had extended the right of the original owner; so that he was entitled to have his ship and goods restored to him, whether they were retaken after condemnation or before, however distant the time of recapture might be from that of the original taking. The same statute has also fixed the precise rate of salvage, which, in the various various instances mentioned in the act, the recaptors shall be entitled to demand.

“ Be it enacted, that if any ship, vessel, or 13 Geo. 2.
 “ boat, taken as prize, or any goods therein, c. 4. s. 18.
 “ shall appear and be proved in the Court of 29 Geo. 2.
 “ Admiralty, to have belonged to any of his ma- c. 34. s. 24.
 “ jesty’s subjects of Great Britain or Ireland, or “ any of the dominions and territories con“ tinuing under his majesty’s protection and “ obedience, which were before taken or sur-“ prized by any of his majesty’s enemies, and “ again surprized and retaken by any of his ma-“ jesty’s ships of war, or any private man of war, “ or other ship, vessel, or boat, under his ma-“ jesty’s protection or obedience, that then such “ ships, vessels, boats and goods, and every such “ part and parts thereof as aforesaid, belonging “ to such his majesty’s subjects, shall be adjudged “ to be restored, and shall be, by decree of the “ said Court of Admiralty, accordingly restored “ to such former owner or proprietor or proprie“ tors, he or they paying for and in lieu of sal“ vage, if taken by one of his majesty’s ships of “ war, an eighth part of the true value of the ships, “ vessels, boats and goods, respectively so to be re- “ stored; which salvage shall be answered and “ paid to the captains, officers and seamen in the “ said man of war, to be divided as before in this “ act is directed: and if taken by a privateer or “ other ship, vessel, or boat, after having been “ in the possession of the enemy, twenty-four “ hours, one eighth part of the true value of the “ said ships, vessels, boats, and goods: and if “ above twenty-four hours, and under forty-“ eight hours, a fifth part thereof: and if above “ forty-eight hours and under ninety-six hours,
 “ a third part thereof: and if above ninety-six “ hours, a moiety thereof: all which payments to “ be made to any privateer, or other ship, vessel
 “ or boat, shall be without any deductions.
 “ And if such ship so retaken, shall appear to “ have

“ have been, after the taking by the enemy, by “ them set forth as a man of war, the former “ owners or proprietors, to whom the same shall “ be restored, shall be adjudged to pay, and shall “ pay for salvage, the full moiety of the true “ value of the said ship so taken and restored, “ without deduction.”

Parliament has, by these statutes, thus fixed and ascertained the rate of salvage, in case of a recapture, equitably proportioning the amount of the reward to the length of time the ship or goods have been in the possession of the enemy; because the longer they remain in the hands of the enemy, so much the less is the hope of recovery. At the same time, however, the statute has fixed a boundary, beyond which the allowance shall not pass; namely, that in no case whatever, shall the recaptors be entitled to more than a moiety of the property thus rescued from the enemy.

Beaves Lex
 Merc. 147.

It is said in the statute, that the salvage shall be a proportion of the ships and goods so restored: but a writer upon mercantile law observes, that the wearing apparel of the master and seamen are always excepted from the allowance of salvage.

Beaves 147.

The statute has also said, it must be a fifth, or a third, &c. of the true value. Now the valuation of a ship, in order to ascertain the rate of salvage, may be determined by the policy of insurance, if there is no reason to suspect she is undervalued; and the same rule may be observed as to goods where there are policies upon them. If that, however, should not be the case, the salvors have a right to insist upon a proof of the real value, which may be done by the merchant's invoices, and they must be paid for accordingly.

Vide the Appendix,
 No. 1.

The only question then is, how far the insurers are affected by this allowance of salvage. By their own contract, they expressly agree to indemnify the insured against such charges. “ And
 “ in

“ in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be “ lawful for the assured, their factors, servants, “ and assigns to sue, labour and travel for, in
 “ and about the defence, safeguard, and re“ covery of the said goods and merchandizes,
 “ and ship, &c. or any part thereof, without pre“ judice to this insurance; to the charges “ whereof we the assurers will contribute, each “ one according to the rate or quantity of his “ sum herein assured.”

In order to entitle the insured to recover the expences of salvage, it is not necessary to state them in the declaration, as a special breach of the policy; because an insurance is against all accidents, and salvage is an immediate and necessary consequence of some of those stated in a policy.

Thus in an action on a policy of insurance, for insuring goods on the ship A. the plaintiff declared, that the ship sprung a leak, and sunk in the river, whereby the goods were spoiled: the evidence was, that many of the goods were spoiled, but some were saved. The question was, whether the plaintiffs might give in evidence, the expences of salvage, that not being particularly stated in the declaration, as a breach of the policy.

Carey v.
King.
Cases in B.R.
temp. Hardwicke 304.

Lord Hardwicke.—I think they may give it in evidence, for the insurance is against all accidents. The accident laid in this declaration is, that the ship sunk in the river: it goes on and says, that by reason thereof the goods were spoiled. That is the only special damage laid; yet it is but the common case of a declaration that lays a special damage, where the plaintiff may give in evidence any damage that is within his cause of action. It was objected, that such a breach of the policy should be laid, that the insurer may have notice to defend it. Now it is so in this case, for they have laid the accident, which is sufficient notice, because it must of course follow, that some damage did happen.

But

But although the insured may recover from the insurer the expences of salvage; yet he shall only be entitled to an indemnity, and shall not receive a double satisfaction for the same loss. Thus if the insurer should have paid to the insured the expences arising from salvage; and afterwards on account of some particular circumstances, the loss should be repaired by some unexpected means, the insurer shall stand in the place of the insured, and receive the sum thus paid to atone for the loss.

Randal v.
Cockran.
1 Vez. 98.

It was so determined in a case before Lord Hardwicke in Chancery. The king having granted general letters of reprisal on the Spaniards for the benefit of his subjects, in consideration of the losses they sustained by unjust captures, the commissioners would not suffer the insurers to make claim to part of the prizes, but the owners only; although they were already satisfied for their loss by the insurers, who thereupon brought the present bill. The Lord Chancellor was of opinion, that the plaintiffs had the plainest equity that could be. The person originally sustaining the loss was the owner; but after satisfaction made to him, the insurer becomes the owner. No doubt, but from that time, as to the goods themselves, if restored in specie, or compensation made for them, the insured stands as a trustee for the insurer, in proportion for what he paid; although the commissioners did right in avoiding being entangled in accounts, and in adjusting the proportion between them. Their commission was limited in time; they see who was owner; nor was it material to them, to whom he assigned his interest, as it was in effect after satisfaction made.

Cases, however, may, and do frequently arise, where the salvage is so high, the other expences are so great, and the object of the voyage is so far defeated, that the insured is allowed, by the laws of all trading nations, to abandon his interest in the property saved to the insurer, and to call call upon him to contribute, as if a total loss had actually happened. What circumstances shall be deemed sufficient to justify the insured in making such an abandonment, will be the subject of the following chapter.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

Of Abandonment.

WE have formerly seen, that the insured, before he can demand a recompense from the underwriter for a total loss, must cede or abandon to him his right to all the property that may chance to be recovered from shipwreck, capture, or any other peril, stated in the policy. It has also been observed, and from the preceding sentence it is obvious, that when we speak of a total loss, with respect to insurances, we do not always mean, that the thing insured is absolutely lost and destroyed: but that by some of the usual perils, it is become of so little value, as to entitle the insured to call upon the underwriter to accept of what is saved, and to pay the full amount of his insurance, as if a total loss had actually happened. Indeed, the word abandonment conveys the idea, that the whole property is not lost; for it is impossible to cede or abandon that which does not exist. When the underwriter has discharged his insurance, and the abandonment is made, he stands in the place of the insured, and is entitled to all the advantages resulting from that situation.

Chap. 4. p.

92.

Pothier's
Traité du contrat d'As-surance 133.

Vide c. 6.

p. 110.

See Randall
v. Cockran,
1 Vez. 98.
ante c. 8.

From what has been said then, it appears, that abandonment dates its origin from the period at which the contract of insurance was itself introduced;

M

duced;

France, Rotterdam, Bilbao, Middleburg.

Pothier 133.
Ord. of Lew.
14. art. 47.
Ord. of Bilbao 32.

2 Burr. 697.

Roccus, Not 50.

duced; because insurance being a contract of indemnity, the insured can recover no more than the amount of the loss actually sustained: but if he were allowed to recover for a total loss, and might also retain the property saved, he would be a considerable gainer, which the law will not allow. Accordingly we find, that the doctrine of abandonment has obtained a place in the laws of all the maritime nations in the world, where insurance has been known: and in all those laws the definition of it is the same, namely, that when any goods or ships, that are insured, happen to be lost, taken, or spoiled, the insured is obliged to abandon such goods or ships for the benefit of the insurers, before he can demand any satisfaction from them. In this respect also, they seem to be agreed, that when an abandonment is made, it must be a total, not a partial one; that is, one part of the property insured shall not be retained, and the other part abandoned; a regulation certainly founded in justice.

The propriety and justice of abandoning in certain cases to the insurers being apparent, it will be proper to consider in what cases, and under what circumstances, the insured is entitled to exercise this power: for although in all cases the insured has a right to say, he will not abandon; yet he cannot at his pleasure harass the insurer, by saying he will abandon, and thereby turn that, which, in its own nature, was only a partial, into a total loss.

In questions of this nature, the opinion of learned foreigners must always have weight: because they are not questions of positive regulation, or municipal law; but of general and extensive import: not confined to any particular state, but founded on the great principles of reason, justice, and universal law.

The learned Roccus, who has accurately examined the works of those writers that went before him, and who, after stating their various opinions, forms his own conclusions, has not been silent silent upon this occasion. He puts this question.

 “ Asscurator, qui jam solvit æstimationem mer“ cium deperditarum; si postea dictæ merces ap“ pareant et recuperatæ sint, an possit cogere do“ minum ad accipiendas illas, et ad reddendam “ sibi æstimationem, quam dedit ?” He answers, “ Distingue; aut merces, vel aliqua pars ipsa-“ rum appareant, et restitui possint, ante solutionem “ æstimationis, et tunc tenetur dominus mercium “ illas recipere, et pro illâ parte mercium apparen“ tium, liberabitur asscurator, nam qui tenetur ad “ certam quantitatem respectu certæ speciei, dan“ do illam, liberatur, et etiam, quia contractus “ asscurationis, est conditionalis, scilicet si merces “ deperdantur: non autem dicuntur deperditæ, “ si postea reperiantur. Verum si merces non “ appareant in illa pristinâ bonitate, aliter fit æsti“ matio, non in totum, sed prout tunc valent.
 “ Aut vero post solutam æstimationem ab asse“ curatore compareant merces, et tunc est in “ electione mercium asscurati vel recipere mer-“ ces, vel retinere pretium.”

And although a subsequent passage in the same author may seem to contradict that just recited, yet when attended to, they are both perfectly consistent. He says, “ sufficit semel extitisse Roccus, No.
 “ conditionem ad beneficium asscurati de amif- 66.
 “ sione navis, etiam quod postea sequeretur re“ cuperatio; nam per talem recuperationem non “ poterit præjudicari asscurato.”

From this passage it may be inferred, that a total loss having once happened, it must always continue so. But it must be understood, with reference to the context, and other parts of the work, from which it appears, that in order to entitle the insured to recover as for a total loss, it must continue total, at the time when the offer of abandonment is made, at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the payment of the money.

Chap. 7. c. 1. In a French treatise, called Le Guidon, it is said, that the insured may abandon to the underwriter, and call upon him for a total loss, if the damage exceed half the value of the thing; or if the voyage be lost, or so interrupted, that the pursuit of it is not worth the freight.

Ord. Lew. 14.
Ord. of Bilb.
Ord. of Rot.
2 Magens.

The same idea, with respect to the circumstances which will justify an abandonment, seems to prevail in almost all the foreign ordinances.

But in no country have the principles of abandonment been more accurately defined than in England: and it must be remembered, that the decisions, from which the following principles are selected, are of the greatest authority; that they are not merely the opinions of private speculative men, but the solemn and deliberate judgment of the grave and learned judges of the English courts; judgments formed after mature deliberation, and serious argument; established upon the solid and permanent basis of reason and good sense.

From those decisions we may collect, that the right to abandon must arise upon the object of the insured being so far defeated, that it is not worth his while to pursue it; such a loss as is equally inconvenient to him, as if it had been total. For instance, if the voyage be absolutely lost, or not worth pursuing; if the salvage be very high, suppose a half; if further expence be necessary; if the insurer will not engage at all events to bear that expence, though it should exceed the value, or fail of success: under these, and many other like circumstances, the insured may disentangle himself, and abandon, notwithstanding there has been a recapture.

2 Burr. 697.
3213.

It is evident, that there may be circumstances, in which it would be contrary to every principle of justice, to suffer the insured to abandon; for a ship might be taken, and escape immediately, which would be no hinderance at all to the voyage:

age; or she might be taken and instantly ransomed, which would amount only to a partial loss; in which cases, the insured shall not be allowed to demand a recompense for a total loss.

It is also material to observe, that the right to abandon must depend upon the nature of the case at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the offer to abandon: a determination founded, as I have said before, on the nature of the contract between the parties; because an insurer ought never to pay less, upon a contract of indemnity, than the value of the loss; and the insured ought never to gain more.

From what has been said, it will appear sufficiently evident, that the owner cannot abandon, unless at some period or other of the voyage there has been a total loss: and therefore, if neither the thing insured, nor the voyage be lost, and the damage sustained shall be found, upon computation, not to amount to a moiety of the value, the owner shall not be allowed to abandon.

These principles are fully illustrated and confirmed by the judgments given in the following cases.

The defendant had insured the ship Success from London to Bermudas, and so to Carolina; the ship was taken by a Spanish privateer, and afterwards retaken by an English privateer, and carried into Boston in New England, where, no person appearing to give security, or to answer the moiety the recaptors were entitled to for salvage, she was condemned, and sold in the court of Admiralty there; the recaptors had their moiety, and the overplus money remained in the hands of the officers of that court. An action upon the policy was brought at law by the defendant here, who obtained a verdict against the now plaintiff.

Term Rep.
for Easter,
26 Geo. 3.
p. 191.

Pringle v.
Hartley, in Chancery,
1744.
3 Atk. 195.

The plaintiff brought a bill, suggesting the capture to be fraudulent, and done designedly by the captain; and now moved for an injunction to stay the proceedings at law.

It was contended for the plaintiff, that though the capture might not be fraudulent, yet the defendant ought not to recover more on the policy than a moiety of the loss, as the act of the 13 Geo. 2. c. 4. §. 18. gives the thing saved to the owner, and he is entitled to receive it from the officers of the Admiralty: and that the plaintiff ought to be obliged to pay no more than the loss actually sustained, which cannot be ascertained till after the defendant shall have received the part, that might have come to him upon the salvage.

The defendant in his answer had sworn, that he had offered, and was now willing, to relinquish his interest to the plaintiffs in the benefit of the salvage, and would give them a letter of attorney for that purpose to receive it.

Lord Chancellor Hardwick. — There is no ground for an injunction in this case, here there was an agreement to go to trial in one of these actions which had been brought, and to be bound by the event of that: at the time of the trial, they knew that the ship was retaken, and the manner of the capture.

The quantum of the damage and loss sustained is the only thing now to be disputed; for it is impossible to carry on trade without insuring, especially in time of war. Therefore regard must be had to the insured, as well as to the insurer; and where there is no admission in the answer of any kind of fraud, though various pretences of that sort may be set up by the bill, they are not to be regarded. The question then arises on the statute of 13 Geo. 2. with regard to the salvage.

It has been said, there ought to be only half the loss recovered on the policy; and as to that, the act has made great alteration in the law of nations, with respect to recaptures.

The carrying a ship infra præsidia hostium, or si pernoctaverit with the enemy, makes it the prize of the person retaking it, as if it had been originally the ship of the enemy: but by the act, the recaption is the revesting of the property of the the owner. If there is a salvage, that must be deducted out of the money recovered by the policy; but if none has come to the hands of the plaintiff in the action, the jury cannot take notice of it. The ship was condemned and sold, because the money was not paid, or secured to be paid by the owners.

It is uncertain, whether the defendant will receive any thing or not; and if any thing be recovered, he must have an allowance for his expences in recovering.

Therefore I take it, when he is willing to relinquish his interest in the salvage, he ought to recover the whole money insured. It would be mischievous, if it were otherwise, for then upon a recapture a man would be in a worse situation, than if the ship were totally lost. Injunction was denied.

But the first case to be found in our books, in which the doctrine of abandonment was fully gone into, in which its principles were settled, and applied to the particular circumstances then before the court, was the case of Goss and Another against Withers.

It was a special case from the sittings in London, upon two actions, on two distinct policies of insurance; one upon a ship, and the other upon the loading.

Goss and Another v. Withers.
2 Burr. 683.

The former was an insurance on the David and Rebecca, at and from Newfoundland to her port of discharge in Portugal or Spain, without the Streights, or England, to commence from the time of her beginning to load at Newfoundland, for either of the abovenamed places; and to continue till she should be arrived at her said port of discharge, and there moored 24 hours at anchor in safety. The ship was, by agreement, to be valued at the sum subscribed, without further account. The insurance was to be at ten guineas per cent.: and in case of loss to abate two per cent.: and in case of average loss not exceeding

M 4

5 l. per

5*l.* per cent. to allow nothing towards such loss. And if the vessel was discharged without the Streights, excepting the Bay of Biscay, two guineas per cent. were to be returned: and if she sailed with convoy and arrived, two guineas more per cent. were to be returned. The plaintiffs declared upon a total loss, by capture by the French.

The policy, declared upon in the other action, was an insurance upon any kinds of lawful goods and merchandizes, loaden or to be loaden on board the aforesaid ship; and this policy for 7*l.* 7*s.* insured 70*l.* The declaration alledged, that divers quantities of fish and other lawful merchandizes, to the value of the money insured, were put on board, to be carried from Newfoundland to her port of destination, and so continued (except such as were thrown overboard as is after-mentioned) till the loss of the ship and goods. The declaration then avers, that a part of the said goods were necessarily thrown overboard in a storm, to preserve the ship and the rest of the cargo; after which jetson, the ship, and the remainder of the goods, were taken by the French.

The case states, that the ship departed from her proper port, and was taken by the French on the 23d of December, 1756: and that the master, mates, and all the sailors, except an apprentice and landman, were taken out and carried to France. That the ship remained in the hands of the enemy eight days, and was then retaken by a British privateer, and brought in on the 18th of January to Milford-Haven, and that immediate notice was given by the insured to the insurer, with an offer to abandon the ship to their care. It was also proved at the trial, that before the taking by the enemy, a violent storm arose at sea, which first separated the ship from her convoy, and afterwards disabled her so far as to render her incapable of proceeding on her destined voyage, without going into port to refit. It was also proved, that part of the cargo was thrown overboard board in the storm: and the rest of it was spoiled while the ship lay at Milford-Haven, after the offer to abandon, and before she could be refitted: and the insured proved their interest in the ship and cargo, to the value insured.

Several questions arising upon the trial of the first of these causes it was agreed, that the jury should bring in their verdict, in both causes, for the plaintiffs, as for a total loss; subject, however, to the opinion of the court on the following questions, viz.

1st. Whether this capture of the ship by the enemy, was or was not such a loss, as that the insurers became liable thereby:

2dly. Whether under the several circumstances of this case, the insured had or had not a right to abandon the ship to the insurers, after she was carried into Milford-Haven.

After two arguments, the court decided unanimously in favour of the plaintiffs; and in the opinion then delivered by Lord Mansfield, all the law upon this subject was fully discussed. It will not be necessary, however, to state in this place what fell from his lordship upon the first of these questions, thus submitted to the opinion of the court; because that was very copiously treated of in a former chapter, in which it was shewn, that whether property was or was not transferred to the enemy by a capture, and absolutely lost to the original owner, it could no way affect the contract entered into between an insurer and insured. It will be sufficient then to follow his lordship in the second part of his argument.

Lord Mansfield.—The single question therefore, upon which this case turns, is, whether the insured had, under all the circumstances, an election to abandon, on the 18th of January, 1757? The loss and disability were in their nature total, at the time they happened. During eight days, the plaintiff was certainly entitled to be paid by the insurer, as for a total loss; and in case of a recapture, the insurer

Vide ante
c. 4. p. 73.
74. 77.

Vide the stat.
13 Geo. 2.
c. 4. s. 18.

surer would have stood in his place. The subsequent recapture is, at best, a saving only of a small part: half the value must be paid for salvage. The disability to pursue the voyage still continued. The master and mariners were prisoners. The charter party was dissolved. The freight (except in proportion to the goods saved) was lost. The ship was necessarily brought into an English port. What could be saved, might not be worth the expence necessarily attending it; which is proved by the plaintiff's offer to abandon. The subsequent title to restitution, arising from the recapture, at a great expence, the ship too being disabled from pursuing her voyage, cannot take away a right vested in the insured at the time of the capture. But because he cannot recover more than he has suffered, he must abandon what may be saved. I cannot find a single book, ancient or modern, which does not say, that in case of a ship being taken, the insured may demand as for a total loss, and abandon. What proves the proposition most strongly is, that by the general law, he may abandon in the case merely of an arrest, or an embargo, by a prince not an enemy. Positive regulations in different countries have fixed a precise time before the insured should be at liberty to abandon in that case. The fixing a precise time proves the general principle. Every argument holds stronger in the case of the other policy with regard to the goods. The cargo was in its nature perishable, destined from Newfoundland to Spain or Portugal: and the voyage was as absolutely defeated, as if the ship had been wrecked, and a third or fourth of the goods saved.

Vide ante
c. 4. p. 92.

No capture by the enemy can be so total a loss, as to leave no possibility of a recovery. If the owner himself should retake at any time, he will be entitled; and by the late act of parliament, if an English ship retake at any time, before condemnation or after, the owner is entitled to restitu-

tution

titution upon stated salvage. This chance does not suspend the demand, for a total loss, upon the insurer: but justice is done, by putting him in the place of the insured, in case of a recapture. In questions upon policies, the nature of the contract, as an indemnity, and nothing else, is always liberally considered. There might be circumstances, under which a capture would be but a small temporary hindrance to the voyage; perhaps none at all: as if a ship were taken, and, in a day or two, escaped entire, and pursued her voyage. There are circumstances, under which it would be deemed an average loss: if a ship taken be immediately ransomed, and pursue her voyage, there the money paid is an average loss. And in all cases, the insured may chuse not to abandon. In the second part of the "Usages and Customs of the Sea," (a French book translated into English). a treatise is inserted called Le Guidon, in which, after mentioning the right to abandon upon a capture, he adds, "or any other such disturbance as defeats the voyage; or makes it not worth while, or worth the freight to pursue it." I know that in late times the privilege of abandoning has been restrained, for fear of letting in frauds: and the merchant cannot elect to turn that, which, at the time it happened, was in its nature but a partial, into a total loss, by abandoning. But there is no danger of fraud in the present case. The loss was total at the time it happened: it continued total, as to the destruction of the voyage. A recovery of any thing could only be had, by paying more than half the value, including the costs. What could be saved of the goods, might not be worth the freight for so much of the voyage as they had gone, when they were taken. The cargo, from its nature, must have been sold, where it was brought in. The loss, as to the ship, could not be estimated; nor the salvage of half be fixed, by a better measure, than a sale. In such a case, there there is no colour to say, that the insured might not disentangle himself from unprofitable trouble and further expence, and leave the insurer to save what he could. It might as reasonably be argued, that if a ship sunk were weighed up again at a great expence, the crew having perished, the insured could not abandon, nor the insurer be liable, because the body of the ship was saved. We are therefore of opinion, that the loss was total by the capture, and the right which the owner had, after the voyage was defeated, to obtain restitution of the ship and cargo, paying great salvage to the recaptor, might be abandoned to the insurers, after she was brought into Milford-Haven.

Vide ante p.
164.

The principles laid down in this case have been strictly adhered to in all similar cases; and particularly in a very modern one, which it will be proper to mention in this place, before we come to the great cause of Hamilton against Mendes, in which some other principles relative to this subject were established.

Milles v.
Fletcher.
Douglas 219.

It was an action on a policy of insurance, on the ship the Hope and her freight, from Montserrat to London. The plaintiff went for a total loss: the defendant insisted, that he was only entitled to recover for an average loss. The jury found a verdict for a total loss; and, upon a motion for a new trial, the facts of the case appeared to be as follows: the ship, when proceeding on her voyage, was captured on the 23d of May, by two American privateers, who took the captain and all the crew, and part of the cargo, which consisted of sugars, out of her. The rigging was also taken away. She was afterwards retaken, and carried into New York, where the captain arrived on the 23d of June, and, taking possession of her, found, that part of what had been left of the cargo was washed overboard, that fifty-seven hogheads of what remained were damaged, and that the ship was leaky, and in such a state, that she

she could not be repaired without unloading her entirely. The owners had no storehouses at New York, in which the sugars could have been put, while the ship was repairing, nor any agent there to advise or direct the captain. No sailors were to be had. The only method he had of paying the salvage, which amounted to the value of forty hogheads of sugar, was by sale of part of the cargo, or the ship. The captain did not know of the insurance. If he had repaired the ship, his expences would have exceeded the freight more than 100*l*. There was an embargo on all vessels at New York till the 27th of December; and, by the destination of his ship, she was to have arrived at London in July. Under these circumstances, he consulted with his friends at New York, and resolved, upon their opinion and his own, to sell the ship and cargo, as the most prudent step for the interest of his employers. The cargo was accordingly sold and paid for. The ship was also contracted for, but the person, who had agreed to buy her, ran away, and the captain left her in a creek near New York, and returned to England, where he arrived in the February following, and gave the plaintiff notice of what had been done, which was the first information he received of it, and the plaintiff immediately claimed as for a total loss from the underwriters, and offered to abandon. Lord Mansfield told the jury, that if they were satisfied the captain had done what was best for the benefit of all concerned, they must find as for a total loss, which they accordingly did.

Upon the motion for a new trial, the unanimous opinion of the court was delivered by Lord Mansfield.—The great object in every branch of the law, but especially in mercantile law, is certainty, and that the grounds of decision should be precisely known. I took great pains in delivering the opinion of the court in the cases of Goss v. Withers, and Hamilton v. Mendes. I read both those cases over last night, and I think that from them, the whole law between insurers and insured, as to the consequences of capture and recapture, may be collected. Wherever a question of law arises at nisi prius, I propose a case, or grant one, when asked for by the counsel, and I avoid as much as possible blending fact and law together, having seen the inconvenience of it in Pole v. Fitzgerald. But on the trial of this cause, it did not appear to me, that there was any question of law, and no case was asked for. It was impossible to ask for one, till the facts were ascertained; and when they were, it would have been impossible to state them in any way, which could have left a doubt on the law. It was not contended, that a capture necessarily amounts to a total loss between insurer and insured; nor, on the other hand, that on a capture and recapture, there may not be a total loss, though there remain some material tangible part of the ship and cargo. Neither was it contended, that the captain has an arbitrary power, by his act, to make the loss, either partial or total, as he pleases. A great deal has been said about what the Admiralty could, or would have done, in such a case, in order to pay the salvage. As to that, if no owner appeared, they would condemn the whole; but if they saw, from the ship's papers, that there was one, they would not. If there were different claimants of the ship and cargo, they would leave it to them to say, what part should be sold, and if they differed in opinion, would order the sale of such part as would be attended with the smallest loss. But all that is foreign to the present question, which is singly this, whether the consequences of the capture were such as, notwithstanding the recapture, occasioned a total obstruction of the voyage, or only a partial one, as in the case of Hamilton v. Mendes. In that case, and in Goss v. Withers, great stress was laid on the situation of the ship and cargo, at the time when the insured had notice, at the time of the offer to abandon, and at the time when the action was brought. No cases say, that the bare existence of the hulk of the ship prevents the loss being total. The rule is laid down, "that if the voyage be lost, or not worth pursuing, if the salvage be high, if farther expence be necessary, if the insurer will not at all events undertake to pay that expence, &c. the insured may abandon, notwithstanding a recapture." Here, at the time of the capture there were no hopes of a recovery; no friend's ship in sight; no means of resistance; all the crew were taken out, and part of the cargo; and the rigging also taken away. Afterwards the ship was retaken, and carried into New York. When she was brought there, it still continued a total loss. Neither the insurers, nor the insured, had any agent in the place. The court of Admiralty must have proceeded secundum æquum et bonum, and might have sold her for the benefit of those concerned. When the insured first had notice, and offered to abandon, (which was when the captain came to England) and when the action was brought, it was still a total loss. The voyage was abandoned, the cargo sold, and the ship left to be sold. The only answer the defendant makes, or can make to this is, that the loss was total indeed; but that the captain made it so, by his improper conduct; for that on his taking possession of the ship, the loss became partial, and that he ought to have pursued the voyage. But is this defence true in fact? The captain, when he came to New York, had no express order; but he had an implied authority, from both sides, to do what was fit and right to be done, as none of them had agents in the place; and whatever it was right for him to have done, if it had been his own ship and cargo, the underwriter must answer for the consequences of, because this is within his contract of indemnity. Suppose there had been

Vide post.

time

no

no insurance, what ought the captain to have done? 1st. As to the cargo, according to the course of the voyage, the ship should have arrived at London in July. On the capture, part had been taken out, some was washed overboard, 57 hogsheads were damaged, and the whole, from the leaking of the vessel, was in a perishable state. There were no storehouses; nor could the ship proceed in the state she was in. The crew was gone, and an embargo was laid on till December. What, shall a cargo, which was intended to arrive at London, in July, be kept in a perishable state at New York, in a leaky vessel, till December? 2dly, As to the ship, it was certainly better to sell her, than to bring her to London. There was no crew belonging to her; and she had no cargo. Even if all the cargo had been left, the expence of repairs would have exceeded the freight. If she had been brought home, the expence of bringing her might have been more than what she would have sold for in London. It has been said, that the damage would not have fallen on the underwriters; but the argument drawn from thence is a fallacy; for that circumstance goes to determine it to be the interest of the insured to abandon the voyage. The point is, what did the owner suffer by the capture; and it appears, that he suffered so much, that it was not worth while to pursue the voyage. The whole voyage was lost. As the captain did not know of the insurance, he had no temptation to give the turn of the scale to one side or the other. I left it to the jury to determine, whether what the captain had done was for the benefit of the concerned. If they had found "that it was" in words, where would have been the question of law?

The court therefore discharged the rule for a new trial.

It was necessary to be very particular in stating this case from the work of such an accurate reporter potter as Mr. Douglas, for two reasons : 1st, Because it is a determination, exactly conformable to that of *Goss v. Wither*s, recognizing and confirming the principles there laid down ; and 2dly, To relieve the court from the observations made, on account of the above decision. A case has appeared in print, under the name of Milles v. Hayley, upon the same policy, the same ship, and the same voyage : but the author of the work, in which it appears, could not possibly have been present at the trial ; and the facts must have been mistated to him : or if present, he has not taken down the evidence with sufficient accuracy. For he has not stated, that on the capture, part of the cargo, and also the rigging were taken away : that part of what had been left of the cargo was washed overboard : that 57 hogsheads of the sugar that remained, were damaged : that the ship was leaky, and in such a state, that she could not be repaired without unloading her entirely : that the salvage amounted to the value of 40 hogsheads of sugar : that the repairs would have exceeded the freight by more than 100*l.* : and that the embargo was to continue till the 27th of December : whereas the ship ought to have arrived at London in the July preceding : all which circumstances are to be found in Mr. Douglas's report : all of them are material to the decision of the cause, and upon all of them much stress is laid by Lord Mansfield, in delivering the judgment of the court. It was thought proper to note these differences ; as nothing is so necessary in all cases, more especially in those of insurance, as the accurate and precise statement of circumstances.

But although the doctrine advanced in Goss against Witbers, was so very general and comprehensive ; yet it certainly is not to be considered, as precluding the possibility of an exception to the generality of the principle there established.

Indeed, from the whole tenour of the Chief Justice's very learned argument upon that occasion,

N

sion,

Weskett on Insur. p. 4.

sion, it is apparent, that he had at that very time an exception in his view: and from some of the words he then used, it would almost induce one to suppose, that his lordship had foreseen the very case, which actually came to be decided within a few years afterwards.

Hamilton v. Mendes
2 Burr. 1198.
and 1 Black.
276.

It was a special case reserved at Guildhall, at the sittings there before Lord Mansfield, after Michaelmas term 1760, in an action brought against the defendant, as one of the insurers, upon a policy of insurance from Virginia or Maryland to London, of a ship called the Selby, and of goods and merchandize therein, until she shall have moored at anchor 24 hours, in good safety. The case stated for the opinion of the Court was as follows.

That the ship Selby, mentioned in the policy, being valued at 1200 l.; and the plaintiff having interest therein, caused the policy in question to be made; and the same was accordingly made, in the name of John Mackintosh on behalf and for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, and was subscribed by the defendant, as stated, for 100 l. That the ship was in good safety at Virginia, where she took on board 192 hogsheads of tobacco, to be delivered at London. That on the 28th day of March, she departed, and set sail from Virginia for London; and on the 6th day of May following, as she was sailing and proceeding in her said voyage, was taken by a French privateer called the Aurora of Bayonne. That at the time of the capture, the Selby had nine men on board; and the captain of the said privateer took out six, besides the captain, leaving only the mate and one man on board. That the French put a prize-master, and several men on board the ship Selby, to carry her to France. That as the French were carrying her towards France, on the 23d day of the said May, she was retaken off Bayonne, by an English man of war; and accordingly sent into Plymouth, where she arrived the 6th day of June following. That the plaintiff, living at Hull, as soon as he was informed what had befallen his ship the Selby, wrote a letter, on the 23d of June, to his agent John Mackintosh, living in London, to acquaint the defendant, "that the plaintiff did from

was

 " thenceforth abandon to him his interest in the " said ship, as to the said 100*l.* by the defendant
 " insured." That the said I. M. on the 26th of June, acquainted the defendant with the offer to abandon the ship; to which the defendant answered, "that he did not think himself bound to " take to the ship; but was ready to pay the sal" vage, and all other losses and charges that the " plaintiff sustained by the capture." That upon the 19th day of August, the ship Selby was brought into the port of London, by the order of the owners of the cargo, and the recaptors: that the ship Selby sustained no damage from the capture. That the whole cargo of the said ship was delivered to the freighters, at the port of London, who paid the freight to Benjamin Vaughan, without prejudice. The question, therefore, submitted to the opinion of the court is, whether the plaintiff, on the said 26th day of June, had a right to abandon, and has a right to recover, as for a total loss.

After two arguments at the bar upon this question, and after the court had taken time to deliberate upon it, their unanimous resolution was delivered by the Chief Justice.

Lord Mansfield.—The plaintiff has averred in his declaration, as the basis of his demand for a total loss, "that by the capture, the ship became " wholly lost to him." The general question is, whether the plaintiff, who at the time of his action brought, at the time of his offer to abandon, and at the time of his being first apprized of any accident having happened, had only, in truth, sustained a partial loss, ought to recover for a total one. In support of the affirmative, the counsel for the plaintiff insisted on the four following points: 1st, That by this capture, the property was changed; and therefore, the loss total for ever. 2dly, If the property were not changed, yet the capture was a total loss. 3dly, That when the ship was brought into Plymouth, particularly on the 26th day of June, the recovery was not such as, in truth, changed the totality of the loss into an average. 4thly, Supposing it did, yet, the loss having once been total, a right vested in the insured to recover the whole upon abandoning; of which right he could never be divested by any subsequent event.

29 Geo. 2.
c. 34. . 24.

As to the first point. If the change of property were at all material between the insurer and insured, it would not be applicable to this case; because by the marine law of England, there is no change of property, in case of a capture, before condemnation; and now by the act of parliament, the jus postliminii continues for ever. I know many writers argue, between the insurer and insured, from the distinction, whether the property was or was not changed by the capture, so as to transfer a complete right from the enemy to a recaptor, or neutral vendee, against the former owner. But arbitrary notions concerning the change of property by capture, as between the former owner and recaptor, or a vendee, ought never to be the rule of decision, as between the insurer and insured upon a contract of indemnity, contrary to the real truth of the fact. And therefore, I agree with the counsel for the plaintiff, upon this second point, that by this capture, while it continued, the ship was totally lost, though it be admitted, that the property, in the case of a recapture, never was changed, but returned to the former owner.

The third point depends, as every question of this kind must, upon the particular circumstances. It does not necessarily follow, that because there is a recapture, therefore the loss ceases to be total. If the voyage be so defeated, as not to be worth the further pursuit; if the salvage be high, and the other expences great; or if the under-

writer

writer refuse to bear these expences; the insured may abandon. But in the present case, the voyage was so far from being lost, that it had only met with a short temporary obstruction; the ship and cargo were both entirely safe; the expence incurred did not amount to near half the value; and upon the 26th of June, when the ship was at Plymouth, and the offer was made to abandon, the insurer undertook to pay all charges and expences, to which the plaintiff might be put, by the capture. The only argument to shew that the loss had not then ceased to be total, was built upon a mistaken supposition, that the recaptor had a right to demand a sale, and to put a stop to any further prosecution of the voyage. But that is not so. The property returned to the plaintiff, pledged to the recaptors for one-eighth of the value, as salvage for retaking and bringing the ship into an English port. Upon paying this, the owner was entitled to restitution. The recaptor had no right to sell the ship. If they differed about the value, the Court of Admiralty would have ordered a commission of appraisement. In this case, it was the interest of the owner of the ship, the owners of the cargo, and the recaptors, that she should forthwith proceed upon her voyage from Plymouth to London. But had the recaptor opposed it, or affected delay, the Court of Admiralty would have made an order for bringing her immediately to London, her port of delivery, upon reasonable terms. Therefore it is most clear, that upon the 26th day of June, the ship had sustained no other loss, by reason of the capture, than a short temporary obstruction, and a charge which the defendant had offered to pay and satisfy. This brings the whole to the fourth and last point.

The plaintiff's demand is for an indemnity. This action then must be founded upon the nature of his damnification, as it really is, at the time the action is brought. It is repugnant,

Co. Litt. 53.
a.

upon a contract of indemnity, to recover as for a total loss, when the final event has decided, that the damnification, in truth, is an average, or perhaps no loss at all. Whatever undoes the damnification, in whole or in part, must operate upon the indemnity in the same degree. It is a contradiction in terms, to bring an action for indemnity, when, upon the whole event, no damage has been sustained. This reasoning is so much founded in sense, and the nature of the thing, that the common law of England adopts it, though inclined to strictness. The tenant is obliged to indemnify his lord from waste; but if the tenant do, or suffer waste to be done in houses, yet if he repair before any action brought, there lies no action of waste against him. He cannot however plead "non fecit vastum:" but the special matter. The special matter shews, that the injury being repaired before the action brought, the plaintiff had no cause of action: and whatever takes away the cause, takes away the action. Suppose a surety sued to judgment; and afterwards, before an action is brought, the principal pays the debt and costs, and procures satisfaction to be acknowledged upon record: the surety can have no action for an indemnity, because he is indemnified before any action is brought. If the demand or cause of action does not subsist, at the time the action is brought, the having existed at any former time can be of no avail. But in the present case, the notion of a vested right in the plaintiff to sue as for a total loss, before the recapture, is fictitious only, and not founded in truth. For the insured is not obliged to abandon, in any case; he has an election. No right can vest as for a total loss, till he has made that election; he cannot elect, before advice is received of the loss; and if that advice shew the peril to be over, and the thing in safety, he cannot elect at all, because he has no right to abandon when the thing is safe. Writers ters upon maritime law are apt to embarrass general principles, with the positive regulations of their own country: but they all seem to agree, that if the thing be recovered before the money is paid, the insured can only be entitled according to the final event. His lordship here cited the passage from Roccus, which we have already seen at the beginning of this chapter, and then proceeded thus.

In the case of Spencer v. Franco, though upon a wager policy, the loss was held not to be total, after the return of the ship Prince Frederick in safety; though she had been seized and long kept by the king of Spain, in a time of actual war. In the case of Pole v. Fitzgerald, though upon a wager policy, the majority of the judges, and the house of lords held there was no total loss, the ship having been restored before the expiration of the four months, the time for which she was insured.

The present attempt is the first that ever was made, to charge the insurer as for a total loss, upon an interest policy, after the thing was recovered: and it is said, the judgment in the case of Goss v. Withers gave rise to it. It is admitted, that that case was no way similar. Before that action was brought, the whole ship and cargo were literally lost; at the time of the offer to abandon, a fourth of the cargo had been thrown overboard; the voyage was entirely lost; the remainder of the cargo was fast perishing, and of no value at Milford-Haven, where the ship was brought in; the ship so shattered, as to want great and expensive repairs; the salvage was one half, and the insurer did not engage to be at any expence; it did not appear that it was worth while to try to save any thing: and the recaptor, though entitled to one half, as well as the owner of the ship and cargo, left the whole to perish, rather than be at any further trouble or expence. But it is said, though the case was entirely different, rent, some part of the reasoning warranted the proposition now inferred by the plaintiff from it. The great principle relied upon was, "that as

 " between the insurer and insured, the contract
 " being an indemnity, the truth of the fact ought " to be regarded; and therefore there might be
 " a total loss by a capture, which could not operate as a change of property; and a recapture
 " should not relate by fiction (like the Roman jus postliminii) as if the capture had never happened, unless the loss was in truth recovered."
 This reasoning proved è converso, that if the thing in truth were safe, no artificial reasoning shall be allowed to set up a total loss. The words quoted at the bar were certainly used, "that there is no " book, ancient or modern, which does not say,
 " that in case of the ship being taken, the insured may demand for a total loss, and abandon."
 But the proposition was applied to the subject matter, and is certainly true, provided the capture, or the total loss occasioned thereby, continue to the time of abandoning, and bringing the action. The case then before the court did not make it necessary to specify all the restrictions. But I will read to you, verbatim, from my notes of the judgment then delivered what was said, to prevent any inference being drawn, beyond the case then determined.

Vide ante p.
171.

His lordship, having read a great part of his former argument in that case, went on in this way.

From this mode of reasoning, it did by no means follow, that if the ship and cargo had, by the recapture, been brought safe to the port of delivery, without having sustained any damage at all, that the insured might abandon. But, without dwelling longer upon principles or authorities, the consequences of the present question are decisive. It is impossible that any man should desire to abandon in a case circumstanced like the present, but for one of two reasons, namely, either because he has over-valued, or because the market market has fallen below the original price. The only reasons, that can make it the interest of the party to desire, are conclusive against allowing it. It is unjust to turn the fall of the market upon the insurer, who has no concern in it, and could never gain by the rise. And an over-valuation is contrary to the general policy of the marine law; contrary to the spirit of the act of 19 Geo. 2. a temptation to fraud, and a great abuse: therefore no man should be allowed to avail himself of having over-valued. If the valuation be true, the plaintiff is indemnified, by being paid the charge he was put to by the capture. If he has over-valued, he will be a gainer, if he be permitted to abandon: and he can only desire it, because he has over-valued. This was avowed upon the first argument: and that very reason is conclusive against it's being allowed. The insurer, by the marine law, ought never to pay less, upon a contract of indemnity, than the value of the loss: and the insured ought never to gain more. Therefore, if there were occasion to resort to that argument, the consequence of the determination would alone be sufficient upon the present occasion. But upon principles, this action could not be maintained as for a total loss, if the question were to be judged by the strictest rules of common law: much less can it be supported for a total loss, as the question ought to be decided, by the large principles of the marine law, according to the substantial intent of the contract, and the real truth of the case. If the question is to depend upon the fact, every man can judge of the nature of the loss, before the money is paid. But if it is to depend upon speculative refinements, from the law of nations, or the Roman jus postliminii, concerning the change or revesting of property, no wonder that merchants are in the dark, when doctors have differed upon the subject, from the beginning, and are not yet agreed. To obviate too large an inference

inference being drawn from this determination, I desire it may be understood, that the point here determined is, “ that the plaintiff, upon a policy, can only recover an indemnity, according to the nature of his case at the time of the action brought, or (at most) at the time of his offer to abandon.” We give no opinion how it would be, in case the ship or goods were restored in safety, between the offer to abandon, and the action brought; or between the commencement of the action, and the verdict. And particularly I desire, that no inference may be drawn, “ that in case the ship or goods should be restored after the money paid as for a total loss, the insurer could compel the insured to refund the money, and to take the ship or goods;” that case is totally different from the present, and depends, throughout, upon different reasons and principles. Here the event had fixed the loss to be an average only, before the action brought; before the offer to abandon; and before the plaintiff had notice of any accident; consequently before he could make an election. We are therefore of opinion, that he cannot recover for a total, but for a partial loss only; the quantity of which has been estimated by the jury at ten pounds per cent.

Da Costa v. Firth.
4 Burr. 1966.
Vide ante
c. 6. p. 134.

But although the court did not chuse unnecessarily to decide, whether after payment as for a total loss, the underwriter could oblige the insured to refund, if it should afterwards prove to be but partial: yet in the year 1766 this very question came before them. It arose in the case of Da Costa v. Firth, which was cited at large in a preceding chapter; and the court held, that as there was a solemn abandonment, and the money was paid, and as there was also an agreement that the insurers should be content with such salvage as the sum insured bore to the whole interest, the insured should not be obliged to refund, but but the insurer should stand in his place for the salvage.

It has been already said, and from the preceding cases it seems to be a necessary inference, that in order to entitle the owner to abandon, there must, at some period or other of the voyage, have been a total loss; for he cannot be allowed to turn a partial into a total loss. There was, however, a very modern case, in which this was the single point to be determined.

It was an action on a policy of insurance upon the ship Friendship, from Wyburg to Lynn, subscribed by the defendant for 100*l.* at two guineas per cent. The defendant pleaded a tender, and paid 48*l.* into court. The cause was tried at Guildhall, before Mr. Justice Buller, when a case was reserved for the opinion of the court, stating, that the damages sustained by the ship in the voyage insured, did not exceed 48 l. per cent. which sum the defendant had paid into court, upon pleading in the action. That when the ship arrived at the port of Lynn, she was not worth repairing. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the plaintiffs had a right to abandon.

Cazalet and Others v. St.
Barbe.
Term Rep.
for Easter,
26 Geo. 3.
P. 187.

This case came on to be argued when Lord Mansfield was absent.

Mr. Justice Willes.—The question is, whether, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs had a right to abandon; or, in other words, whether they can turn a partial into a total loss. The finding of the jury in this case determines the question, because it is expressly found that the damage did not exceed 48*l. per cent.* The case then states, that the ship was not worth repairing, but no mention is made of what was her real worth; so that the remaining materials of the ship, if sold, may make up the difference between 48*l.* and 100*l. per cent.* There has been no loss either of the ship or of the voyage; but, being an old ship, she suffered so much, that she was not worth repairing. I cannot now determine

Vide supra p.
172.

mine that there was a total loss, when the jury have already said, that there was only a loss of 48 l. per cent. As to the case cited of Bond v. Hunter, this question never occurred in it. The action was brought upon the homeward-bound policy; and it was sufficient to say, that that policy never attached, for the ship had received her death's wound, in her outward-bound voyage. In the case of Milles v. Fletcher, a total end was put to the voyage. In the other cases, the questions arose upon losses which had happened during the several voyages; here the voyage has been performed, and the ship is arrived; and after the jury have found that the damage sustained did not amount to more than 48 l. per cent. the court are precluded from saying it is a total loss.

Mr. Justice Ashturst. — The facts found in this case preclude any question, whether this can be construed to be a total loss. If the insurers should be held liable here, it would be making them insure the goodness of the ship; and if the owners can recover as for a total loss in this case, they might equally have recovered on account of the bad condition of the vessel, though she had not received much damage at sea. It is not stated that the ship received her death's wound in the course of her voyage. When she came into port it was found she was not worth repairing; but non constat if she had not received any damage during the voyage, she would have been worth repairing. And though the vessel was not in a sound state, yet she had arrived in safety twenty-four hours; and the jury having exactly defined what degree of damage she had sustained, we cannot say that the plaintiff ought to recover any more.

Mr. Justice Buller. — Nothing can be better established than that the owner of a ship can only abandon in case of a total loss. The cases, which have been cited, went upon that ground. In the case case of Jenkins v. Mackenzie, though the ship was brought into port, yet the capture, as between the assurer and assured, was a total loss. But there is no instance where the owner can abandon, unless at some period or other of the voyage, there has been a total loss. No such event has happened here; for the jury have expressly found, that the loss amounted only to 48*l. per cent.* Even allowing total loss to be a technical expression, yet the manner, in which the plaintiff's counsel has stated it, is rather too broad. It has been said, that the insurance must be taken to be on the ship as well as on the voyage; but the true way of considering it is this: it is an insurance on the ship for the voyage. If either the ship, or the voyage be lost, that is a total loss; but here neither is lost. The case of Hamilton v. Mendes is decisive. Judgment for defendant. Vide supra.

These cases, and the judgments upon them, have been cited at length, because the principles of abandonment are so clearly and accurately defined, and are so aptly illustrated by referring them to the particular circumstances arising in those causes, that it would be absurd to insist more upon the subject; as the reader must from them be able to collect every thing relative to abandonment. Nor let it be objected, that those were almost all cases of abandonment after a capture; for many of the rules there laid down were general in their nature, comprehending cases of wreck, and detention, mutatis mutandis, as well as those of capture. This will be best explained, by putting two possible cases.

Suppose a neutral ship is arrested, and detained by a foreign prince by an embargo, the owner immediately, upon hearing of this accident, would have a right to abandon; because no man is bound to wait the event of an embargo. But if the same ship, that brings the account of the embargo, should also inform him, that the embargo was taken off, that the ship had only been detained detained two or three days, that very trifling or no damage had arisen, then it is impossible to say that the merchant may abandon; because, as we have seen, it is a principle of good sense, that a 2 Burr. 1211. man cannot make his election, whether he will abandon or not, till he receive advice of the loss; and if, by the same conveyance, it appear that the peril is over, and the thing insured is in safety, he has lost his election entirely; because he has, and can have no right to abandon when his property is safe.

2 Burr. 696.

The same principle governs in the case of 4 Burr. 1966. wreck; for let us suppose a trunk of bullion, as in the case of Da Costa v. Firth, to be the property insured; and that, the ship being wrecked, this trunk of course goes to the bottom; the owner would instantly be entitled to abandon to the underwriter, and to call upon him to contribute, as in case of a total loss. But if it should so happen, that before the action was brought, or before the offer was made to abandon, the bullion should be recovered, and restored to the owner, at the place of destination, upon paying a moderate salvage; in that case, it would fall within the rule of Hamilton v. Mendes; and the assured would only be entitled to recover an indemnity, according to the nature of his case, at the time when the action was brought; consequently he would not be allowed to abandon.

Ch. 4. p. 81. From what was said in a former chapter, and from the cases just recited, it will appear, that in wager policies, it was usual to set up a total loss between third persons, for the purpose of their wager, though in fact the ship was safe, and restored to the owner. But in some of these cases, the loss was held not to be total; and as in most of them general verdicts were given, and no report of the judge's direction is to be found, it is now impossible to determine upon what grounds the decisions turned. As has been truly said, however, these questions never can arise again, because they originated from wager policies, which are now prohibited by law. But as the case of Pole v. Fitzgerald was one of those, in which the majority of the judges, and the House of Lords held, that though the ship might be deemed lost, for a time; yet as she was afterwards recovered, the event of a total loss had not finally happened, according to the construction of the wager; and as it has frequently occurred in the course of our enquiries, it may be proper to give a short account of it in this place.
 because

It was an action on a policy of insurance on the ship Goodfellow, privateer, at and from Jamaica, to any ports and places where and whatsoever, at sea or shore, a cruising from place to place, for and during the term and space of four calendar months; the ship was valued at 1000*l.* without further account, and free from average. The defendant in 1744, had subscribed 100*l.* and the plaintiff declared for a total loss of the voyage by a mutiny of the men.

Fitzgerald v. Pole.
5 Brown's
Parl. Cases
131.

The cause came on to be tried at Guildhall before the Lord Chief Justice Lee, when a special verdict was found, stating, That the defendant had subscribed the policy, stated in the declaration: that the Goodfellow was an English privateer, duly commissioned; was safe at Jamaica on the 14th of June 1744, and sailed from thence the same day: that on the 10th of July 1744, she took a French prize of the value of 4200*l.* sterling: that afterwards the said ship was sailing on her cruise, for a port or place called the River of Dogs, to fetch water; and while she was so sailing towards the River of Dogs, and within the four months mentioned in the policy, the crew mutinied against the captain and his officers; and by force carried the said ship against the will of the captain and officers, who could not resist, to Jamaica: and before her arrival there, causelessly, against the consent of the said captain, seized the boat, fire-arms and cutlasses, carried off the same, and deserted the privateer, by which the voyage and cruise were totally prevented and lost for the remainder of the four months : that the ship arrived at Jamaica, and was there in good safety at and after the end of the four months ; but was prevented by the mutiny and desertion, from further pursuing her cruise : that the person insured had interest in the ship to the amount of the sum insured.

This case was argued in the King's Bench, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. Upon a writ of error, the Court of Exchequer Chamber unanimously reversed that judgment. The House of Lords afterwards confirmed the judgment of reversal, being of opinion, with the majority of the judges, that the insurer being, by the terms of the policy, free from all average, the plaintiff could not be entitled to recover, but in case of a total loss ; and the ship being found, by the special verdict, to be in good safety, at her proper port, at and after the end of the four months, for which the insurance was made, there could be no loss. The counsel for the plaintiff cited many cases, in which the plaintiffs had judgment for a total loss, although the ships remained in being ; most of which have already been referred to in the chapter upon capture. But those cases were absolutely denied by the other side ; or, if admitted at all, it was insisted, that they made for the defendant. This circumstance, among many others, stated in the introduction of this work, serves to evince the great superiority which the modern practice of our courts, in matters of insurance, has over the ancient.

Vide ante
c. 4. p. 81.
2 Burr. 1200.

See the Introduction
sub fine.

Ord. of Lew.
14. tit. Insurance.
art. 48.

In many of the maritime countries on the continent of Europe, the time, within which the abandonment must be made, is fixed by positive regulation. Thus in France, it is ordained, that all cessions or abandonments, as well as all demands in virtue of the policy, shall be made as follows : In six weeks, for losses happening on the coasts of the country, where the insurance was made : in three months, in other provinces of our kingdom : in four months, on the coast of Holland, Flanders, and England : in a year, in Spain, Italy, Portugal, Barbary, Muscovy, Norway : and in two years, for the coasts of America, the Brasils, Guinea, and other distant countries. When these terms are elapsed, the demands of the assured shall not afterwards be admitted. In cases of detention, the same ordinance provides, that the abandonment shall not be made before six months, Art. 49. if it happen in Europe or Barbary. If in a more distant country, in a year ; both to commence from the day of the notifying this detention to the insurers. A similar regulation to that last mentioned is to be found in the ordinances of Bilboa. 2 Mag. 416.
the

In the law of England, we have no limitation of time, with respect to abandonment, at least that I have been able to find ; and I believe, that none such exists. Indeed, from what has been said in the preceding part of this chapter, it would appear, that the insured has a right to call upon the underwriter for a total loss, and of course, to abandon, as soon as he hears of such a calamity having happened, his claim to an indemnity not being at all suspended by the chance of a future recovery of part of the property lost : because, by the abandonment, that chance devolves upon the underwriter ; by which means, the intention of the contracting parties is fully answered, and complete justice is done.

We have thus taken a view, in this and the eight preceding chapters, of the nature of that instrument by which the contract of insurance is effected ; and of the different modes, by which it may be construed : we have treated of the various losses, to which the underwriter subjects himself by that contract ; we have shewn, when the losses are to be considered as partial, when as total ; and in what cases, and under what circumstances, cumstances, the insured shall be allowed to abandon to the underwriter. The course of our enquiry now naturally leads us to observe, in what instances the insurer is discharged from any responsibility; either on account of the contract being void, from its commencement, by reason of some radical defect; or because the insured has failed to perform some of those conditions, necessary to be fulfilled on his part, before he can call upon the insurer for an indemnity.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

Of Fraud in Policies.

IN treating of those causes, which make policies void from the beginning, or in other words, which absolutely annul the contract, it will be proper in the first place to consider, how far it will be affected by any degree of fraud. In every contract between man and man, openness and sincerity are indispensably necessary to give it its due operation; because, fraud and cunning once introduced, suspicion soon follows, and all confidence and good faith are at an end. No contract can be good, unless it be equal; that is, neither side must have an advantage by any means, of which the other is not aware. This being admitted of contracts in general, it holds with double force in those of insurance; because the underwriter computes his risk entirely from the account given by the person insured, and therefore it is absolutely necessary to the justice and validity of the contract, that this account be exact and complete. Accordingly, the learned judges judges of our courts of law, feeling that the very essence of insurance consists in a rigid attention to the purest good faith, and the strictest integrity, have constantly held, that it is vacated and annulled by any the least shadow of fraud or undue concealment.

After what has been said, it will hardly be necessary to mention, that both parties, the insurer and insured, are equally bound to disclose circumstances, that are within their knowledge; and therefore if the insurer, at the time he underwrites, can be proved to have known that the ship was safe arrived, the contract will be equally void, as if the insured had concealed from him some accident, which had befallen the ship.

In perusing the numerous cases and decisions, which, I am sorry to say, are to be found in our books under this head, it occurred to me, that they were liable to a threefold division: 1st, The allegation of any circumstances, as facts, to the underwriter, which the person insured knows to be false: 2dly, The suppression of any circumstances, which the insured knows to exist; and which, if known to the underwriter, might prevent him from undertaking the risk at all, or if he did, might entitle him to demand a larger premium: and, lastly, a misrepresentation. The last of these, a misrepresentation, seems to fall under the first head, the allegatio falsi; and so in some measure it does; because wherever a person knowingly and wilfully misrepresents any thing, he asserts a falsehood. But it was thought necessary to make a division for itself; because if a material fact be misrepresented, though by mistake, the contract is void, as much as if there had been actual fraud: for the underwriter has computed his risk upon information, which was false. Of each of these in order.

Nothing can be so clear a proof of fraud, as the assertion of the truth of some circumstance, which the person asserting it must know to be false. In our reporters, we do not meet with so

2 Black.
Com. 460.
Grot. de jure
belli, lib. 2.
c. 12. f. 23.
Puffendorff
de jure nat.
l. 5. c. 9. f. 8.
Bynkershoek
quest. jur.
priv. l. 4. c.
26.
Ord. de Lew.
14. f. 38.
1 Black. 594.
3 Burr. 1909.

Dougl. 247.

many cases under this division of the subject, as under the two following: and indeed, from the nature of the thing, it is impossible we should; because in such a case, the only question is, did the insured assert this to be the truth. If he did, the enquiry is at an end; because we are now presuming it to be the assertion of a circumstance within his own knowledge. This being a mere question of fact, is not a subject for a reporter. But in the other cases, there is greater room for investigation; we may properly enquire, for instance, whether the insured was bound to disclose this fact? Whether the misrepresentation was in a material part? and many other similar questions, of which we shall see the necessity hereafter.

The few following cases will evidently shew, that our idea was right, when we supposed, that under the head of the allegatio falsæ, the only enquiry would be, whether the person insured, knowing the contrary, asserted a particular thing to be true.

Skinner 327. In a case before Lord Chief Justice Holt, in the reign of William and Mary, that learned judge held, that if the goods were insured as the goods of an Hamburgher, who was an ally, and the goods were, in fact, the goods of a Frenchman, who was an enemy; it was a fraud, and that the insurance was not good.

Roberts v. Fonnereau. Sitt. at Guild. Hall after Trin. Term 1742. In another case, a letter being received, stating, that a ship sailed from Jamaica for London, on the 24th of November, after which an insurance was made, and the agent told the insurer, that the ship sailed the latter end of December; this was also held by Lord Chief Justice Lee to be a fraud, and the defendant had a verdict.

Upon a special case reserved for the opinion of the court, the following circumstances appeared.

Woolmer v. Mailman. 3 Burr. 1419. 1 Black. 427. It was an action on the case, brought for the recovery of a total loss, on a policy of insurance made made on goods and merchandizes on board the ship Bona Fortuna, at and from North Bergen to any ports or places whatsoever, until her safe arrival in London. It was underwritten thus: "Warranted neutral ship and property." The defendant underwrote the policy for 150*l*. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and paid into court the premium received by him for the said insurance. This cause came on to be tried at Guildhall before Lord Mansfield; when it was admitted, that the plaintiff had interest on board the ship to a large value, to the amount of the sum insured. The ship, with the goods and merchandizes so laden, and being on board her, after her departure from North Bergen, and before her arrival in London, proceeding on her voyage, was, by the force of winds and stormy weather, wrecked, cast away, and sunk in the seas; and the said goods and merchandizes were thereby wholly lost. It was expressly stated, "that the ship or vessel, called the Bona Fortuna, and the property on board, at and before the time she was lost, were not neutral property, as warranted by the said policy."

Lord Mansfield, and the rest of the court, were of opinion, that it was too clear a case to bear an argument. This was no contract; for there was a falshood, in respect to the condition of the thing insured: because the plaintiff insured neutral property, and this was not neutral property.

From the preceding case, we may collect this principle, that a false assertion in a policy will vitiate the contract; even though the loss happen in a mode not affected by that falsity.

Another observation is suggested by the perusal of the case of Woolmer and Muilman. It arose upon a warranty; and the learned judges declared, that the warranty being false, there was no contract. Now, as we shall see, when we come to the chapter on warranties, the general rule with respect to them is this, that the non-compliance with them does not vacate the contract from the beginning; but it amounts to much the same thing, namely, that the insured, not having complied with those conditions, which he had taken upon himself to perform, cannot recover against the underwriter.

But the following answer is submitted, which, if allowed, will reconcile any seeming difference, that arises in the cases upon the subject. Wherever a man warrants a thing to be true, which, at the time he does so, he must unavoidably know to be false; it comes under the allegatio falsi, and the contract is void, as in the case just reported. But if he warrant or undertake that a certain thing shall be done, for instance, that the ship shall sail with convoy, or on a particular day; these being circumstances, materially varying the risk, the underwriter shall not be responsible for a loss, if they are not complied with: but the contract is not void from the beginning, nor does the insured incur any moral guilt; because they do not depend entirely for their performance upon the will of the person insured, nor could they be within his knowledge, at the time he entered into the contract.

A short time after the case of Woolmer against Muilman had been decided, another very similar came on at Guildhall before Lord Mansfield.

Fernandes v.
De Costa.
Sittings after
Hil. 4 G. 3.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on goods laden on board such a ship, warranted a Portuguese. The insurance was made during the French war, when the premium would have been much higher on an English ship. The plaintiff gave partial evidence of her being a Portuguese; and that she was obliged, on account of perils of the sea, to put into a French port, by which the cargo was spoiled. This was admitted by the defendant, who contended that, during her stay at the French port, she was libelled, and condemned as not being Portuguese: and that although the goods were lost by a different peril, yet

yet in fact the ship was not Portuguese, (being insured as such) and that this vitiated the policy ab initio—and this was agreed to be law. In order to prove that she was not Portuguese, the defendant produced the sentence of condemnation, and the confirmation thereof in the courts of France; and an answer of the present plaintiff in the court of Chancery here, by which it was admitted, that the ship was condemned as not being, or under pretence of not being, Portuguese.

Lord Mansfield.—As the sentence is always general (without expressing the reason of the condemnation) attested copies of the libel ought in strictness to have been produced, to shew upon what ground the ship was libelled against. But as the plaintiff has by his answer in Chancery admitted that she was condemned, as not being Portuguese; when added to the expression used in the sentence of confirmation, that the ship was condemned in the court of prizes, there is sufficient evidence for us to proceed upon. The defendant, the underwriter, had a verdict.

The second species of fraud, which affects insurances, is the concealment of circumstances, known only to one of the parties entering into the contract. Upon this head, the principles of law are perfectly clear, free from doubt or possibility of error. Concealment of circumstances vitiates all contracts, upon the principles of natural law. Insurance is a contract of speculation. The facts, upon which the risk is to be computed, lie, for the most part, within the knowledge of the insured only. The underwriter must therefore rely upon him for all necessary information; and must trust to him, that he will conceal nothing, so as to make him form a wrong estimate. If a mistake happen, without any fraudulent intention, still the contract is annulled, because the risk is not the same, which the underwriter intended. Good faith forbids either party, by concealing what he privately knows, to draw

1 Black. Rep.

465.

1 Black. Rep.

594.

the other into a bargain, from his ignorance of that fact, and his belief of the contrary.

These principles have been uniformly supported by a variety of decisions.

*Da Costa v.
Scandret. in Chancery.
2 P. Will.
179.*

One having a doubtful account of his ship, that was at sea, namely, that a ship, described like his, was taken, insured her, without giving any notice to the insurers of what he had heard, either as to the hazard, or the circumstances, which might induce him to believe that his ship was in great danger, if not actually lost. The insurers bring a bill for an injunction, and to be relieved against the insurance as fraudulent.

Lord Chancellor Macclesfield.—The insured has not dealt fairly with the insurers in this case; he ought to have disclosed to them what intelligence he had of the ship's being in danger, and which might induce him, at least, to fear that it was lost, though he had no certain account of it. For if this circumstance had been discovered, it is impossible to think, that the insurers would have insured the ship at so small a premium as they have done; but either would not have insured at all, or would have insisted on a larger premium, so that the concealment of this intelligence is a fraud. Whereupon the policy was decreed to be delivered up with costs, but the premium to be paid back, and allowed out of the costs.

*Seaman v.
Fonnereau.
2 Stra. 1183.*

In another case it appeared, that on the 25th of August, 1740, the defendant underwrote a policy from Carolina to Holland. It came out in evidence, that the agent for the plaintiff had on the 23d of August, (two days before the policy was effected) received a letter from Cowes, dated the 21st of August, wherein it is said: "On the " 12th of this month, I was in company with the " ship Davy, (the ship in question) at twelve at " night lost sight of her all at once; the captain
" spoke to me the day before that he was leaky,
" and the next day we had a hard gale." The ship, however, continued her voyage till the 19th
of

of August, when she was taken by the Spaniards; and there was no pretence of any knowledge of the actual loss at the time of the insurance, but it was made in consequence of a letter received that day from the plaintiff abroad, dated the 27th June before.

Lord Chief Justice Lee declared, that as these are contracts upon chance, each party ought to know all the circumstances. And he thought it not material, that the loss was not such an one as the letter imported; for those things are to be considered in the situation of them at the time of the contract, and not to be judged of by subsequent events. He therefore thought it a strong case for the defendant. The jury found accordingly.

In an action on a policy of insurance, the case was, that the ship was insured at and from Genoa, liable to average; her loading consisting of potash, verdigrease, cotton, and other perishable commodities. This loading was put on board at Leghorn the 10th of August, and the vessel had lain at Genoa above five months, being originally bound for Dublin; but losing her convoy, she put into Genoa the 13th of August, and lay there till the 5th of January, when she sailed. And the insurance was made the 20th of January; at which time, these circumstances were known to the assured, but not communicated to the underwriter. A few days after she put to sea, she was shattered by a storm, and the cargo considerably damaged. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff; and a new trial was moved for on this ground, that the policy was bad ab initio, for want of a due disclosure of the circumstances.

Hodgson v.
Richardson.
1 Black.
Rep. 463.

Lord Mansfield.—The question is, whether here was a sufficient disclosure; that is, whether the fact concealed was material to the risk run. This is a matter of fact; and if material, the consequence is matter of law, that the policy is bad. Now who can say, that no risk was run, during the

the five months stay at Genoa, or no damage happened in that period? The policy is founded on misrepresentation; the ship is insured "at and " from Genoa to Dublin; the adventure to begin " from the loading, to equip for this voyage." This plainly implies, that Genoa was the port of loading: and at the trial, all the witnesses said, that by usage, it was material to acquaint the underwriter, whether the insurance was to be at the commencement, or in the middle of a voyage.

Mr. Justice Wilmot.—The fact disclosed by this policy is not true, that Genoa is the loading port; for so it must be understood. In such cases I will not speculate upon the materiality, or immateriality of the fact. Not but that I think, the length of the stay at Genoa is very material, in case of such perishable commodities.

Mr. Justice Yates.—The concealment of material circumstances vitiates all contracts, upon the principles of natural law. A man, if kept ignorant of any material ingredient, may safely say, it is not his contract. And I think this fact material, for the reasons before given. A new trial was accordingly granted.

The doctrine, so accurately laid down in the preceding cases, has since been the principle, on which several verdicts have been given, in causes of this nature; a few of which it will be proper to mention.

Ratcliffe and Another v.
Shoolbred.
Sitting at Guildhall af.
Trin. 1780.

An action was brought on a policy of assurance on goods, on board the Matty and Betty, at and from the coast of Africa to her last discharging port in the British West Indies. The objection made to paying the loss was, that there had been a material concealment, or misrepresentation of the true state or situation of the ship and voyage at the time of underwriting the policy. The ship had been sent out to trade on the coast of Africa, with directions to proceed from thence to the British West Indies, and to stop at Barbadoes, if she could get a sale; if not, to proceed to Montego Bay.

Bay. On the 2d of October she sailed from St. Thomas's on the coast of Africa, with a cargo of slaves, and was taken on the 6th of December following by an American privateer. A letter was received by a house at Liverpool on the 21st of February, mentioning, that the ship was well, and had sailed from St. Thomas's on the 2d of October. This information was communicated next day to the plaintiffs, who in consequence of it, wrote the same evening to two different brokers, to get a new insurance on the ship, there having been one before, and another on the cargo, which last was the subject of the present action. In the instructions to the brokers, the plaintiffs say nothing of the ship from the time of her first sailing; but to one of the brokers, they wrote this; "we should be glad, if you would get us 600 l. more on the ship, as she is rather long; and we think it not prudent to run so large a risk at so critical a time. We expect to hear soon of her." It had afterwards occurred, that the policy might be affected, if intimation was not given of the letter, which had been received. The broker, therefore, by direction of the plaintiffs, added to the instructions: "the above ship was on the coast the 2d of October;" but said nothing of her having sailed from St. Thomas. The policy was dated the 21st of March.

Lord Mansfield.—The insured is bound to represent to the underwriter all the material circumstances of the ship and voyage. If he do not, though by accident only, or neglect, the underwriters are not liable: à fortiori, if he suppress or misrepresent from fraud. The question is, whether this be one of those cases, which is affected by a misrepresentation or concealment. If the plaintiffs concealed any material part of the information they received, it is a fraud; and the insurers are not liable. The jury found for the defendant agreeably to his lordship's direction.

Fillis v.
Brutton.
Sittings at Guilhn. after
H.L. 1782.

In another case, the policy was on the brig Richard at and from Plymouth to Bristol. Several letters passed between the plaintiff and the broker, who effected the policy, as to the premium at which the insurance could be made: at last, it was underwritten at 4 guineas per cent. The broker's instructions stated the ship ready to sail on the 24th of December. The broker represented to the underwriter, that the ship was in port, when in fact she had sailed the 23d of December.

Lord Mansfield said, that this was a material concealment and misrepresentation. The jury, however, hesitated: his lordship then laid down the following as general principles.—In all insurances, it is essential to the contract, that the assured should represent the true state of the ship to the best of his knowledge. On that information, the underwriters engage. If he state that as a fact, which he does not know to be true, but only believes it; it is the same as a warranty. He is bound to tell the underwriters truth. In the present insurance, the only material point is this: had the ship sailed, or was she in port? Upon this, the jury found for the defendant.

1 Black. Rep.
593.

But although the rule is laid down thus generally, that one of the contracting parties is bound to conceal nothing from the other; yet it is by no means so general, as not to admit of an exception, Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. There are many matters, as to which the insurer may be innocently silent. 1st, As to what the insurer knows, however he came by that knowledge. 2d. As to what he ought to know. 3d. As to what lessens the risk. An underwriter is bound to know political perils, as to the state of war or peace. If he insure a privateer, he needs not be told her destination. And, as men reason differently from the same facts, he needs not be told another's conclusions from known facts.

These ideas were fully entered into, explained, and illustrated in the argument of Lord Mansfield,
in

in delivering the opinion of the court in Carter v. Boehm.

This was an insurance cause upon a policy, interest or no interest, without benefit of salvage. The insurance was made by the plaintiff, for the benefit of his brother, governor George Carter. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff; upon which a new trial was moved for, on the ground, that circumstances had not been sufficiently disclosed. Lord Mansfield reported the evidence given at the trial; by which it appeared, that it was a policy of insurance for one year, namely, from the 16th of October 1759, to the 16th October 1760, for the benefit of the governor of Fort Marlborough, George Carter, against the loss of Fort Marlborough, in the island of Sumatra, in the East Indies, by its being taken by a foreign enemy. The event happened: the fort was taken, by Count D'Estaigne, within the year. The first witness was Cawthorne, the broker, who produced the memorandum given by the governor's brother (the plaintiff) to him; and the use made of these instructions was to shew, that the insurance was made for the benefit of governor Carter, and to insure him against the taking of the fort by a foreign enemy. Both parties had been long in Chancery; and the depositions, there made on both sides, were read as evidence upon this trial. It was objected on behalf of the defendant, to be a fraud, by concealment of circumstances, which ought to have been disclosed; and particularly the weakness of the fort, and the probability of its being attacked by the French: which concealment was offered to be proved by two letters. The first was a letter from the governor to his brother Roger Carter, his trustee, and the plaintiff in this cause: the second was from the governor to the East India Company.

The evidence in reply to this objection, consisted of three depositions in Chancery, setting forth, that the governor had 20,000*l.* in effects; and Carter v. Boehm.

3 Burr. 1905.
and 1 Black.
Rep. 593.
Vide ante
c. 1. p. 14.

and had only insured 10,000 l.: and that he was guilty of no fault in defending the fort. The first of these depositions, was captain Tryon's, which proved, that this was not a fort proper, or designed to resist European enemies; but only calculated for defence against the natives of the island of Sumatra: that the governor's office is not military, but only mercantile: and that Fort Marlborough is only a subordinate factory to Fort St. George. There was no evidence to the contrary; and a special jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

After argument at the bar, upon the motion for a new trial, and time taken by the court to deliberate, their unanimous opinion was delivered by Lord Mansfield.—This is a motion for a new trial. In support of it, the counsel for the defendant contend, that some circumstances in the knowledge of governor Carter, not having been mentioned at the time the policy was underwritten, amount to a concealment, which ought, in law, to avoid the policy. The counsel for the plaintiff insist, that the not mentioning these particulars does not amount to a concealment, which ought, in law, to avoid the policy; either as a fraud; or as varying the contract. 1st, It may be proper to say something, in general, of concealments which avoid a policy. 2dly, To state particularly the case now under consideration. 3dly, To examine, whether the verdict, which finds this policy good, although the particulars objected were not mentioned, is well founded.

First, insurance is a contract upon speculation. The special facts, upon which the risk is to be computed, lie most commonly in the knowledge of the insured only. The underwriter trusts to his statement, and proceeds upon confidence, that he does not keep back any circumstances within his knowledge, to mislead the underwriter into a belief that the circumstance does not exist,
and

and to induce him to estimate the risk, as if it did not exist. The keeping back such circumstances is a fraud; and therefore the policy is void. Although the suppression should happen through mistake, without any fraudulent intention; yet still the underwriter is deceived, and the policy is void: because the risk run is really different from the risk understood, and intended to be run, at the time of the agreement. The policy would equally be void against the underwriter, if he concealed any thing; as, if he insured a ship on her voyage, which he privately knew to be arrived: and an action would lie to recover the premium. The governing principle is applicable to all contracts and dealings. Good faith forbids either party, by concealing what he privately knows, to draw the other into a bargain, from his ignorance of that fact, and his believing the contrary. But either party may be innocently silent as to grounds open to both, to exercise their judgments upon. Aliud est celare; aliud tacere: neque enim id est celare quicquid reticeas; sed cum quod tu scias, id ignorare, emolumenti tui causâ, velis eos, quorum interfit id scire. This definition of concealment, restrained to the efficient motives, and precise subject of any contract, will generally hold to make it void, in favour of the party misled by his ignorance of the thing concealed. There are many matters, as to which the insured may be innocently silent: he needs not mention what the underwriter knows, scientia utrinque par pares contrabentes facit. An underwriter cannot insist that the policy is void, because the insured did not tell him what he actually knew, what way soever he came to the knowledge. The insured needs not mention what the underwriter ought to know; what he takes upon himself the knowledge of; or what he waves being informed of. The underwriter needs not be told what lessens the risk agreed, and understood to be run by the express terms of the policy. He needs not be told

Cicero de
Officiis lib. 3.
C. 12. 13.

told general topics of speculation: as for instance, the underwriter is bound to know every cause, which may occasion natural perils; as the difficulty of the voyage; the kind of seasons; the probability of lightning, hurricanes, and earthquakes. He is bound to know every cause, which may occasion political perils; from the rupture of states; from war, and the various operations of war. He is bound to know the probability of safety, from the continuance or return of peace; from the imbecillity of the enemy, through the weakness of their councils, or their want of strength. If an underwriter insure private ships of war, by sea, and on shore, from ports to ports, and from places to places, any where, he needs not be told the secret enterprises, upon which they are destined; because he knows some expedition must be in view: and from the nature of his contract, he waves the information, without being told. If he insure for three years, he needs not be told any circumstance to shew it may be over in two: or, if he insure a voyage with liberty of deviation, he needs not be told what tends to shew there will be no deviation. Men argue differently, from natural phænomena, and political appearances: they have different capacities, different degrees of knowledge, and different intelligence. But the means of information and judging, are open to both: each professes to act from his own skill and sagacity; and therefore, neither needs to communicate to the other. The reason of the rule, which obliges parties to disclose, is to prevent fraud, and encourage good faith: it is adapted to such facts as vary the nature of the contract, which one privately knows, and the other is ignorant of, and has no reason to suspect. The question, therefore, must always be, “Whether there was, under all the circumstances, at the time the policy was underwritten, a fair statement, or a concealment: fraudulent, if designed; or, though not designed designed, varying materially the object of the policy, and changing the risk understood to be run."

2dly, This brings me, in the second place, to state the case now under consideration. The policy is against the loss of Fort Marlborough, from being destroyed by, taken by, or surrendered unto, any European enemy, between the 16th of October 1759, and the 16th of October 1760. The underwriter knew at the time, that the policy was to indemnify, to that amount, George Carter the governor of Fort Marlborough, in case the event insured against should happen. The governor's instructions for the insurance, bearing date at Fort Marlborough, the 22d of September, 1759, were laid before the underwriter. Two actions upon this policy were tried before me in the year 1762. The defendants then knew of a letter written to the East India Company, which the Company offered to put into my hands; but would not deliver it to the parties, because it contained some matters, which they did not think proper to be made publick. An objection occurred to me at the trial, whether a policy against the loss of Fort Marlborough, for the benefit of the governor, was good; upon the principle, which does not allow a sailor to insure his wages. But considering that this place, though called a fort, was really but a factory or settlement for trade; and that he, though called a governor, was really but a merchant: considering too, that the law allows a captain of a ship to insure goods, which he has on board, or his share in the ship, if he be a part owner; and the captain of a privateer, if he be a part owner, to insure his share: considering also, that the objection could not, upon any ground of justice, be made by the underwriter, who knew him to be governor, at the time he took the premium: and as with regard to principles of public convenience, the case so seldom happens (I never saw one before), any danger

Vide ante,
c. 1. p. 14.

P

from

from the example is little to be apprehended: I did not think myself warranted, upon that point, to nonsuit the plaintiff; especially as the objection did not come from the bar. Though this point was mentioned at the last trial, it was not insisted upon; nor has it been seriously argued, upon this motion, as sufficient alone to vacate the policy: and if it had, we are all of opinion, that we are not warranted to say, that it is void, upon this account. Upon the plaintiff's obtaining the two former verdicts, the underwriters went into a court of Equity; where they have had an opportunity to sift every thing to the bottom, to get every discovery from the governor and his brother, and to examine any witnesses who were upon the spot. At last, after the fullest investigation of every kind, the present action came on to be tried at the sittings after last term. The plaintiff proved, without contradiction, that the place, called Bencoolen or Fort Marlborough, is a factory or settlement, but no military fort or fortress: that it was not established for a place of arms or defence against the attacks of an European enemy; but merely for the purpose of trade, and of defence against the natives: that the fort was only intended and built to keep off the country blacks: that the only security against European ships of war consisted in the difficulty of the entrance and navigation of the river, for want of proper pilots: that the general state and condition of the said fort, and of the strength thereof, were in general well known, by most persons conversant or acquainted with Indian affairs, or the state of the Company's factories or settlements; and could not be kept secret or concealed from persons, who should endeavour, by proper enquiry, to inform themselves: that there were no apprehensions or intelligence of any attack by the French, until they attacked Nattal in February 1760: that on the 8th of February 1760, there was no suspicion of any design by the French: that
the

the governor at that time bought of the witness goods to the value of 4000 l. and had goods to the value of above 20,000 l. and then dealt for 50,000 l. and upwards: that on the 1st of April 1760, the fort was attacked by a French man of war of 64 guns, and a frigate of 20 guns, under the Comte D'Estaigne, brought in by Dutch pilots, was unavoidably taken, and afterwards delivered to the Dutch, the prisoners being sent to Batavia. On the part of the defendant, after all the opportunities of enquiry, no evidence was offered, that the French ever had any design upon Fort Marlborough, before the end of March 1760: or that there was the least intelligence or alarm, that they might make the attempt till the taking of Nattal, in the year 1760. They did not offer to disprove the evidence, that the governor had acted, as in full security, long after the month of September 1759; and had turned his money into goods, so late as the 8th of February 1760. There was no attempt to shew that he had not lost by the capture very considerably beyond the value of his insurance. But the defendant relied upon a letter, written to the East India Company, bearing date the 16th of September 1759, which was sent to England by the Pitt, captain Wilson, who arrived in May 1760, together with the instructions for insuring: and also a letter bearing date the 22d of September 1759, sent to the plaintiff by the same conveyance, and at the same time, (which letters his lordship repeated.) They relied too upon the cross examination of the broker who negotiated the policy, that, in his opinion, these letters ought to have been produced, or the contents disclosed; and, that if they had, the policy would not have been underwritten. The defendant's counsel contended at the trial, as they have done upon this motion, that the policy was void: 1st, Because the state and condition of the fort, mentioned in the governor's letter to the East India Company, was not disclosed. 2dly,

P 2

Because

Because he did not disclose, that the French, not being in a condition to relieve their friends upon the coast, were more likely to make an attack upon this settlement, rather than remain idle: 3dly, That he had not disclosed his having received a letter of the 4th of February, 1759; from which it seemed, that the French had a design to take this settlement, by surprize, the year before. They also contended, that the opinion of the broker was almost decisive: the whole was laid before the jury, who found for the plaintiff.

Thirdly, It remains to consider these objections; and to examine, whether this verdict is well founded. To this purpose, it is necessary to consider the nature of the contract, at the time it was made. The policy was signed in May, 1760. The contingency was, whether Fort Marlborough was or would be taken, by an European enemy, between October 1759, and October 1760. The computation of the risk depended upon the chance, whether any European power would attack the place by sea. If they did, it was incapable of resistance. The underwriter at London, in May 1760, could judge much better of the probability of the contingency, than governor Carter could at Fort Marlborough in September 1759. He knew the success of the operations of the war in Europe: he knew what naval force the English and French had sent to the East Indies. He knew, from a comparison of that force, whether the sea was open to any such attempt by the French. He knew, or might know, every thing which was known at Fort Marlborough in September 1759, of the general state of affairs in the East Indies, or the particular condition of Fort Marlborough, by the ship, which brought the orders for the insurance. He knew that ship must have brought many letters to the East India Company; and, particularly from the governor. He knew what probability there was of the Dutch committing, or having committed hostilities. Under these circumstances, and with this knowledge, he insures against the general contingency of the place being attacked by any European power. If there had been any design on foot, or enterprize begun, in September 1759, to the knowledge of the governor, it would have varied the risk understood by the underwriter; on account of his not being told of a particular design or attack then subsisting; and he estimated the risk upon the foot of an uncertain operation, which might or might not be attempted. But the governor had no notice of any design subsisting in September 1759. There was no such design in fact: the attempt was made without premeditation, from the sudden opportunity of a favourable occasion, by the connivance and assistance of the Dutch, which tempted Comte D'Estaigne to break his parole. These being the circumstances, under which the contract was entered into, we shall be better able to judge of the objections upon the foot of concealments. The first concealment is, that he did not disclose the condition of the place. The underwriter knew the insurance was for the governor. He knew the governor must be acquainted with the state of the place. He knew the governor could not disclose it, consistently with his duty. He knew the governor, by insuring, apprehended, at least, the possibility of an attack. With this knowledge, without asking a question, he underwrote. By so doing, he took the knowledge of the state of the place upon himself. It was a matter, as to which he might be informed various ways: it was not a matter, within the private knowledge of the governor only. But not to rely upon that, the utmost, which can be contended is, that the underwriter trusted to the fort being in the condition, in which it ought to be; in like manner, as it is taken for granted, that a ship insured is sea worthy. What is that condition? All the witnesses agree, that it was only to resist the natives, and not an European force. The policy insures against a total loss, taking for granted, that if the place was attacked, it would be lost. The contingency, therefore, which the underwriter has insured against, is, whether the place would be attacked by an European force ; and not, whether it would be able to resist such an attack, if the ships could get up the river. It was particularly left to the jury to consider, whether this was the contingency in the contemplation of the parties : they have found that it was. And we are all of opinion, that, in this respect, their conclusion is agreeable to the evidence. The state and condition of the place were material in this view only, in case of a land attack by the natives.
of

The second concealment is, his not having disclosed, that, from the French not being able to relieve their friends upon the coast, they might make them a visit. This is no part of the fact of the case : it is mere speculation of the governor, from the general state of the war. The conjecture was dictated to him from his fears. It is a bold attempt for the conquered to attack the conqueror, in his own dominions. The practicability of it, in this case, depended upon the English naval force in those seas, of which the underwriter could better judge at London in May 1760, than the governor could at Fort Marlborough in September 1759. The third concealment is, that he did not disclose the letter from Mr. Winch of the 4th of February 1759, mentioning the design of the French the year before. What that letter was ; how he mentioned the design ; or upon what authority he mentioned it ; or by whom the design was supposed to be imagined, does not appear. The defendant has had every opportunity of discovery ; and nothing has come out upon it, as to this letter, which he thinks makes for his purpose. The plaintiff offered to read the account Winch wrote to the East India Company, which which was objected to; and therefore, it was not read. The nature of that intelligence therefore, is very doubtful. But taking it in the strongest light, it is a report of a design to surprize the year before; but then dropt. This is a topic of mere general speculation, which made no part of the fact of the case, upon which the insurance was to be made. It was said, if a man insured a ship, knowing that two privateers were lying in her way, without mentioning that circumstance, it would be a fraud. I agree it. But if he knew that two privateers had been there the year before, it would be no fraud, not to mention that circumstance: because it does not follow that they will cruise this year, at the same time, in the same place; or that they are in a condition to do it. If the circumstance of this design laid aside had been mentioned, it would have tended rather to lessen the risk, than increase it: for the design of a surprize, which has transpired, and been laid aside, is less likely to be taken up again; especially by a vanquished enemy. The jury considered the nature of the governor's silence as to these particulars; they thought it innocent, and that the omission to mention them, did not vary the contract. And we are all of opinion, that, in this respect, they judged extremely right. There is a silence, not objected to at the trial, nor upon this motion; which might, with as much reason, have been objected to, as the two last omissions; rather more. It appears by the governor's letter to the plaintiff, that he was principally apprehensive of a Dutch war. He certainly had, what he thought, good grounds for this apprehension. Comte D'Estaigne being piloted by the Dutch, delivering the fort to the Dutch, and sending the prisoners to Batavia, is a confirmation of those grounds. Probably, the loss of the place was owing to the Dutch. The French could not have got up the river without Dutch pilots: and it is plain, the whole was concerted with them. And yet, at the time of underwriting the policy, there was no intimation about the Dutch. The reason why the counsel have not objected to his not disclosing the grounds of this apprehension is, because it must have arisen from political speculation, and general intelligence: therefore, they agree, it is not necessary to communicate such things to an underwriter.

Lastly, Great stress was laid upon the opinion of the broker. But we all think, the jury ought not to pay the least regard to it: it is mere opinion; which is not evidence: it is opinion after an event: it is opinion without the least foundation from any previous precedent or usage: it is an opinion, which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises, from which the court and jury were to determine the cause: and therefore, it is improper and irrelevant in the mouth of a witness. There is no imputation upon the governor, as to any intention of fraud. By the same conveyance, which brought his orders to insure, he wrote to the Company every thing, which he knew or suspected: he desired nothing to be kept a secret, which he wrote either to them or his brother. His subsequent conduct, down to the 8th of February 1760, shewed, that he thought the danger very improbable. The reason of the rule against concealments is, to prevent fraud and encourage good faith. If the defendant's objections were to prevail, in the present instance, the rule would be turned into an instrument of fraud. The underwriter here, knowing the governor to be acquainted with the state of the place; knowing that he apprehended danger, and must have some ground for his apprehension; being told nothing of either, signed this policy, without asking a question. If the objection, "that he was not told," is sufficient to vacate it, he took the premium, knowing the policy to be void, in order to gain if the alternative turned out one way; and to make no satisfaction, if it turned out the other: he drew the governor into a false confidence, that if the worst should happen, he had provided against total ruin; knowing, at the same time, that the indemnity, to which the governor trusted, was void. There was not a word said to him, of the affairs of India, or the state of the war there, or the condition of Fort Marlborough. If he thought that omission an objection, at the time, he ought not to have signed the policy, with a secret reserve in his own mind to make it void: if he dispensed with the information, and did not think this silence an objection then; he cannot take it up now, after the event. What has been often said of the statute of frauds may, with more propriety, be applied to every rule of law, drawn from principles of natural equity, to prevent fraud: "that it should never be so turned, construed, or used, as to protect, or be a means of fraud." After the fullest deliberation, we are all clear that the verdict is well founded; and that there ought not to be a new trial: consequently, that the rule obtained for that purpose ought to be discharged.

To have given this very elaborate and learned argument in the state in which it was delivered, certainly requires no apology; because from it may be collected all the general principles, upon which the doctrine of concealments, in matters of insurance, is founded, as well as all the exceptions, which can be made to the generality of those principles. To have abridged such an argument, would have very much lessened the pleasure of the reader, and would have been an injury to the venerable judge, who in that form delivered the opinion of the court. The rules, then advanced and illustrated, have since been confirmed by the opinion of the judges upon similar questions.

The plaintiffs, Planché and Jacquery, merchants in London, insured goods "on board the Sue-

Planché and Another v.
Fletcher.
Doug. 238.

" disb

“ disb ship called the Maria Magdalena, lost or “ not lost, at and from London and Ramsgate to “ Nantz, with liberty to call at Ostend, being a “ general ship in the port of London for Nantz.”
 There was a declaration in the policy, that the insurance was made on account of “ certain per“ sons carrying on trade under the name and firm “ of Vallée and Dupleffis, Monsieur Lusseau le “ Jeune, Guillaume Albert, et Poitier de la Gueule.”
 The defendant underwrote the policy for 300*l*.
 at three guineas per cent. The ship’s clearances from the Custom-house in London, and her other papers, were all made out for Ostend only, but the ship and goods were intended to go directly from London to Nantz, without going to Ostend. Bills of lading, in the French language, dated the 18th of July, 1778, were signed by the captain in Lon- don, but purporting to be made at Ostend, and that the goods were shipped there to be delivered at Nantz. The policy was subscribed by the defendant on the 7th of July, and the lading was taken in between the 24th of July and the 17th of August. The proclamation for making reprisals on French ships, bore date the 29th, and appeared in the Gazette on the 31st of July.
 Two underwriters had signed the policy after the proclamation, at the same premium of three guineas; one on the 31st of July, and the other on the 7th of August. The ship sailed on the 24th of August, and was taken by a king’s cutter, on her way to Nantz. After her departure from Gravesend, the captain threw overboard all the papers which he had received from the Custom-house at London. They had been obliterated by the Custom-house officers at Gravesend, and were no longer of any use. The ship was released by the Admiralty, but the goods were condemned.
 The plaintiffs had no connection or share in the ship. Such were the material facts in this case, as they were stated this day by Lord Mansfield in his report, upon a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial. The cause had been tried

Sittings after
 Trin. 1779.

tried at the last sittings at Guildhall, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. The grounds of the application for a new trial were two: 1st, That there was a fraud on the underwriters, the ship having been cleared out for Ostend, and yet never having been designed for that place. 2dly, That as hostilities were declared after the policy was signed, and before the ship sailed, the defendant ought to have had notice, that he might have exercised his discretion, whether he would chuse for a peace premium to run the risk of capture. Beside the facts abovementioned, his lordship stated, that the plaintiff had produced evidence to shew, that all ships, going with goods of British manufacture to France, clear out for Ostend, without meaning to go thither; and that this is universally understood by persons concerned in that branch of commerce. The reasons suggested for clearing out for Ostend, and afterwards making bills of lading, as from that place, were, that the light-house duties are saved, which are payable when the voyage is known to be directly down the channel; and that the French duties are less upon goods from Ostend, than from England.

Lord Mansfield.—This verdict is impeached upon two grounds. 1st. It is said there was a fraud on the underwriters, in clearing out the ship for Ostend, when she was never intended to go thither. But I think there was no fraud on them; perhaps, not on any body. What had been practised in this case was proved to be the constant course of the trade; and notoriously so to every body. The reason for clearing for Ostend, and signing bills of lading as from thence, did not fully appear. But it was guessed at. The Fermiers Generaux have the management of the taxes in France. As we have laid a large duty on French goods, the French may have done the same on ours; and it may be the interest of the farmers to connive at the importation of English commodities, and take Ostend duties, rather than stop

stop the trade, by exacting a tax, which amounts to a prohibition. But, at any rate, this was no fraud in this country. One nation does not take notice of the revenue laws of another. With regard to the evasion of the light-house duties, the ship was not liable to confiscation on that account. 2d. The second objection is, that the policy was made before, and the ship sailed after, the proclamation for reprisals. But every man in England and France, on the 17th of July, expected the immediate commencement of a war. I will not say it was actually commenced; but the ambassadors of both countries were recalled; the Pallas and Licorne were taken; the fleets were at sea; and, as it appeared afterwards, were waiting for each other to fight. It does not appear that the goods were French property; an Englishman might be sending his goods to France in a neutral ship. But it is indifferent whether they were English or French. The risk insured extends to all captures, and as two other underwriters signed at the same premium, after the proclamation, it appears that the war risk was in view when the defendant signed. Shall he avail himself of an event, which encreases the risk, but which he had in contemplation when he underwrote the policy? I am of opinion, that there should not be a new trial. The three other judges concurred; and the rule was discharged.

Mayne v.
Walter.
B R. East.
22 Geo. 3.

A similar decision was made in the following case. It was an action on a policy of insurance on a Portuguese ship, at and from Madeira to her port of discharge in Jamaica, with liberty to touch at the Leeward Islands. The defendant underwrote 150*l.* upon it: the ship was captured by a French privateer, and condemned in the court of Admiralty in France, on the ground of having an English super-cargo on board. The action was brought to recover this loss from the underwriter, who refused to pay, alledging, that the plaintiff should have disclosed to him, that the

the supercargo was English. At the trial, a verdict was given for the plaintiff, upon a case reserved for the opinion of the court, and containing in substance the facts just stated.

For the defendant it was insisted, upon the argument, that the agent for the insured ought to have disclosed this fact; and that it was the more material in this case, because during the present war, an ordinance passed in France, similar to one made in the last war in 1756, which declares, that no Dutch ship shall be allowed to take on board a supercargo, belonging to any nation at enmity with the court of France: and that if any ship, having such supercargo, be taken, it shall be condemned as lawful prize.

Lord Mansfield.—It is an oppressive and arbitrary rule, and contrary to the law of nations. If both parties were ignorant of it, the underwriter must run all risks: and if the defendant knew of such an edict, it was his duty to enquire, if such a supercargo were on board. It must be a fraudulent concealment of circumstances, that will vitiate a policy. But it is remarkable, that neither party has said a word, respecting the treaties between France and Portugal. Judgment was accordingly given for the plaintiff.

3d. We come now to the third great division of this chapter, namely, to cases in which policies are void by misrepresentation. Before we proceed to state the cases under this head, it will be proper to distinguish between a warranty and a representation. A warranty or condition is that, which makes a part of the written policy, and must be literally and strictly performed; and being a part of the agreement, nothing tantum will do, or answer the purpose. A representation is a state of the case, not a part of the written instrument, but collateral to it, and entirely independant of it; and it is sufficient, that a representation be substantially performed. The consequence of a breach of a warranty we shall take take notice of hereafter. If there be a misrepresentation, it will avoid the policy, as a fraud, but not as a part of the agreement. Even written instructions, if they are not inserted in the policy, are only to be considered as representations; and in order to make them valid and binding as a warranty, it is absolutely necessary to make them a part of the instrument, by which the contract of indemnity is effected. If a representation be false in any material point, it will avoid the policy; and if the point be not material, the representation can hardly ever be fraudulent. The principle upon which the policy is void in such a case, we stated in the opening; that the underwriter has computed the risk upon circumstances, which were false, or which did not exist. These doctrines are fully established by a variety of judicial decisions.

Vide post c. 18.

Pawson v.

Watson.

Cowper 785.

Upon a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be granted in this case, Lord Mansfield reported as follows. This was an action upon a policy of insurance. At the trial it appeared in evidence, that the first underwriter had the following instructions shewn to him: "Three thousand five hundred pounds upon the ship Julius Cæsar, for Halifax, to touch at Plymouth, and any port in America; she mounts twelve guns and twenty men." These instructions were not asked for, nor communicated to the defendant; but the ship was only represented generally to him as a ship of force: and a thousand pounds had been done, before the defendant underwrote any thing upon her. The instructions were dated the 28th of June, 1776, and the ship sailed on the 23d of July, 1776; and was taken by an American privateer. That at the time of her being taken, she had on board 6 four pounders, 4 three pounders, 3 one pounders, 6 half pounders, which are called swivels, and 27 men and boys in all, for her crew; but of them, 16 only were men, (not 20, as the instructions mentioned) and the rest, boys.

boys. But the witness said, he considered her as being stronger with this force, than if she had 12 carriage guns, and 20 men : he also said (which is a material circumstance) that there were neither men nor guns on board, at the time of the insurance. That he himself insured at the same premium, without regard or enquiry into the force of the ship. Other underwriters also insured at the same premium, without any other representation than that she was a ship of force. That to every four pounder, there should be five men and a boy. That in merchant ships, boys always go under the denomination of men. This was met by evidence on the part of the defendant, saying, that guns mean carriage guns, not swivels ; and men mean able men, exclusive of boys. There were three causes of the same nature depending upon the same evidence. The defence in each was, that these instructions were to be considered as a warranty, the same as if they had been inserted in the policy ; though they were not proved to have been shewn to any but the first underwriter. In all the three cases, the question for the court to determine, is, whether the instructions, which were shewn to the first underwriter, are to be considered as a warranty inserted in the policy ; or as a representation, which would avoid the policy, if fraudulent. If the Court should be of opinion, that the instructions amounted to a warranty, then a new trial is to be had in each without costs ; otherwise, the verdicts, which were all for the plaintiffs, are to stand. At the trial I was of opinion, that it would be of very dangerous consequence, to add a conversation, that passed at the time, as part of the written agreement. It is a collateral representation ; and if the parties had considered it as a warranty, they would have had it inserted in the policy. But secondly, if these instructions were to be considered in the light of a fraudulent misrepresentation ; they must be both material and fraudulent : and in that light, light, I held, that a misrepresentation made to the first underwriter ought to be considered as a misrepresentation made to every one of them, and so would infect the whole policy. Otherwise, it would be a contrivance to deceive many: for where a good man stands first, the rest underwrite without asking a question; and if he be imposed upon, the rest of the underwriters are taken in by the same fraud. The case was left to the jury under that direction.

After argument at the bar, Lord Mansfield asked, Whether there was any case that made a difference between a written and a parol representation? No answer being given, his lordship proceeded: there is no distinction better known to those, who are at all conversant in the law of insurance, than that which exists between a warranty or condition, which makes part of a written policy, and a representation of the state of the case. Where it is a part of the written policy, it must be performed. As if there be a warranty of convoy, there it must be a convoy; nothing else will answer the idea intended by the warranty: it must be strictly performed, as being a part of the agreement; for in the case of convoy it might be said, the party would not have insured without convoy. But as, by the law of merchants, all dealings must be fair and honest, fraud infects and vitiates every mercantile contract. Therefore, if there be fraud in a representation, it will avoid the policy, on account of the fraud, but not on account of the non-compliance with any part of the agreement. If, in a life policy, a man warrant another to be in good health, when he knows, at the same time, he is ill of a fever, that will not avoid the policy; because, by the warranty, he takes the risk upon himself. But if there be no warranty, and he say, "the man is in good health," when in fact he knows him to be ill, it is false. So it is, if he do not know, whether he be well or ill; for it is equally false to undertake to say that, which he knows nothing at all of, as to say, that is true, which he knows is not true. But if he only say, "he believes the man to be in good health," knowing nothing about it, nor having any reason to believe the contrary; there, though the person is not in good health, it will not avoid the policy, because the underwriter then takes the risk upon himself. So that there cannot be a clearer distinction, than that which exists between a warranty, which makes part of the written policy, and a collateral representation, which, if false in a point of materiality, makes the policy void: but, if not material, it can hardly ever be fraudulent. So far from the usage being to consider instructions as a part of the policy; that parol instructions were never entered in a book, nor written instructions kept, till a few years ago, upon occasion of several actions brought by the insured upon policies, where the brokers had represented many things they ought not to have represented, in consequence of which the plaintiffs were cast. I advised the insured to bring an action against the brokers, which they did, and recovered in several instances: and I have repeatedly at Guildhall, cautioned and recommended it to the brokers, to enter all representations made by them in a book. That advice has been followed in London; but it appeared lately, at the trial of a cause, that at Bristol, to this hour, they make no entry in their books, or keep any instructions. The question then is, whether in this policy, the person insuring has warranted that the ship should positively and literally have 12 carriage guns, and 20 men. That is, whether the instructions given in evidence are a part of the policy. Now I will take it by degrees. The two first underwriters before the court are Watson and Snell. Says Watson, "it is part of my agreement, that the ship shall sail with 12 guns and 20 men; and it is so stipulated, that nothing under that number will

Q

" do:

“do: ten guns with swivels will not do.” The answer to this is, read your agreement; read your policy. There is no such thing to be found there. It is replied, yes, but in fact there is, for the instructions, upon which the policy was made, contain that express stipulation. The answer again is, there never were any instructions shewn to Watson; nor were any asked for by him. What colour then has he to say, that those instructions are any part of his agreement? It is said, he insured upon the credit of the first underwriter. A representation to the first underwriter has nothing to do with that, which is the agreement, or terms of the policy. No man, who underwrites a policy, subscribes by the act of underwriting, to terms of which he knows nothing: but he reads the agreement, and is governed by that. Matters of intelligence, such as that a ship is or is not missing, are things in which a man is guided by the name of a first underwriter, who is a good man, and to which another will therefore give faith and credit: but not to a collateral agreement, of which he can know nothing. The absurdity is too glaring, it cannot be. By extension of an equitable relief in cases of fraud, if a man is a knave with respect to a first underwriter, and makes a false representation to him in a point that is material; as where having notice of a ship being lost, he says she was safe; that shall affect the policy with regard to all the subsequent underwriters, who are presumed to follow the first. How then do Watson and Snell underwrite the ship in question? Without knowing whether she had any force at all. That proves the risk was equal to a ship of no force at all; and the premium was a vast one; eight guineas. So much therefore for those two cases. The third case is that of Ewer, who saw the instructions, with the representation, which they contained. Did the number of guns induce him to underwrite the policy? If it did, he would have said, put put them into the policy; warrant that the ship shall depart with 12 guns, and 20 men. Whereas he does no such thing, but takes the same premium, which Watson and Snell did, who had no notice of her having any force. What does that prove? That he is paid and receives a premium, as if it were a ship of no force at all. The representation amounts to no more than this, I tell you what the force will be, because it is so much the better for you. There is no fraud in it, because it is a representation only of what, in the then state of the ship, they thought would be the truth. And in real truth, the ship sailed with a larger force: for she had nine carriage guns and six swivels. The underwriters therefore had the advantage by the difference. There was no stipulation about what the weight of metal would be. All the witnesses say, that she had more force than if she had had 12 carriage guns, in point of strength, of convenience, and for the purpose of resistance. The supercargo in particular says, "he insured the same ship and the same voyage, for the same premium, without saying a syllable about the force." Why then it was a matter proper for the jury to say, whether the representation was false, or whether it was in fact an insurance as of a ship without force. They have determined, and I think very rightly, that it was an insurance without force. Ewer makes an objection, that the representation ought to be considered as inserted in the policy; but the answer to that is, he has determined whether it should be inserted in the policy or not, by not inserting it himself. There is a great difference, whether it shall be considered as a fraud. But it would be very dangerous to permit all collateral representations to be put into the policy. I am extremely glad to hear that a great many of the underwriters have paid. Mr. Thornton has paid, who was the first person that saw the instructions. Shall the rest refuse then? As to Watson and Snell,

Q 2

they

they have no pretence to refuse ; for there is not a colour for the objection made by them. As to Ewer, we are all satisfied with the determination of the jury against him. Therefore the rule for a new trial must be discharged.

N. B. On the Monday following, Mr. Davenport said, he was desired by the underwriters to ask, whether it was the opinion of the court, that to make written instructions valid and binding as a warranty, they must be inserted in the policy. Lord Mansfield answered, that most undoubtedly that was the opinion of the court: If a man warrant that a ship shall depart with 12 guns, and it depart with 10 only, it is contrary to the condition of the policy.

From the judgment pronounced in the cause just stated, we learn the difference between a warranty and a representation : we learn also, that a performance in substance will satisfy a condition expressed in a representation ; but that nothing except a strict and literal compliance will fulfil the terms of the former : and we also are instructed in the whole doctrine of representation, as far as it affects the contract of insurance. The positions advanced in the above case were so satisfactory, that they have been adopted, as the ground of direction to juries, upon all questions of representation ; and have been followed by the court, whenever points of that nature have come before them for judgment.

Bize v.
Fletcher.
Sittings after Easter Term
1779, at Guildhall.
Doug. Rep.
271.

This was an action on a policy of insurance on the ship Carnatic East Indiaman, “ at and from “ Port L'Orient, to the isles of France and Bour- “ bon, and to all or any ports or places where,
“ and whatsoever, in the East Indies, China, Per- “ sia, or elsewhere, beyond the Cape of Good Hope,
“ from place to place ; and during the ship's “ stay and trade, backwards and forwards, at all “ ports, and places, and until her safe arrival “ back at her last port of discharge in France.”
But at the same time that this policy was subscribed, there was a slip of paper wafered to it, and shewn to the underwriters, on which was written the following representation: "The ship

 " has had a complete repair, and is now a fine
 " and good vessel, three decks. Intends to sail
 " in September or October next (1776). Is to go " to Madeira, the isles of France, Pondicherry,
 " Cbina, the isles of France, and L'Orient."

The ship did not sail till the 6th of December 1776, and did not reach Pondicherry till the 23d of July 1777. She continued there till the 23d of August following, when, instead of proceeding to Cbina, she sailed for Bengal, where having passed the winter and undergone considerable repairs, she sailed from thence early in the year 1778, (being the second ship that left the Ganges) returned to Pondicherry; and after taking in a homeward bound cargo at that place, proceeded in her voyage back to L'Orient, but was taken in October in that year, by the Mentor privateer. The usual time, in which the direct voyage between Pondicherry and Bengal is performed, is six or seven days; but the Carnatic was about six weeks in going to Bengal, and two months on the way back from thence to Pondicherry. Both going and returning, she either touched at, or lay off Madras, Masulipatam, Visigapatam and Yanon, and took in goods at all those places.

It was contended in this cause at the trial, that the representation accompanying the policy restrained the voyage to the limits therein specified. They produced some letters from the owners to their correspondents, one of which was to the following effect: "We doubt not, but on account of the storm, the ship will be forced to " go to Bengal to be laid down, which cannot be " done at Pondicherry; in which case, our captain will have entered a protest, which we will " forward in time to you." In a subsequent letter, they say nothing of the storm or leak; but mention a different cause for the ship's going to

Bengal. These letters, it was said, raised a presumption, that the necessity of going to Bengal was merely a pretence devised after the capture, and when the insured began to apprehend that the words of the policy would not cover a voyage to that place.

Lord Mansfield told the jury, that the first question was, whether the policy was void, on account of misrepresentation. Now there is an essential difference between a warranty, and a representation. The warranty is a part of the contract: a risk described in the policy is part of the contract. There can be no warranty by any collateral representation. The ground, on which a representation affects a policy, is fraud. The representation must be fraudulent, that is, it must be false and material in respect to the risk to be run. All risks are governed by the nature of them; and the premium is governed by the risk. Where a representation accompanies an instrument, it says, "I will have this understood as my present intention; but I will have it in my power to vary it." The great question in this cause is, whether the representation was false, and that in a material instance. Fraud is found out by the materiality of the point it is charged in. It is to be considered then, whether they had really a view of going to China. A witness has proved that the difference of insurance is one per cent. on going to Bengal, and not to China. If you think that this was a misrepresentation to avoid paying the one per cent. you will find for the defendant. But if you are satisfied that the real intention, at the time of the representation, was to go to China, the plaintiff will be entitled to your verdict: for the insured may change his intention, go to Bengal, and yet be protected by the policy, which clearly admits of that voyage, and must be understood by both parties in a greater latitude than the representation, being expressed in different and much more comprehensive terms. If, upon the whole evidence, you shall be of opinion, that no fraud was intended, and that the variance between the intended voyage, as described in the slip of paper, and the actual voyage as performed, did not tend to increase the risk to the underwriters, this slip of paper being only a representation, you must find for the plaintiff. The jury found a verdict accordingly. And although in several causes upon the same ship, new trials were moved for, and granted; yet in this, which was the only cause, in which there was a representation, the verdict was acquiesced in, and no motion respecting it ever was made. Vide Doug Rep. 271.

In the outset of this chapter, we took notice of a very material rule respecting misrepresentation; and which it now becomes necessary to repeat. If a representation be made to the underwriter of any circumstance, which was false, this, if it be in a material point, shall vacate the policy, and annul the contract, although it happen by mistake, and without any fraudulent intention, or improper motive on the part of the insured. We also stated the principle, on which, in such a case, the contract is held to be void: because the insurer is led into error, and computes his risk upon circumstances not founded in fact; by which means, the risk actually run is different from that intended to be run, at the time the contract is made. On this ground it is, that the contract is as much at an end, as if there had been a wilful and false allegation, or an undue concealment of circumstances. The doctrine here meant to be advanced will be better understood, and more fully illustrated, by attention to the following case.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on the ship, "the Mary and Hannah, from New York to Philadelphia." At the time when the insurance was made, which was in London, on the 30th of January, the broker represented the situation of the ship to the underwriter as follows: "The

Macdowall
v. Fraser.
Doug. 247.

Q 4

"Mary

“ Mary and Hannab, a tight vessel, sailed with “ several armed ships, and was seen safe in the “ Delaware on the 11th of December, by a ship “ which arrived at New York.” In fact the ship was lost on the 9th of December, by running against a chevaux de frise, placed across the river.
 The cause came on to be tried before Lord Mans- field at Guildhall. The defence was founded on the misrepresentation as to the time when the ship was seen; and the representation and the day of the loss being proved, the jury found for the defendant. A rule was obtained on the part of the plaintiff, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why there should not be a new trial. After argument at the bar,

Lord Mansfield said: The distinction between a warranty and a representation is perfectly well settled. A representation must be fair and true.
 It should be true as to all that the insured knows;
 and, if he represents facts to the underwriter, without knowing the truth, he takes the risk upon himself. But the difference between the fact as it turns out, and as represented, must be material. The case of the Julius Caesar was very different from this. The ship there was only fitting out, when the insurance was made. No guns nor men were put on board. It was only said, what was meant to be done; and what was done,
 though different, was as advantageous, or more so, than what had been represented. There was no evidence of actual fraud in the present case, and no question of that sort seemed to be made. But there was a positive averment, that the ship was seen in the Delaware on the 11th of December.
 The underwriter was deceived as to that fact,
 and entered into the contract under that deception. There was no evidence at the trial ~~when~~ she was seen in the Delaware, or in what condition: but suppose the fact had been explained in the manner now suggested, why did the insured take upon him to compute the day of the month,

Vide ante
 the Case of Pawson v.
Watson p.
 222.

on which she had been seen? Why did he not mention exactly what his information was, and leave the underwriter to make the computation? In insurances on ships at a great distance, their being safe up to a certain day is always considered as a very important circumstance. I am of opinion, that the representation concerning the day was material.

Mr. Justice Willes.—This is certainly only a representation; but, in an insurance on so short a voyage, it might have made a material difference whether the ship was known to be safe two days sooner or later. It ought to have been shewn, on the part of the plaintiff, that it was not material, but there was no evidence that the ship was met on the 9th, or any other day. The materiality was proper for the consideration of the jury.

Mr. Justice Asbburst.—The distinction, which the court has made in the cases on the Julius Cesar, and some others, between a representation, and a warranty, is extremely just. There is no imputation of fraud in this case; but the insured should have been more cautious. In the former cases, the representation was of what was intended; here it was of a fact stated as having happened, within the knowledge of the insured. He should have made the representation in the same words, in which the intelligence is said to have been communicated to him.

Mr. Justice Buller.—We cannot say the difference of the day was not material. The safety of the ship is the most material fact of any, in cases of insurance. The plaintiff admits, that the place where she was met in safety, was material. Why was not the time equally so? There was no intentional deceit, and it is perhaps unfortunate that the insured made the mistake; but I think the verdict right.

The rule for a new trial was accordingly discharged.

A similar

Shirley v.
Wilkinson.
B.R. Mich.
22 Geo. 3.
Doug. Rep.
2d edit. 293.

A similar decision was made by the same learned judges at a period subsequent to that of the case of Macdowall and Fraser.

Upon a motion for a new trial, Lord Mansfield, and the rest of the court, were clearly of opinion, that if the broker, at the time when the policy is effected, in representing to the underwriter the state of the ship, and the last intelligence concerning her, does not disclose the whole, and what he conceals shall appear material to the jury, they ought to find for the underwriter, the contract in such case being void; although the concealment should have been innocent, the facts not mentioned having appeared immaterial to the broker, and having not been communicated merely on that account.

But as has been said before, and as will appear from the cases already cited, in order to vitiate the contract, the thing concealed must be material, it must be some fact, and not merely a supposition or speculation of the insured; and the underwriter must take advantage of any misrepresentation the first opportunity, otherwise he will not be allowed to claim any benefit from it at a future period. If therefore the insured merely represent that he expects a thing to be done, the contract will not be void, although the event should turn out very different from his expectation.

Barber v.
Fletcher.
Doug. 292.

Thus upon a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds stated to induce the court to grant it was, that since the trial, a material representation, which had been made to Shulbred, the first underwriter upon the policy, and which turned out to be false, had been discovered. Shulbred made an affidavit, by which it appeared, that when he signed the policy in March 1778, the broker was getting several others, on other ships, subscribed at the same time, all belonging to the same owner, and said, speaking of them all—"which vessels are expected to leave the coast of Africa" in

" in November or December, 1777." In truth, the vessel in question had sailed in May, 1777, and Shulbred swore, that, if he had known that circumstance, he would not have signed. There had been actions brought against all the underwriters on the policy, except Shulbred.

Lord Mansfield.—It has certainly been determined in a variety of cases, that a representation to the first underwriter extends to the others. But under what circumstances has the defendant gone to trial in this case? He certainly knew what had been represented to himself. He was acquainted with Shulbred, and had an opportunity of asking before the trial what had been represented to him. If therefore this evidence is new, it is owing to his own negligence. But the representation is not material; it was only an expectation, and the underwriters did not enquire into the ground of the expectation. This was lying by till after a trial, in order to make an objection if the verdict should be for the plaintiff. The rule was discharged.

There is another rule upon this subject, which it is material particularly to mention; although it may be collected from almost all the cases, that have already been quoted: and it is applicable to each of the three branches, into which this chapter has been divided. Wherever there has been an allegation of a falsehood, a concealment of circumstances, or a misrepresentation, it is immaterial, whether such allegation or concealment be the act of the person himself who is interested, or of his agent; for in either case, the contract is founded in deception, and the policy is consequently void. The reason of this rule is nothing more than that, which the law of England has for general convenience adopted, in treating of the relation between master and servant; declaring, that the master must always be responsible for the act of his servant, if done by his express or implied command. It would indeed be

be of very mischievous consequence, if a man might shelter himself from responsibility of any kind, by throwing the blame upon his agent : it would be to allow him to contradict a maxim of law, which says, that no man shall be suffered to make any advantage of his own wrong : and would overturn that wise principle of equity, that when one of two innocent persons (for the matter may without danger to the argument be supposed innocent) must suffer by the fraud or negligence of a third, he, who gave credit to that third person, shall bear the consequences arising from the confidence so reposed. If this be true, and it cannot be denied, of contracts in general, it must also be admitted in those of insurance, where from the very nature of the case, the business is seldom transacted by the parties themselves ; but is most commonly effected by the interposition of agents or brokers. The courts of justice have accordingly held, that any fraud in the agent of the insured vitiates and annuls the contract, as much as direct fraud in the insured himself : and this, although the act cannot be traced at all to the owner of the property ; or even though he should be perfectly innocent.

Stewart and Others v.
Dunlop and Others.
H of Lords,
2d. Apr. 8,
1785.

In a case before the House of Lords, so late as the year 1785, this doctrine was confirmed. It came before the house on an appeal from the Court of Sessions in Scotland, which had determined in favour of the respondents, the underwriters. The case was shortly this : a man having arrived at Greenock, knowing of the loss of the ship insured, and meeting a friend and intimate acquaintance of the insured, and a partner with him in some other adventures, communicated the intelligence of the loss of the ship to him, who desired it might be concealed. The same day, as appeared by the evidence, the person, who had received this information, held a conversation with the plaintiff's clerk, who made this deposition, " that neither at that time, nor

" at

“ at any other time of the said day, had he any conversation whatever with the said Mr. Boog, or “ message from him, either in writing or otherwise, “ relative to the Peggy, (the ship insured) nor “ did he get any hint from him, or any other “ person, relative to the making insurance upon “ her, further than the said Mr. Boog's asking the de“ ponent if he knew whether there was any insu“ rance made upon her, and if there was any ac“ count of her.” After this conversation, the plaintiff desired the clerk to write to get an insurance effected, which he did, without stating a word, (at least it did not appear that he had stated any) of this conversation to his master. Upon the whole of the evidence in this cause, although it did not appear by any deposition that the plaintiff knew of the loss of the ship, at the time he made the insurance, the Lords of Session decreed, “ that the insurance made by the plain“ tiff would not have been made, if the brigantine Henrietta had not arrived in the road of “ Greenock the day preceding, and brought intelligence that the ship Peggy was taken; and “ therefore that the policy was void.” The House of Lords confirmed this decree.

In the decisions of the House of Lords, the reasons of the judgment never appear; and even when the learned judges give their opinions upon any cause then depending in that house, authentic reports of them are not easily obtained: the consequence of this is, that one is frequently left to conjecture, upon what grounds the decree was pronounced. If we may be allowed to conjecture upon the case of Stewart v. Dunlop; it should seem, that as no direct or positive act of knowledge was brought home to the plaintiff himself, the conversation, which the clerk had with Mr. Boog, was held to be a sufficient proof, that the loss was known to him, at the time he wrote the letter, at the desire of the plaintiff, ordering the insurance. If known to the clerk, the act of the agent in such a case case becomes the act of the principal; because the law, upon general reasons of policy, will presume, that the principal must know whatever has come to the knowledge of the agent.

But in the end of the same year, a case was decided in the King's Bench, expressly upon the point of fraud in the agent; for it appeared that the insured was not guilty of any improper conduct in the transaction. In that case, the circumstances were numerous; and the judges gave their opinions seriatim upon the question.

Fitzherbert
v. Mather.
Term. Rep.
p. 12.

It was an action on a policy of insurance for 110*l.* underwritten by the defendant on the 21st of September, 1782, at six guineas per cent. on a cargo of oats on board the ship Joseph, lost or not lost, at and from Hartland to Portsmouth, beginning the adventure from the loading thereof on board the said ship at Hartland. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and paid the premium into court. This cause came on to be tried before Mr. Justice Buller at Guildhall, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following case:

That on the 27th of July, 1782, William Bundock, of Pool, agent for the plaintiff, contracted with Richard Thomas of Hartland, a corn factor, for the purchase of 500 quarters of oats, to be consigned to William Fuller at Portsmouth, on plaintiff's account; and desired Thomas to send to him (Bundock) a bill of lading and invoice, and also a like bill of lading and invoice to the plaintiff at Mr. Fisher's at the Tower, London. That in pursuance thereof, Thomas shipped the oats on board the ship insured, which sailed from Hartland on the 16th of September, 1782, and was lost the same day off the pier of Hartland. That on the 16th of September 1782, Thomas wrote the two following letters to William Bundock, and to Fisher.

To

To Mr. WILLIAM BUNDOCK.

Hartland, Sept. 16th 1782.

Sir,

This morning I loaded the Joseph with 175 quarters of oats to the address of William Fuller, Portsmouth, and the sloop sailed immediately; but I am afraid the wind is coming to the westward, and will force her back. I have sent a bill of loading, and a letter by the master to Mr. Fuller; and also a bill of loading and advice to Mr. Fisher, that he may insure, if he likes, as the equinox is near, &c.

R. THOMAS.

To CUTHBERT FISHER, Esq;

Hartland, Sept. 16th, 1782.

Sir,

By an order from Mr. William Bundock of Pool, I shipped this day on board the Joseph, which immediately sailed for Portsmouth, a cargo of oats as under; and by the same order, as well as the order of Thomas Fitzberbert, Esq. I took the liberty of drawing on you at three days sight, in favour of Messrs. Scott and Willes, or order, 106*l.* to be placed to the account of Thomas Fitzberbert, Esq. I wish the whole safe to hand, and expect another vessel to be loaded this week, weather permitting: this evening appears stormy.

R. THOMAS.

Then follows the bill of lading. The case further states, that about six or seven o'clock of the evening of the 16th of September, Thomas heard a report that the ship was on shore; and at six o'clock in the morning of the 17th, he knew the ship was lost. That the mode of sending letters from Hartland to London, is as follows: the letters are collected by a private hand about one or two o'clock of the day, on which the post sets out from Biddeford, from which place it goes about nine o'clock in the evening. That the 16th of September was not a post day; and the above letters did not leave Hartland till one o'clock in the afternoon of the 17th, which was the post post day from Biddeford to London: and the letters which went from Biddeford by the post of that evening, were received in London on the 20th of September. That on the 19th, the plaintiff wrote the following letter to Fisber.

Stubb-Lodge, Portsmouth, Sept. 19th, 1782.

Dear Fisber,

My correspondent, Mr. Bundock, having informed me, that he has sent two sloops to Hartland in Devonshire, to load oats on my account and risk, I beg the favour of you to insure my amount of the cargoes to Portsmouth, as soon as the bills are sent you. T. FITZHERBERT.

That the last mentioned letter, together with the former from Thomas, dated September, 16th, were received by Fisber in London, on the 20th of September; and he thereupon directed the insurance in question to be effected: that on the 21st. defendant subscribed the policy. Upon this case, after argument at the bar,

Lord Mansfield said: this policy is effected by misrepresentation, and that misrepresentation arises from the proper agent of the plaintiff, who gives the intelligence. Now whether this happened by fraud or negligence, it makes no difference; for in either case, the policy is void. As to the misrepresentation, the underwriter was warranted on the information of the agent, to take for granted, that the ship was safe at 12 or 1 o'clock of the 17th of September; for the agent gives an account of the ship being loaded, and says, "I wish the whole safe to hand." Then there was strong ground to believe on his letter, that she was safe when the post came away; and the post mark shews the day when the letters were sent. How does this misrepresentation come? Why from Thomas, who writes to Fisber, and gives him notice of the ship's sailing, on purpose that he may insure; for so he says expressly
in

in his letter to Bundock. He was honest at the time he wrote the letter; but on the 16th, at night, he hears that the ship has gone ashore, and the next morning he knew that she was absolutely lost. The post did not go out till the afternoon of that day; and he had full opportunity to send an account of the loss. If Thomas were not guilty of fraud, at least he was guilty of gross negligence: but either way, if Thomas were perfectly innocent, this policy, being effected by misrepresentation, is void.

Mr. Justice Willes.—Thomas is most clearly to be considered as the agent of the plaintiff. He shews by his letter to Fisher, that he acts as well by the orders of Fitzherbert as of Bundock. If then Thomas be the agent of the plaintiff, he is most certainly liable for his misrepresentations; and in this case the misrepresentation is gross.

Mr. Justice Abbott.—On principles of policy, it is necessary that a man should be answerable for the acts of his agent. It is often difficult to prove the privity of knowledge; and therefore the law will presume, that facts known to the one, are also within the knowledge of the other. Nor is there any hardship on the plaintiff; for if this fact had been known, the policy could not have been effected.

Mr. Justice Buller.—In order to shew, that Thomas was not the agent of the plaintiff, the counsel has assumed a fact, which is contrary to the case; for it is said, that the insurance was not made, in consequence of Thomas's letter. But what is the fact? The plaintiff's letter to Fisher desires him to insure, as soon as the bills of lading are sent. By whom were they to be sent? By Thomas; then he refers to Thomas for all the information, and as the foundation of the insurance. The plaintiff, I dare say, is innocent; and so is the defendant. But if the plaintiff build his information on that of his agent, and his agent be guilty of a misrepresentation, the principal

R

principal must suffer. It is the common question every day at Guildhall, when one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraud or negligence of a third, which of the two gave credit. In this case, the plaintiff trusted; not the defendant: Thomas had very material information, which he did not communicate; the consequence of which is, that the policy is void, and the pos- tea must be delivered to the defendant.

From these cases, the principle, which we sought to establish, is evident, viz. that whether the fraud or misrepresentation be the act of the insured, or of his agent, the policy is void, and the contract between the parties is vacated and annulled.

To have troubled the reader with all the cases that have come to trial upon the ground of fraud, would have swelled this chapter to the size of a volume; and at the same time would be wholly unnecessary, as every case of fraud must depend upon its own circumstances. It was thought sufficient to lay down the general principles, which the courts have adopted upon the subject, and which are applicable to each division of it as stated in the beginning of this chapter; and to cite two or three cases under each head, in order to confirm and illustrate the positions and principles advanced.

But as fraud is a charge of a very serious nature, materially affecting a man's credit, character and reputation, the law of England will never presume that any one is guilty of it; nor set aside a contract on that ground, unless it be fully and satisfactorily proved. The consequence of this favourable presumption is, that the burden of proof lies upon the person, who wishes to avail himself of the fraudulent conduct imputed. Thus if the insured is supposed to be guilty of fraud, the proof of it falls upon the underwriter; because he is the person, who is to derive a benefit from substantiating the charge. This is not only the law law of England, but the law of common sense; founded on principles of equity and justice. Although it has been said, that fraud will not be presumed, unless it be fully and satisfactorily proved, it is not intended to convey an idea, that there must be a positive and direct proof of fraud, in order to annul the contract. The nature of the thing itself, which is generally carried on in a secret and clandestine manner, does not admit of such evidence; and therefore, if no proof but that of actual fraud were allowed in such cases, much mischief and villainy would ensue, and pass with impunity. Circumstantial evidence is all that can be expected; and indeed, all that is necessary to substantiate such a charge. The prejudice entertained against receiving circumstantial evidence, is carried to a pitch wholly inexcusable. In the case before us, we have already shewn, it must be received; because the nature of the enquiry for the most part admits of no other, and consequently it is the best possible evidence that can be given. But taking it in a more general sense, a concurrence of circumstances (which we must always suppose to be properly authenticated, otherwise they weigh nothing) forms a stronger ground of belief, than positive and direct testimony generally affords; especially when unconfirmed by circumstances. The reason of this is obvious: a positive allegation may be founded in mistake, or what is too common, in the perjury of the witness; but circumstances cannot lie; and a long chain of well connected fabricated circumstances, requires an ingenuity and skill rarely to be met with; and such a consistency in those who come to support those circumstances by their oaths, as the annals of our courts of justice can seldom produce. Besides, circumstantial evidence is much more easily discussed, and much more easily contradicted by testimony, if false; than the positive and direct allegation of a fact, which, being confined to the knowledge of an individual, cannot possibly be the subject of contradiction founded merely on presumption and probability.

Ord. of Lew.
14. tit. Inf.
art. 41.

2 Valin, 96.

Another question upon this subject remains to be discussed; and that is, whether the underwriter is bound to return the premium, or is liable to an action for it, in a case where fraud has been proved against the insured; and consequently where the contract is void, and no risk has been run. The ordinances of France declare, that if fraud be proved against the insured, he shall be obliged to restore to the insurer that, which he has received from him, and also to pay him double the premium: and if fraud be proved against the insurer, he shall in like manner be liable to restore the premium, and to pay double the sum insured to the owner of the property. A learned commentator upon these ordinances observes, that if this article suppose a full conviction of the crime, the punishment is too small; and that here the punishment of the assurer and assured is nearly equal, although the crime of the assured is much greater, when the difference between the premium, and the value of the property is considered. Indeed, the idea of enriching one man by the punishment of another is itself a strange one; and somewhat inconsistent with the present notions of criminal justice. The ground, upon which it has been introduced into the edicts of France upon insurances, must have been this, that as the insurer in the one case, and the insured in the other, runs a considerable risk by fraudulent allegations or concealments, they shall severally be entitled to the sums stated in the ordinance, as recompense for the risk they so incurred.

The law of England has hitherto been silent upon this subject, there being no positive declaration of the legislature respecting it: and our courts of justice have not as yet adopted any general rule, with respect to the return of premium
in

in cases of fraud. In two or three instances in the Court of Chancery, where the underwriters have been relieved from the payment of the sums insured, on account of fraud; the decree has directed the premium to be returned.

Thus in a case in the year 1690, the defendant Wittingham and others had come to the insurance office, and bought a policy for insuring the life of one Horwell, (upon whose life they had no concern or interest depending) for a year; and the policy ran whether interested or not interested, at a premium of 5*l.* per cent. They took this way of drawing in subscribers; they agreed with one Marwood a known merchant upon the Exchange, and a leading man in such cases, to subscribe first; but in case Horwell died within the year, Marwood was to lose nothing, but on the contrary was to share what should be gained from the other subscribers. Upon the credit of Marwood's subscribing, several others (who had enquired of Marwood about Horwell, who was his neighbour) subscribed likewise. Horwell lived about four months, and then died; and this bill was brought to be relieved against the policy; and this matter being all confessed by the answer, the court decreed the policy to be delivered up, and the premium to be repaid. v. Thornborough. Precedents in Chancery, p. 20. and 2 Vern. 206.

So also in the case of Da Costa v. Scandret, Da Costa v. Scandrett. which has already been cited in a former part of this chapter, Lord Macclesfield, although he held the policy to be void, on the ground of fraud, decreed the premium to be returned to the insured. 2 P. Wil. 170. Vide ante p. 200.

It is true, that during the argument in the case next to be quoted, the counsel cited a case of Rucker v. Hollingbury, in which the Master of the Rolls had been of a different opinion from that delivered in the two preceding cases. But Lord Mansfield said, that there must be some mistake in reciting the case before the Master of the Rolls; for the practice of the Court of Chancery, was certainly agreeable to the two former cases.

Wilson v.
Duckett.
3 Burr. 1361.

The case, in which this observation was made, was an action on a policy of insurance on a ship, with a count of a general indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received to the plaintiff's use: and damages were laid at 98 l. The trial was had, under a decree of the court of Chancery, where the now defendant, the insurer, being there complainant, bad offered to pay back the premium, which was 10 l. No money was, in the present case, paid into court; though the usual course in these cases is for the defendant, the insurer, to bring the premium into court. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, for the ten pounds premium, on the count for money had and received to his use; although they were of opinion against the policy, upon the foot of fraud; and found against it, as being fraudulent. In fact, the first underwriter was only a decoy-duck, to induce other persons to underwrite the policy: and it had been previously agreed between the insured and him, that he should not be bound by signing the policy; which this court considered as a fraud, and therefore that the jury had given a right verdict in finding the policy fraudulent. With the concurrence of Lord Mansfield (before whom this cause was tried) and of the counsel on both sides, it was agreed to bring this question before the court, whether, upon a policy of insurance being found fraudulent, the premium should be returned to the plaintiff (the insured) or retained by the defendant (the insurer.) The cases above mentioned were quoted by the counsel for the plaintiff; but they being all in Chancery, Lord Mansfield said, he wanted to know whether there was any common law determination to the same effect. As it did not appear that there was, his lordship said, It was plain what must be done in this case; for he looked upon the offer made by the complainant's bill bill in equity, to be the same thing as if the money had actually been brought into court in the present case.

But although the common law has been so silent upon the subject, as not to lay down any general rule; and although in all the cases stated, the premium was restored; yet if the fraud is notorious, palpable, and gross in its nature, the court may order, and has ordered the underwriter to retain the premium.

Thus where an action was brought by the insured to recover 150*l.* being the amount of the defendant's subscription; the ground of refusal was, that the insurance was fraudulent; and that the plaintiff knew of the loss of the ship, at the time of effecting the policy. The counsel for the plaintiff were under the necessity of admitting that their client had made some fraudulent insurances upon this very ship, subsequent to the one now in dispute; but contended, that news of the loss of the ship had not arrived, till after this particular one was effected. The evidence, however, was so strong as easily to convince the jury, that the plaintiff had received information of the loss before the order for making the insurance was given to the broker; and they found a verdict for the defendant.

Lord Mansfield said, The fraud was so gross, that the premium should not be recovered from the underwriter.

It is proper, however, to observe, that it has been laid down as clear law, that if the underwriter has been guilty of fraud, an action lies against him, at the suit of the insured, to recover the premium. Thus it was said by Lord Mansfield, in the case of Carter v. Boehm, which has already been quoted at large in this chapter:

"The policy would be void against the under-"writer, if he concealed any thing; as, if he "insured a ship on her voyage, which he pri"vately

“vately knew to be arrived; and an action would lie to recover the premium.”

By several of the foreign ordinances, the punishment of fraud, in matters of insurance, is exceedingly severe. By those of Amsterdam it is declared, “that as contracts of insurance are contracts of good faith, wherein no fraud or deceit ought to take place, in case it be found, that the insured or insurers, captains, shippers, pilots, or others use fraud, deceit, or craft, they shall not only forfeit by their deceit and craft, but shall also be liable to the loss and damage occasioned thereby, and be corporally punished for a terror and example to others; even with death, as pirates and manifest thieves, if it be found that they have used notorious malversation or craft.” The ordinances of Middleburg contain a provision exactly in the same words. At Stockholm also, it has been declared, that such an offender, besides restitution to the party injured, shall, according to the circumstances of every particular affair, be punished in his estate, honour, and life.

Ord. of Amsterdam. art. 56. 2 Mag. 146.

Art. 30. 2 Mag. 76. 2 Mag. 288.

Frauds in contracts of insurance have not as yet had any punishment affixed to them by the laws of England, that I have been able to learn: but there are one or two cases which have been declared to be felonies by positive statutes, where the act committed has been to the prejudice of the underwriters.

1 Ann. st. 2. c. 9. s. 4.

4 Geo. 1. c. 12. s. 3.

By a statute in the reign of queen Anne, it was enacted, that if any captain, master, mariner, or other officer, belonging to any ship, shall wilfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship, unto which he belongeth, or procure the same to be done, to the prejudice of the owner or owners thereof, or of any merchant or merchants that shall load goods thereon, (or by a subsequent statute, to the prejudice of any person or persons that shall underwrite any policy or policies policies of insurance thereon) shall suffer death as a felon.

These are the only provisions, which the legislature of this country has, as yet, thought proper to make for the prevention of crimes of this enormity: but as the records of our courts of justice evidently prove that frauds are too frequent in policies of insurance, greater severity than merely annulling the contract seems necessary, in order to put a stop to such offences.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH,

Of Sea-Worthiness.

HA V I N G in the preceding chapter treated very fully of the influence which fraud has upon the contract of insurance; we proceed to shew, that other circumstances, in which no fraud whatever can be discovered, or even suspected, will also vitiate and annul the policy. Of this nature is the doctrine of Sea-Worthiness. Upon this point it has been determined, that every ship insured must, at the time of the insurance, be able to perform the voyage, unless some external accident should happen; and if she have a latent defect wholly unknown to the parties, that will vacate the contract; and the insurers are discharged. This doctrine is founded upon that general principle of insurance law, that the insurers shall not be responsible for any loss arising from the insufficient or defective quality or condition of the thing insured.

There is in the contract of insurance a tacit and implied agreement that every thing shall be in that state and condition, in which it ought to be ;

be : and therefore it is not sufficient for the insured to say, that he did not know that the ship was not sea-worthy ; for he ought to know that she was so, at the time he made the insurance. The ship is the substratum of the contract between the parties ; a ship not capable of performing the voyage is the same, as if there were no ship at all ; and although the defect may not be known to the person insured, yet the very foundation of the contract being gone, the law is clearly in favour of the underwriter : because such a defect is not the consequence of any external misfortune, or any unavoidable accident, arising from the perils of the sea, or any other risk, against which the underwriter engages to indemnify the person insured. To support a contrary doctrine would introduce a variety of frauds, as it would probably subject the underwriter to account for the loss, diminution, or waste, which may happen from the necessary and ordinary use of the thing insured ; or the wear and tear of the ship in the common course of the voyage : and all of these are risks, to which the insurer has never been considered as exposed. From what has been said it appears, that the ground of decision in this case is perfectly distinct from any principle of fraud : that it depends merely upon this, that the insured is presumed to be better acquainted with the state and condition of his ship than any other man ; and that he has tacitly undertaken, that she is in a condition to perform the destined voyage. But although the insured ought to know whether his ship was sea-worthy or not at the time she set out upon her voyage ; yet he may not be able to know the condition she may be in, after she is out a twelvemonth : and therefore whenever it can be made appear, that the decay, to which the loss is attributable, did not commence till a period subsequent to the insurance, as she was sea-worthy at the time, the underwriter, it is presumed, would be liable. Indeed,

5 Burr. 2804.

in

in a very late case upon another point, but where the same principle was much relied upon, Lord Mansfield said; “By an implied warranty every ship insured must be tight, staunch, and strong; but it is sufficient if she be so, at the time of her sailing. She may cease to be so in twenty-four hours after her departure, and yet the underwriter will continue liable.” Every case of this kind, it is true, must depend upon its own circumstances, but when they are once ascertained, the rule of law is clear and decisive. The only material case upon this subject in the law of England is that of the Mills frigate, which underwent a variety of discussion in several courts, and was finally determined in favour of the insurers. I have used my utmost endeavours to procure a copy of the opinions of the judges upon that case; but they have been ineffectual: therefore the reader must be satisfied with a full statement of the circumstances, as they appeared upon the demurrer to the evidence, and with the judgment given upon that demurrer, as it is recorded.

Before the proceedings in this case are stated, it will be necessary to mention, that an action had been brought in the court of Common Pleas on the same policy against one of the underwriters; and Lord Camden, who tried that cause, directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff: but upon a motion for a new trial, his Lordship declared, that he had changed his opinion; and the whole court of Common Pleas laid down the principles above stated, and directed a new trial. Upon the second trial, Lord Camden stated to the jury the opinion he had formed upon the subject, and a verdict was accordingly given for the defendant, which, upon a subsequent application, the court of Common Pleas refused to set aside. The plaintiffs then commenced a new action in the court of Exchequer against another of the under-

Eden. v.
Parkinson.
Doug. 708.

underwriters, and which is now the subject of our attention.

Mills and Another v.
Roebuck.
In the Exch.

This was an action on a policy of insurance, lost or not lost, at and from the Leeward Islands to London, warranted to sail on or before the 26th of July, upon any kind of goods, wares, and merchandizes; and also upon the body, tackle, &c. of and in the good ship or vessel called the Mills Frigate, beginning the adventure on the goods from the loading thereof on board the said ship at St. Kitt's, and upon the ship from her arrival at the Leeward Islands. The defendant undertakes to indemnify against the usual risks, for a premium of 2 l. 10 s. per cent. The loss was described in the first count of the declaration in these words: "That the said ship, after her departure from Nevis on her voyage, and during her said voyage, sailing and proceeding on the high seas by and through the force of winds and tempestuous weather, and by and through the mere perils and dangers of the seas, sprung divers leaks, and became very leaky, crippled, bulged, disjointed, split, and wholly lost." In the second count the loss is alledged thus: "by and through the mere perils and dangers of the seas, and by the starting and loosening of one or more plank or planks of the said ship, and by accidentally springing one or more leak or leaks, the said ship became very leaky, crippled, &c. and totally unable to proceed on, or perform the said voyage." There were two other counts in the declaration upon a policy on freight, to recover from the underwriter the amount of his insurance upon that also; and a fifth count for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. The defendant pleaded the general issue; with a notice of set off, having paid the premiums into court.

This cause came on to be tried before Lord Chief Baron Parker; and the defendant demurred to the evidence produced on the part of the plaintiff, tiff. The demurrer follows in these words : Thereupon the said John and Thomas Mills (the plaintiffs) shew in evidence to the jury to prove and maintain the issue within mentioned on their part to wit, that the defendant underwrote the policy of insurance, and that the plaintiffs were interested to the amount as in the declaration is mentioned : That the ship in question was a French built ship, and known to be so to the defendant at the time he underwrote the said policy : That the timbers of French ships are usually fastened with iron bolts or spikes, which are liable to grow rusty ; and when the same are grown rusty, the timbers of such ships frequently become loose at once, and the ships are rendered incapable of bearing the sea, without any perceptible symptoms of decay : That the ship in question was purchased by the plaintiffs in the year 1757 : that since that time she has been generally employed by the plaintiffs, who are West India merchants, in that trade ; and large sums have constantly been insured on her, and her cargoes : That in February, 1764, being bound to the Leeward Islands, and back again to London, she failed on her voyage : That before she failed from London on that voyage, the plaintiffs ordered the captain to have every thing done to the ship, which he should think proper to repair her : That in pursuance of such orders, the ship was put into dock and repaired, where the ship carpenter did all such repairs to her as he was ordered, the expence of which amounted in the whole to about 100*l.* of which about 30*l.* was for the sheathing and other repairs of her hull, and the residue in her upper works : that nothing more appeared to the ship carpenter, or the captain, to be wanting to make her fit and complete for the said voyage ; but her iron bolts and spikes were not then examined, which could not be done without taking off her sheathing ; an act never done where (as the case is here) the ship ship had been sheathed a little time before: that George Hayley Esq; the first underwriter on this policy, and many other persons by whom policies of insurance are generally underwritten, keep a register, in which all ships usually insured by them, are entered with an account of the age, construction, and visible goodness of the vessels, and to whom they belong, and also employ a surveyor, whose business it is to survey such ships: that the ship in question, at the time of underwriting the policy, and long before, had been entered in such register; and previous to her last outward bound voyage, had been surveyed by one Thomas Whitewood, who was then employed by the said George Hayley, and other underwriters, as such surveyor; and as far as appeared to the said Thomas Whitewood, was in good condition, and perfectly fit to undertake a voyage to and from the Leeward Islands; but the surveyor did not, neither could he examine the bolts and spikes for the reasons aforesaid; but did survey as far as is ever practised in such cases: that the said George Hayley had often before underwrote policies on the said ship and her cargoes; and the witness, who was the insurance broker, said he believed Mr. Hayley knew as much of the condition of the ship as the plaintiffs did, and particularly on the outward bound voyage to the Leeward Islands, he underwrote 400 l. on this ship: that in such last outward bound voyage, the ship met with a great deal of bad weather; was very leaky, and could not get into Madeira, where she was ordered to touch; but was obliged to bear away for the island of Nevis: that she arrived at the island of Nevis on the first of April 1764, and from thence went to the island of Saint Christopher, where she delivered her outward bound cargo, and had such repairs done to her, as were then thought necessary, and to all appearance put into a proper condition for her voyage home; but her bolts and spikes were not, nor could be examined examined there : that about the end of the said month of April, the ship sailed from St. Kitt's to Nevis, where the captain had been promised a loading for her home : that on her arrival at Nevis, the planters, knowing she had been leaky in her outward bound voyage, were not willing to put sugars on board her ; and that in order to satisfy the planters there, that she was in a proper condition to carry a cargo of sugars to London, they proposed to the captain, as a measure which would be fully satisfactory to them, that he should submit the ship to be surveyed by all the captains then in the harbour, being six in number ; and told him, that if they should report her to be fit for a voyage to London, they would then load her with sugars : that the captain did submit to such survey, though it would have been for the interest of the said captains to report the ship unfit for the voyage ; as by that means they would have had an opportunity of gaining more freight and sooner : that on the 8th day of May 1764, the said captains after having surveyed her carefully, but without examining her bolts and spikes, which could not be done, there signed the following report. “ Nevis, May 8th, 1764. At “ the request of captain George Finch, of the ship “ Mills Frigate, we the subscribers did repair on “ board the said ship, and after due examination, “ it did appear to us, that the occasion of the “ ship's making more water than usual on her “ voyage from London to this place, was occasioned by some neglect in caulking the said “ ship, which may very easily be made tight, the “ said ship otherwise appearing to us to be strong “ and sound ; and when caulked, we are of opinion, “ will be fully sufficient to carry a cargo of “ sugars to London, John Shepherd, &c.” That afterwards the ship was caulked according to the said report, and that thereupon the planters sent their sugars on board, and the ship was soon loaded with about three hundred and seventy hogheads

hogheads of sugar: that during the time of her loading, and until and at the time of her sailing, which was about two months, the ship continued tight; appeared to be in good condition, and made no more water than the best ships usually do, and are expected to do: that the ship sailed from Nevis on the 26th day of July, 1764, about eight o'clock in the evening, and the next day about four o'clock in the afternoon, without any bad weather or extraordinary swell of the sea, she sprang a leak, and the captain was obliged to bear away for St. Christophers, where he arrived on the 28th of July: that on his arrival there, he got the ship unloaded to see what was the matter with her, when it appeared that she had started a plank: that he thereupon applied to the judge of the Court of Vice Admiralty for a warrant to survey the ship; and a warrant was granted to four captains, and two ship carpenters, or any three of them; four of whom did, according to such warrant, survey the said ship, and did report, that she was unfit to proceed on her voyage without being thoroughly repaired; and that the expence of so repairing her there, would amount to more than the value of the ship and freight; and she was therefore condemned by the said court as unfit for the said voyage: that some of the iron bolts and spikes, with which the timbers of the ship in question, like other French built ships, were fastned, were broken in the plank that was so started, which the captain, and the said surveyors felt, by passing up their hands between the plank and the ship; and which appeared upon farther opening the ends of the plank; and that the said plank was started from one end to the other: that it was owing to the said bolts and spikes being grown rusty and decayed, as then appeared to the captain and surveyors, that such plank started: that he believed the surveyors, who condemned her, thought the same; wherefore, and supposing the other bolts and spikes in the the ship were also grown rusty and decayed, though that could not be known for certain, without ripping off her planks, and making a more strict examination, the surveyors made their said report of condemnation: that the said plank was not taken off, nor could it be, without sinking the ship, but continues at St. Christopher's as a hulk: that on the aforesaid account, it was then concluded, and is now believed by the captain, that the said ship was not fit for the insured voyage home, at the time she so sailed from Nevis for London, though to all outward appearance, she was a very good ship; and as he then believed, proper for the voyage; and such a ship as he, from her outward appearance, should have had no objection to sail in again; but had he known the decayed condition of her said bolts and spikes before he set sail on his homeward bound voyage, he would not have ventured his life in her: that there is no dock, nor scarce any materials for repairing ships at St. Christopher's, nor could she sail to any other place to be repaired; and that if this misfortune had happened in North America, or England, where there are proper docks and materials, she might have been repaired for three or four hundred pounds: that while the said ship was first at St. Christopher's, before she had taken in her cargo, namely, on the 23d of April, 1764, the captain wrote the following letter to the plaintiffs.

“Gentlemen, St. Christopher's, April 23, 1764.

“I take the first opportunity of acquainting
 “you, that I arrived at Nevis after a most dismal “passage on the first instant. On the sixth “of March, at day break, I made the islands “Deserts, distant about four leagues, run down
 “for Madeira, with a fresh gale at E. S. E. till “four in the afternoon, when being within a mile “off the shore, and judging about five or six “miles off Foncball Road, a very hard and dark “squall took us suddenly with such violence, that I

S

“was

“ was obliged to clear off the land under the courses.
 “ It was excessively hazy the whole evening after,
 “ that one could hardly see the ship’s length; so “ that it would have been the greatest impru“ dence to have run the risk of overshooting our “ port, or running ashore. The gale increased,
 “ and in the night, came round to the N. E. and “ the ship strained so much by the pressure of sail
 “ we were obliged to, carry on her in that great sea, “ that it was with the utmost difficulty we could “ keep her free. On the eighth, at nine in the “ morning, reckoning myself nineteen leagues to “ leeward of Madreia, our ship so loosened, that “ we could not carry sail upon a wind; and fee“ ing no probability of the wind shifting or abat“ ing enough to give us a chance of beating up, “ bore away for Nevis, judging it better for the “ preservation of the whole than to run any ha“ zard in endeavouring for the Canaries in our “ weak, leaky and distressed condition. I have “ consulted with Mr. Cottle, the counsellor here, “ who advises me to sell the flour and lime at “ publick vendue, and to carry the iron hoops,
 “ &c. back to England. As the ship’s complaint “ has been chiefly in her upper work, I am obliged “ to have her new nailed from the wale upwards;
 “ and hope you will find, that what repairs are “ necessary to be made here, are conducted with “ all the frugality circumstances will admit of.”

That the plaintiffs received this letter in Lon- don on the 13th day of June, 1764, and a day or two afterwards, gave it to Matthew Towgood, an insurance broker, to get 1000*l.* insured on the freight home for the use of the owners, and 250*l.*
 on their fourth part of the said ship: that the said Towgood first shewed the policy in question, and the letter to the said George Hayley, on the 19th of June, 1764, who, after reading over the letter, asked him what interest he had to insure; to which the broker answered, ship, freight and cargo; and that he might write which he pleased:

that

that thereupon the said George Hayley said he would underwrite the ship, saying she would come home safe enough, notwithstanding the damage which the said letter imported she had received, as it was a summer voyage; but that she would very likely damage her cargo: that the said George Hayley was going to underwrite the said policy for 300*l.* on the said ship, and had wrote the figure 3; but on the said Matthew Towgood's telling him, he was a bold man to write three hundred pounds after reading the said letter, the said George Hayley, struck out the figure 3, and converted it into a 2, and accordingly underwrote the said policy for the sum of two hundred pounds on the said ship: that the said Matthew Towgood shewed the said letter to the said defendant Roebuck, and all the other underwriters on the said policy, before they underwrote the same; and the said defendant says, that the evidence aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, shewn by the plaintiffs to the jury, is not sufficient in law to maintain the issue within joined on the part of the said plaintiffs; and that he the defendant to the evidence aforesaid hath no necessity, nor by the law of the land is obliged to answer. Wherefore he prays judgment, and that the jury may be discharged from giving any verdict upon the issue.

The plaintiffs join in demurrer.

Upon this demurrer, judgment was given in the Court of Exchequer for the underwriter. A writ of error was then brought in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, which was referred to Lord Mansfield, and lord Chief Justice Wilmot, who, after argument, also reported their opinions to be in favour of the defendants; agreeable to which report, judgment was accordingly pronounced. This is the only account, which can now be given of this case, as the report upon these occasions is generally made in private, and the reasons, upon which it is founded, are not publickly given. But from the above very accurate statement which has been procured from the record, it will appear, that the decision did not turn upon any fraud or concealment of circumstances; but on the contrary, every thing was done in the most fair and honourable manner, and the underwriter was fully informed of every event, with which the insured was himself acquainted. The case was decided entirely upon the principle of sea-worthiness: that however innocent or unfortunate the insured might be, yet if the ship was not sea-worthy, at the time of insuring, there was no contract at all between the parties; because the very foundation of the contract, the ship, was in the same condition, as if it did not exist. That the conclusion thus drawn from the judgment given in the Exchequer Chamber, is not larger or more extensive than the decision will warrant, is evident from what was said by Lord Mansfield, when upon a subsequent occasion, the case of the Mills Frigate was relied upon in argument at the bar.

5 Burr. 2802.

In the case of the Earl of March v. Pigot, which came before the court of King's Bench in the year 1771, the case of the Mills Frigate having been mentioned, Lord Mansfield said, The insured ought to know whether his ship was sea-worthy or not, at the time she set out upon her voyage: but how should he know the condition she was in after she had been out a twelvemonth? It is true, the proposition laid down by the counsel in that case is merely, "that the case of the "Mills Frigate was an insurance upon a ship, "*which had a latent defect totally unknown to "*the parties: and the insurers were holden not "*liable on account of the ship's not being sea- "*worthy, though such defect was not known." Lord Mansfield is then reported to have said, "I "differ totally in opinion from that doctrine;" and yet his Lordship is made to conclude with the sentence above stated, which is in effect the same with that which the reporter has put into the mouth of the counsel; and which in truth contains the whole doctrine of sea-worthiness, when the exception put by Lord Mansfield is added, namely, that the insured shall not answer for the sufficiency of the ship, after she has been out a considerable time. The probability is, that the counsel laid down the proposition in more extensive terms than the reporter states it, namely, that if the ship was not sea-worthy at any time during the voyage, the insurers would be discharged. By admitting this presumption, the whole will be easily reconciled; for then Lord Mansfield's denial of such extensive doctrine is supported and illustrated by the distinction, which he afterwards takes in the conclusion of the sentence.
the

It is singular, that the decision, which has occupied the whole of this chapter, should have occasioned so much discussion at the time it was determined, as that pamphlets were written upon both sides of the question; especially when it is considered, that the doctrine there established is by no means novel in itself, and is entirely consonant to the laws of all the maritime and commercial nations in Europe.

In the ordinances of Lewis the fourteenth it is declared, that decay, waste or loss, which happens from the internal defect of the thing insured, shall not fall upon the underwriter. A commentator upon these ordinances has gone into the reason and principle of such a regulation, and has shewn the propriety of it. He sets out by observing that this doctrine is of a date as ancient as the period when the French treatise called Le Guidon was published, which was about the year 1661, at which time, as appears by a reference to the book itself, it was considered as a settled principle, that losses, happening from causes of this nature, were not to be a charge upon the underwriter. The same author has also shewn, that such a provision is adopted in favour of the insurers by the ordinances of Rotterdam and Amsterdam. After stating these

Ord of Lew.
14th, tit. in-
sur. art. 12.

2 Val. 80.

C. 5. art. 8.

2 Mag. 90.

2 Val. 81.

1 Val. 654.

circumstances, he proceeds to say, that when a ship is deemed incapable of finishing her voyage, the question whether this event is a charge upon the underwriters or not, depends upon another; namely, whether it happened by the violence of the sea, or other fortuitous circumstance, or whether the disability proceeds from age and rottenness. This will be determined by the enquiry which was made before the departure of the ship, in order to judge, whether it was in a condition to perform the voyage or not: if the latter was the case, the insurers ought not to answer. In another part of his work after laying down the same doctrine, he declares, that the indemnity will be void, even though the ship has been examined before her departure, and declared capable of performing the voyage; since the event has shewn clearly, that on account of latent defects it was no longer navigable; that is, if it were proved that parts of the ship were so rotten, weakened, and destroyed, that she was not in a proper state to resist the ordinary attacks of wind and sea, inevitable in every voyage, then the underwriters are discharged. The reason is, that the examination of the ship before her departure extends only to the external parts, because she is not unripped; at least not so as to discover the interior and latent defects, for which the owner or master of the ship continues always responsible, and that with the greater justice, because they cannot be wholly ignorant of the bad state of the ship: but supposing them to be so, it is the same thing, being indispensably bound to provide a good ship; able to perform the voyage.

Pothier Tr.
d'Assurance,
n. 66.
1 Emerigon.
p. 58c.

The opinion of this learned foreigner is supported by two of his countrymen, Pothier and Emerigon.

Having thus shewn that the doctrine of seaworthiness, as established by the decisions of our courts of justice, is confirmed by the declarations of foreign laws, and by the opinions of foreign foreign writers ; it is sufficient now to say, that where the ship is not sea-worthy, the policy of insurance is void, as well where the insurance is upon the goods to be conveyed in the ship, as when it is upon the ship itself. For when- 2 Val. 164.

ever a case arises with respect to damage done to goods through the insufficiency of the ship, the question, whether the master or owner is liable to make good the loss, depends upon ascertaining, whether the ship was in a condition to perform the voyage at the time of her departure, or became defective from bad weather, and the perils of the wind and sea.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

Of Illegal Voyages.

WE proceed now to the consideration of another circumstance by which the contract of insurance is vacated and annulled ab initio : and it is this ; that whenever an insurance is made on a voyage expressly prohibited by the common, statute, or maritime law of the country, the policy is of no effect. The principle, upon which such a regulation is founded, is not peculiar to this kind of contract ; for it is nothing more than that which destroys all contracts whatsoever : that men can never be presumed to make an agreement forbidden by the laws ; and if they should attempt such a thing, it is invalid, and will not receive the assistance of a court of justice to carry it into execution.

The most material case upon this point is that of Johnston and Sutton, which came on to be argued in the year 1779, and received the solemn opinion of the Court of King's Bench.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on goods, on board the ship Venus, "lost or not lost, at and from London to New York, warranted to depart Johnston v. Sutton.
Doug. 241.

depart with convoy from the channel for the voyage." The cause was tried before Lord Mansfield at Guildhall, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff. The defendant obtained a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial. The facts, upon his Lordship's report, appeared to be these: the ship was cleared for Halifax and New York. She had provisions on board, which she had a licence to carry to New York, under a proviso in the prohibitory act of 16 Geo. 3. c. 5. But one half of the cargo, including the goods, which were the subject of this insurance, was not licensed, and was not calculated for the Halifax market, but for New York. There had been a proclamation by Sir William Howe to allow the entry of unlicensed goods at New York; and though there were bonds usually given at the Custom House here, by which the captain engaged to carry the goods to Halifax, those bonds were afterwards cancelled, on producing a certificate from an officer appointed for that purpose at New York, declaring, that they were landed there. The commander in chief had no authority under the act of parliament to issue such proclamation, or to permit the exportation of unlicensed goods. The Venus was taken in her passage to New York by an American privateer. The first section of the statute prohibits all commerce with the province of New York (amongst others) and confiscates all ships and their cargoes, which shall be found trading, or going to, or coming from trading with them. In section the second, there is a proviso, excepting ships laden with provisions for the use of his majesty's garrisons or fleets, or for the inhabitants of any town possessed by his majesty's troops, provided the master shall produce a licence specifying the voyage, &c. and the quantity and species of provisions; but by the same proviso, it is declared, that goods not licensed, found on board such ships, shall be forfeited. After argument, upon the motion for a new trial,

Lord

16 Geo. 3.
c. 5.

Lord Mansfield said.—The whole of the plaintiff's case goes on an established practice, directly against an act of parliament. If the defendant did not know that the goods were unlicensed, the objection is fair as between the parties. If he did, he would not deserve to be favoured. But, however that may be, it was illegal to send the goods to New York, and, in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis. It is impossible to bring this within the cases cited (a), because here there was a direct contravention of the law of the land. The rule for a new trial was made absolute.

From this case much information is to be collected; for, 1st. the principle advanced at the beginning of the chapter is established, that is, that an insurance of a voyage, which is prohibited by statute, is void. This case also serves to remove a distinction, which occurs in a very respectable writer. The learned Roccus observes, that if such an insurance, as that of which we have been speaking, should be made, ignorante assureatore, the insurer is discharged: from whence we are to infer, that in his opinion, if the insurer was acquainted with the nature of the voyage, he would continue liable. But the doctrine of the court of King's Bench overturns such a distinction, because the very contract is a nullity, and a court of justice can never lend its authority to substantiate a claim, founded upon a contract which is absolutely repugnant to the known and established laws of the land. Of this opinion is Bynkershoek, who says, that even if it be told to the underwriter, that the voyage is illicit, he shall not be bound; because the contract is null and void, and where that is the case, the compliance with

*Roccus de Asscurat.
n. 121.*

*Bynk. Quest.
Jur. Pub.
l. 1. c. 21.
sub fine.*

(a) These were cases of insurances on ships trading contrary to the revenue laws of foreign countries, of which more will be said hereafter.

the terms of it depends upon the will of the contracting parties merely. But that which depends merely upon will is not a proper subject for a suit at law.

1 Black.
Com. 270.

Vide ante
p. 88, 89.

Delmada v.
Morreux.
B. R. Mich.
25 Geo. 3.

If a ship, though neutral, be insured on a voyage prohibited by an embargo, laid on in time of war, by the prince of the country, in whose ports the ship happens to be, such an insurance also is void. This depends upon the power of an embargo, the right of laying on which by the sovereign of this country in time of war is undoubted; although in time of peace it may be a different question. The right being admitted, it follows of course, that any act done in contravention of a proclamation of this nature, is illegal and criminal; because it is equally binding as an act of parliament, and a contract founded on such illicit proceedings is consequently void.

This was determined in a very modern case, upon a special verdict. It was an action on a policy of insurance on the Bolla Juditta, a Venetian ship, at and from London to the Grenades, with liberty to touch at Cork and Madeira to load. The defendant pleaded the general issue; and the cause came on to trial before Mr. Justice Buller, when the jury found a special verdict, the material facts in which were these. That the ship was a Venetian vessel, and the plaintiff a subject of the state of Venice; that in October 1782, the ship sailed on her voyage from London to Cork, and there took in a loading of provisions, the property of French subjects, the enemies of the king of Great Britain. That the said ship, having taken in at Cork clearances and bills of lading for Madeira, an island belonging to the king of Portugal, sailed in December, 1782, from Cork to that island, at which she was neither to unload any part of her cargo, nor to receive any goods on board, but where she took clearances and bills of lading for the island of St. Thomas, belonging

belonging to Denmark, whither she was not destined: that on her voyage from Madeira to Grenada, within 14 leagues of the latter, she was captured by an English man of war as prize, and carried to St. Lucia: that when the ship sailed from London, and from thence till after the capture, Grenada was in the possession of the French king. The special verdict further finds, that his Majesty on the 18th day of August 1780, laid an embargo upon all ships and vessels laden or to be laden in the ports of the kingdom of Ireland with black cattle and hogs, beef, pork, butter and cheese, or any sort of provisions. It is also found, that after the capture, a suit was commenced in the Vice Admiralty Court at Barbadoes, against the said ship and cargo, as belonging to the French king, or to some of his subjects; and the judge of that court did condemn the cargo as the property of the enemies of the king of Great Britain, which sentence was appealed from, and is now depending: that the judge of the said Court of Vice Admiralty was of opinion, that the said ship Bella Juditta was the property of Abram Delmada the plaintiff, and ordered that the ship should be restored; but he did not conceive the owner of the said ship to be entitled to any freight, or damages occasioned by the capture; because she was engaged in a wrong act, and the captor did no more than his duty: that the said ship was accordingly restored.

Upon this verdict, the question for the court to decide in point of law, was, whether the insurers upon the ship on this voyage were liable to pay for this loss of freight, and the damages occasioned by the capture.

Lord Mansfield.—Is this voyage not a breach of the embargo? The king in time of war has an undoubted right to lay an embargo: in time of peace it is another question. Every power lays them on. If the ship had only been carrying goods of an enemy on a voyage lawful for her to perform, perform; she might have been entitled to freight. But here the sentence says, she shall not. And why? because she has done a wrong thing. It is a fraud; for under colour of a neutral port, she goes to an enemy's port. She breaks an embargo. What the consequence of that is, has not as yet been settled: but to break an embargo is undoubtedly a criminal act; and wherever a man makes an illegal contract, this court will not lend him their aid. The defendant accordingly had judgment.

Though an insurance upon a smuggling voyage, prohibited by the revenue laws of this country, would be void under the principle above stated; yet the rule has never been supposed to extend to those cases, where ships have traded, or intend to trade, contrary to the revenue laws of foreign countries: in such cases the policy is good and valid; and if a loss happen, the underwriter will be answerable.

Vile ante

c. 10. p. 217.

Thus in the case of Planché against Fletcher, which was stated at large in a preceding chapter, one of the objections taken to the insurance was, that there was a fraud on the underwriters, the ship having been cleared out for Ostend, although she was never designed to go to that place. But Lord Mansfield declared for himself and his brethren, that it was no fraud on the underwriters, perhaps on nobody. The reason for clearing for Ostend, and signing bills of lading, as from thence did not fully appear: but it was guessed at. The Fermiers Generaux have the management of the taxes in France. As we have laid a large duty on French goods, the French may have done the same on ours, and it may be the interest of the farmers to connive at the importation of English commodities, and take Ostend duties, rather than stop the trade, by exacting a tax, which amounts to a prohibition. But, at any rate, this was no fraud in this country. One nation does not take notice of the revenue laws of another.

In

In another case, a short time afterwards at Guildball, Lord Mansfield, in his charge to the jury, advanced the same doctrine, which had been established by the whole court in the preceding case.

It was an action on a policy of insurance, at and from London to Pensacola and Manshae in the river Mississippi, with liberty to touch at Portsmouth and Jamaica. The ship insured, was employed in the usual trade in the river Mississippi, and traded at Little Manshae, on the island of New Orleans, part of the dominion of Spain. Manshae, the place mentioned in the policy, is part of the continent of North America, on that side of the river, which France and Spain, by the treaty of Paris in 1763, surrendered to Great Britain, and is about 37 leagues higher up the river than New Orleans. The loss happened by a seizure of the ship at Little Manshae, by the Spanish governor, as a reprisal for transgressions alledged to have been committed by a king's ship in the Lakes. The counsel for the defendant contended, that the policy in question was not on a trading voyage, and that the trade itself was an illicit one.

Lord Mansfield.—The first question is, whether this policy covers the trading on the Mississippi before the ship's arrival at Manshae. The trading at Little Manshae is a delay of the voyage, and an increase of the risk. If the policy do not cover this part of the trading, then it is a deviation, and there is an end of the contract, at least, so as to prevent the plaintiff from recovering. It is very clear what the trade is. Every trading with the subjects of Spain is illicit by the treaty of Paris. The navigation is free to both countries; and the municipal laws of both countries remain. Though such trading be contrary to the laws of Spain; yet no country pays attention to the revenue laws of another. Therefore, if the defendant had, with full knowledge, that it was a smuggling trade with Spain, made the insurance, then it might

Lever v.
Fletcher.
Lond. Sitt.
Hil. Vac.
1780.

might be a fair contract between the parties. But the main question for consideration seems to be, whether this trading at Little Manboe was insured by the policy. The jury found for the defendant: and it may be presumed on the ground of deviation.

Guid. c. 2.
f. 2, 3.
2 Val. 31.

It cannot be improper, because it is nearly connected with the subject before us, to enter upon the enquiry, how far trading with an enemy, in time of actual war, is legal? The opinion of foreign writers upon this point, although the judicial sentiments of this country do not seem to coincide with them, cannot fail to afford information upon the question. It has long been settled in France, that all trading with enemies is illegal. This indeed is given as the reason for requiring to be inserted in the policy of insurance, the name and place of abode of the insured, the effects upon which the insurance is made, the name of the ship, and the place of loading and unloading. By complying with such a requisition, it is known in time of war, whether, notwithstanding the prohibition of commerce, which, according to these writers, a declaration of war always imports, the subjects of the king continue to trade with the enemies of the state, or with their friends and allies: by which means they would be able to convey warlike stores, provisions, and other prohibited goods to the enemy. But every thing of this kind, being forbidden, as prejudicial to the state, would be liable to confiscation, and to be condemned as prize, whether found in ships of our country, or of friends and allies. The prohibition to insure the property of an enemy, which is almost generally established by the ordinances of foreign countries, proceeds upon the principle, that it is unlawful to trade with an enemy; because if commerce were allowed to be carried on between the hostile nations, there could not possibly be an objection to protect that commerce by means of the contract of insurance.

Ord. of Stockholm,
&c. 2 Mag.
257.

The

The general law of England has not, that I have been able to find, laid down any express rule upon the subject; and therefore we must merely take notice of what has passed in the courts of justice, although the question does by no means seem to be determined: an observation which fell from Lord Mansfield, as late as the year 1786. The only cases to be found in the books upon the subject are two; the one is in Roll's Abridg- 2 Roll. Abr. ment, and happened in the 13th year of the reign 173. of Edward the Second. A licence, granted to certain merchants to buy and sell in Scotland, which was then at war with the king of England, was declared to be void; and consequently the trading held to be illegal. The other was a case put to the judges, in the time of Lord Somers, Term Rep. Hil. 1786. for their opinion, upon the point, whether send- P. 85. ing corn to the enemy, in time of war and famine, was a crime at the common law. The judges held it was a misdemeanor. It is to be observed, however, that the last was a case where provisions were supplied, which, as well as warlike stores, must be prohibited from the nature of the thing.

The first modern case, in which trading with an enemy came at all under consideration; although it did not then meet with any decision, was that of Henkle against the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, before Lord Hardwicke in the court of Chancery, which upon a former occasion was cited much at length. His Lordship there said; it might be going too far to say that all trading with enemies is unlawful: for that general doctrine would go a great way, even where only English goods are exported, and none of the enemy's imported, which might be very beneficial. He was not satisfied with the answer given to the objection of an illicit trade, by citing the case of the South Sea Company: for that by no means determined the question. That was not a trading contrary to the law of this country; but but contrary to the agreement of the company : which is different from a contract repugnant to the general law of the country, whether statute, common, or maritime law. The same answer might be given to Sir Robert Nightingale's case, which was merely a plea in the Exchequer, upon the private right of the company, being contrary only to their statutes, and not to the general law of the land.

1 Vezey 317.
Vide ante p. 2.

Gift v. Mason. Term
Rep. 84.

From this opinion, it is evident that the question was by no means settled in Lord Hardwicke's mind : but in a subsequent case, Lord Mansfield adds an argument, which, though not conclusive, most assuredly goes a great way to shew that trading with an enemy is not forbidden by the general law of the country ; for he says, that several acts of parliament have been specially passed, in order to make such trading illegal, which proves that the legislature did not think it was so before. The ship, in the last of these cases to be sure, appeared to be neutral ; and the court laid it down, that it had no where been held, that an insurance upon a neutral ship trading to an enemy's port was void. But then Lord Mansfield went upon the doctrine of a subject's trading with enemies, and concluded thus : By the maritime law, trading with an enemy is cause of confiscation, provided you take him in the act ; but this does not extend to neutral vessels. Thus the question stands at present in the law of England ; and there I shall leave it, till some judicial or legislative opinion upon the point : for when such men, as Lord Mansfield, Lord Hardwicke, and the other learned judges of the court of King's Bench, have doubted upon the subject, who shall venture to hazard an opinion ?

But whatever doubts may be entertained upon that question, the next which comes to be considered is liable to no doubt or ambiguity at all ; namely, whether it be lawful to insure the property of an enemy. For although foreign writers are of opinion, that it is not; and although it has been a considerable question, much agitated, how far the allowance of such contracts is expedient; yet most certainly the insurance of enemy's property does not contravene any law known at this day in England.

In the first chapter of this work, we had occasion to mention this question; and in addition to what was then offered, (for I do not mean to give an absolute opinion upon the expediency, though I may upon the legality of it) I shall only mention, that in those countries where commerce with an enemy is forbidden, it follows as a consequence, that the insurance of the property of an enemy, must also be prohibited; because to insure the effects of an enemy, or to send them directly or indirectly, is in truth the same thing.

Vide ante
p. 15.

2 Val. 32.

A very learned foreigner, to whose writings mankind are much indebted, argues strongly against the expediency of such a measure; and certainly his arguments have great weight. If, says he, you take upon yourselves the risks and perils, to which your enemies are exposed, what is it but to promote their maritime commerce? for insurances have been invented, that a great advantage at a small risk might be given to external trade. Hence the laws of all the countries, which prohibit such contracts, proceed upon the justest grounds, because, by a declaration of war, every one is ordered to annoy an enemy, as much as possible. If this be so, he is also forbidden to consult the advantage of the enemy by any means whatsoever. But if it be said, that by such insurances, the underwriter gains more than he loses, and consequently the advantage is greater on our side than that of the enemy, it may be answered, that that is an assertion of a very doubtful nature, and of which experience itself hardly enables us to form an opinion; whilst on the other hand, it is certain, that we afford our enemies very great opportunities of encreasing their com-

Bynk. Quæst.
Jur. Pub.
l. 1. c. 21.

T

merce:

Le Guidon,
c. 2. art. 5.
D'Emerig.
c. 4. f. 9.

merce: which, as it is useful to our enemies, and may turn to our own destruction, ought to be wholly suppressed. In conformity to these principles, which have been adopted by most of the commercial states in Europe, every species of insurance upon the property of an enemy has been absolutely forbidden; and such has been the law of France, at least, ever since the year 1660: although I believe, during the war of 1756, insurances were made in France upon English property, by means of fictitious persons, as trustees for the person really interested in the property.

However cogent these arguments may appear, they certainly are not conclusive, nor are they congenial to that spirit of universal and extensive commerce, which so strongly marks the British character. Those, who argue in favour of such insurances, have contended, that it would be of very dangerous consequence, by a prohibition of the nature alluded to, to strip ourselves of a branch of trade, which we now enjoy almost without a rival; as more of this business is done in England than in all the rest of Europe. That not only the nations with whom we are at peace, but even the French and Spaniards, when at war, transact their business of insurance in London; and that it never can be imputed to our merchants as a crime to correspond with the enemy upon such a subject: that to carry on trade for the mutual benefit of both the hostile countries, is not assisting the enemy; nor is it such a correspondence as the declaration of war intends to prohibit, especially as the nature of the trade is such, as always to leave a large balance of ready money in our favour. That although this balance, when compared with the general national expences of carrying on a war, may appear to be but trifling; yet the greater those expences are, the more money we are obliged to send out on that account: and surely we ought to be cautious of parting with any branch of trade, which turns the balance to England.

England. Besides this, when the great profits made by the insurer are fully considered, the profits made by the broker or office-keeper, the profits of the factor, and the dealer in Exchange, the balance is by no means of so trifling a nature. It has been further urged, that the French are naturally of an enterprising and adventurous disposition, and will, as soon as they are prevented from insuring here, open publick offices, and multitudes of rich men will there undertake the business; because after we have banished them from our market, they will resort to offices of their own, rather than to those of any other foreign country. But that while no such prohibition takes place, no private insurer can in France meet with encouragement in this line; nor will it be in the power even of the government of France to erect an office for the purpose of insurance; because their merchants have met with such honourable, and fair treatment from the insurers here, and experience so much equity, justice and dispatch in our courts of law, that as long as they are permitted, they would rather pay commission for insuring here, than apply to the insurers of their own, or any other country. In addition to which, it is a notorious fact, that important intelligence has, by means of such insurances, been frequently obtained of the enemy's designs; and that in several wars, some of the richest prizes have fallen into our hands by information communicated by those employed to procure insurances upon them.

Such is the sum of the arguments on both sides of this important question; and although the reasons in favour of such insurances are those, which seem in general to have had most sway in this country; yet at one time, the contrary principles gained the ascendant. For in the year 1747, a bill was introduced into the House of Commons to prohibit insurances upon the ships and goods of the subjects of the king of France; Debates in the House of Commons, vol. 1. p. 117.

21 Geo. 2.
c. 4.

and although it was vigorously opposed by Sir Dudley Ryder, and the Honourable Mr. Murray, the then Attorney and Solicitor General, upon the principles already stated; yet it passed that house without a division, and was afterwards carried into a law. The duration of that act, however, being limited by the existence of the French war then carrying on, it expired in about a year after it was passed. No attempt has been made to introduce it in any subsequent war, which in some measure serves to shew, either that the inconveniencies of it were felt, during its short existence; or that the arguments advanced against such a bill have convinced the legislature of the impropriety of prohibiting so valuable a branch of trade.

1 Vezey 319.

Gist v. Mason.
Term Rep.
84. and MS. note of same
case.

From what has been said then it appears, that whether the measure be politick or not; such insurances are good and binding, not being forbidden by any law existing at this day. Before this point is concluded, it will be proper to mention, that Lord Hardwicke seems inclined to the opinion delivered in the House of Commons by Sir Dudley Ryder and Mr. Murray; for in the case already alluded to in this chapter, his lordship says: there has been no determination, that insurance on enemies ships during the war is unlawful; and there have been several insurances of this sort, during the war, which a determination upon the legality of trading with an enemy might hurt. In addition to this, it may be observed, that Lord Mansfield; in the course of his long experience as Chief Justice of this country, has never found reason to alter those sentiments which he entertained, when he spoke in the House Commons against the bill introduced in the year 1747. For his lordship has frequently since in parliament, and upon the bench, declared his approbation of these insurances: and so late as the year 1786, in the course of a judicial opinion, he said, "It is for the benefit of this country to permit these contracts upon two accounts: the one because " you

“ you hold the box, and are sure of getting the “ premiums at least, as a certain profit; the “ other, because it is a certain mode of obtain“ ing intelligence of the enemy’s designs, and I “ have known instances of intelligence procured
“ by such methods.” Notwithstanding this liberality of sentiment, however, which prevails in the English nation, there is one species of insurance, which cannot be made upon the ships or goods of an enemy, or even of a subject, and that is upon a voyage to a besieged fort or garrison, with a view of carrying assistance to them; or upon ammunition, other warlike stores, or provisions: because from the nature of these commodities, they are absolutely prohibited by the laws of all nations.

Having thus disposed of these two important questions, and shewn, that however impolitick the measure may be, general trading with an enemy for the mutual benefit of both countries seems by no means to have been declared to be contrary to law; and that insurances of enemy’s property certainly are not: it will be proper to conclude by stating what the principle is, which is laid down in this chapter, and supported by authority. All insurances upon a voyage generally prohibited, such as to an enemy’s garrison, or upon a voyage directly contrary to an express act of parliament, or to royal proclamation in time of war, are absolutely null and void.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH,

Of Prohibited Goods.

Lord Kaims's
Prin. of Eq.
66.

Roccus de Assicur.
No. 21.

Le Guidon.
c. 2. art. 2.

THE subject of the present chapter is materially connected with that of the foregoing; and indeed follows as a consequence from the doctrine there advanced. We then saw that a contract founded upon that which was contrary to law, could never be carried into effect. Thus by the laws of almost all countries, the exportation and importation of certain commodities are declared to be illegal: to act contrary to that prohibition, is clearly a contempt of legal authority; and consequently a moral wrong. If the act itself be illegal, the insurance to protect such an act must also be contrary to law, and therefore void. Agreeably to this principle, it seems to have been laid down by the writers upon the subject, as a general and universal proposition, that an insurance being made, although in general terms, does not comprehend prohibited goods; and therefore when the insured shall procure such commodities to be shipped, the underwriter being ignorant of it, by means of which the ship and cargo are confiscated, the insurer is discharged. In this passage from Roccus it may be inferred, that if the underwriter knew that the goods were prohibited, the insurance would be valid. But we trust, it was sufficiently shewn in the preceding chapter, that that will not alter the case: because no consent or agreement can render a contract good and valid, which upon the face of it, is contrary to law. In France this rule was adopted so long ago as the year 1660; for in the work of a very respectable writer of that age, we find this passage: assurances se peuvent faire sur toute sorte de merchandize, pourvu que le transport
ne

ne soit pas prohibé par les edicts et ordonnances du roy. And from an authority no less respectable, it appears, that the law of France has undergone no alteration since that period; for he says, “that those effects, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited in France, cannot be the subject matter of the contract of insurance; and if they should be confiscated, the insurers are not responsible, even where the truth has been declared by a special clause in the policy. The assurance is void, and no premium is due.” This passage from the celebrated work just referred to, confirms the idea above started, with respect to the knowledge of the underwriter.

Emerigon
Traité des Assurances,
tom. 1. c. 8.
f. 5.

The law of England, whose commercial regulations have surpassed those of every other nation in the world, has also introduced such a rule into its system of mercantile jurisprudence: and the oldest writers upon the subject have taken notice of it. It is said, “if prohibited goods are laden aboard, and the merchant insures upon the general policy, it is a question whether if such goods be lawfully seized as prohibited goods, the insurers ought to answer. It is conceived they ought not: for if the goods are at the time of the lading unlawful, and the lader knew of the same, such assurance will not oblige the insurer to answer the loss; for the same is not such an assurance as the law supports, but a fraudulent one.”

Mol'oy, lib.
2. c. 7. f. 15.

But it is not upon the opinions of learned men merely, that this doctrine is founded in the English law; for the legislature have by positive statutes declared their ideas upon the subject. It appears from the preamble to that section of the statute about to be quoted, that a custom, highly prejudicial to the revenue of the country had prevailed, and was encreasing to a very alarming degree, of importing great quantities of goods from foreign states in a fraudulent and clandestine manner, without paying the customs and duties payable

4 and 5 W.
and M. c. 15.
f. 14, 15, 16.
500*l.* penalty
on persons insuring to import prohib.
goods.

Sect. 15.

Like penalty
on the insured

to the crown : and that this evil had been encouraged and promoted by some ill designing men, who, in defiance of the laws, had undertaken as insurers, or otherwise, to deliver such goods so clandestinely imported, at their charge and hazard, into the houses, warehouses, or possession of the owners of such goods. In order to remedy this mischief, it was enacted, “ that all and every “ person and persons, who, by way of insurance “ or otherwise, should undertake or agree to de“ liver any goods, wares, or merchandizes what“ soever, to be imported from parts beyond the “ seas, at any port or place whatsoever within “ this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales,
“ or town of Berwick upon Tweed, without pay“ ing the duties and customs that should be due
“ and payable for the same at such importation,
“ or any prohibited goods whatsoever ; or in pur“ suance of such insurance, undertaking or agree“ ment, should deliver, or cause or procure to “ be delivered any prohibited goods, or should “ deliver, or cause or procure to be delivered, “ any goods or merchandizes whatsoever, with“ out paying such duties and customs as afore“ said, knowing thereof, and all and every their “ aiders, abettors, and assistants, should for “ every such offence forfeit and lose the sum of “ five hundred pounds, over and above all other “ forfeitures and penalties, to which they are “ liable by any act already in force.” It was also enacted, “ that all and every person and persons, “ who should agree to pay any sum or sums of “ money for the insuring or conveying any goods “ or merchandizes that should be so imported, “ without paying the customs and duties due and “ payable at the importation thereof, or of any “ prohibited goods whatsoever, or should receive “ or take such prohibited goods into his or their “ house, or warehouse, or other place on land, “ or such other goods, before such customs or “ duties were paid, knowing thereof, should also
“ for

“ for every such offence forfeit and lose the like “ sum of five hundred pounds ; the one half of “ the said forfeitures to be to their majesties, and “ the other half to the informer, or to such per“ sons as should sue for the same. And if the “ insurer, conveyor, or manager of such fraud “ should be the discoverer of the same, he “ should not only keep the insurance money “ or reward given him, and be discharged “ of the penalties to which he was liable by “ reason of such offence, but should also have “ to his own use one half of the forfeitures here“ by imposed upon the party or parties making “ such insurance or agreement, or receiving the “ goods as aforesaid : and in case no discovery “ should be made by the insurer, conveyor, or “ manager as aforesaid, and the party or parties “ insured or concerned in such agreement should “ make discovery thereof, he should recover and “ receive back such insurance money or pre“ mium, as he had paid upon such insurance or “ agreement, and should have to his own use one “ moiety of the forfeitures imposed upon such “ insurer, conveyor, or manager as aforesaid,
 “ and should also be discharged of the forfeitures “ hereby imposed upon him or them.”

A few years afterwards, lustrings, the manufacture of which till then was little known in England, having been worked to great perfection by the Royal Lustring Company, the legislature found it necessary to protect this branch of trade, by prohibiting the importation of such silks from foreign countries into this, without paying the duties, whether by direct means, or by the way of insurance. It was enacted, “ that every per- 8 and 9 W. 3.
 “ son, who should import any foreign alamodes c. 36. s. 1.
 “ or lustrings from parts beyond the seas, into “ any port or place within the kingdom of Eng- “ land, dominion of Wales, &c. without paying “ the rates, customs, impositions, and duties “ that should be due and payable for the same at “ such

“ such importation, or should import any ala-“ modes or lustrings, prohibited by law to be “ imported, or should, by way of insurance or “ otherwise, undertake or agree to deliver, or “ in pursuance of any undertaking, agreement, “ or insurance, should deliver, or cause to be “ delivered, any such goods or merchandize, and “ every person, who should agree to pay any sum “ or sums of money, premium, or reward for “ insuring or conveying any such goods or mer“ chandize, or should knowingly take, or re“ ceive the same into his, her, or their house, “ shop, or warehouse, custody or possession, such “ person or persons should and might be prose“ cuted for any of the offences or matters afore“ said, in any action, suit, or information; and “ thereupon a capias in the first process, specify“ ing the sum of the penalties sued for, should “ and might issue, and such person or persons “ should be obliged to give sufficient bail and “ security by natural born subjects, persons na“ turalized or denizens to the officer executing
 “ the writ, to appear in court to answer such “ suit, and at such appearance to give sufficient “ bail to answer and pay all the forfeitures and “ penalties incurred for such offence, or to yield “ his, her, or their bodies to prison.”

Sect. 2.

The second section of this statute enables persons to sue for the penalties imposed by the former act of William and Mary, by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster.

Wool being the staple manufacture of this kingdom, it was always deemed a heinous offence to transport it out of the realm: for we find it was forbidden at the common law; and afterwards more expressly in the reign of Edward the Third, since which period this branch of trade has been much attended to, and any offences against it have met with corporeal and pecuniary punishments by several subsequent statutes. This being

Mir. c. 1. f. 3.

11 Ed. 3. c. 1.

8 Eliz. c. 3.

12 Car. 2.

c. 32.

7 and 8 W. 3.

c. 28. 4 G. 1.

c. 11.

being the case, an insurance upon wool so to be exported must have been void; because the very foundation of the contract was contrary to law. But notwithstanding these restrictions, the practice of exporting wool became so frequent, as well as the practice of insuring such cargoes, and undertaking to deliver them safely abroad, that it became necessary for the legislature to interpose, and by a new declaration of the law, and the imposition of a heavy penalty, to endeavour to check the growing evil. Accordingly it was enacted, “that every person, who, by way of “insurance or otherwise, should undertake or “agree, that any wool, wool-fells, wool-flocks, “mortlings, shortlings, worsted, &c. should be “carried or conveyed to any parts beyond the “seas from any port or place whatsoever within “this kingdom or Ireland: or in pursuance of “such insurance, undertaking, or agreement, “should deliver, or cause to be delivered, any “of the said goods in parts beyond the seas, such “person, and all and every his aiders, &c. should “for every such offence forfeit and lose the sum “of five hundred pounds.” The next section inflicts a like penalty on the insured: and the following one, in order to encourage the parties to disclose such contracts, releases the party informing from all the penalties, to which he himself was subject, and also gives him the whole of the forfeiture, after deducting the charges of the prosecution.

12 G. 2. c.
21. s. 29.

500l. penalty
on the insurer
who insures or procures wool to be landed in foreign parts.

Sect. 30.

Sect. 31.

But in order wholly to prevent this illicit exportation of wool, it was necessary for the legislature to go one step further: because as policies are frequently made on goods, as well as on ships, in which the insurer undertakes, in consideration of the premium, to bear all the risks and hazards of the voyage; and as it is generally unknown to the insurers what sorts of goods are loaded on board any ship or vessel, it happened that insurances were made on wool or woollen yarn to be carried

Same act.

s. 33.

Insurances on woollen goods void.

carried from Great Britain or Ireland to foreign ports, or on woollen manufactures to be carried from Ireland. Therefore it was declared, “ that “ all policies of insurance, which should be made “ on goods and merchandizes, loaden or to be “ loaden, on any ship or vessel bound from Great “ Britain or Ireland to foreign parts beyond the “ seas, which should afterwards appear to be “ wool or woollen yarn, or any other species of “ wool, or woollen manufactures from Ireland;
“ and all policies of insurance which should be “ made on any ship or vessel bound from Great “ Britain or Ireland to foreign parts beyond the “ seas, which should have on board any wool or “ woollen yarn, or any other species of wool, or “ woollen manufactures from Ireland, should be “ deemed and taken to be null and void, not“ withstanding any words or agreement whatso“ ever, which should be inserted in any such po“ licy of insurance; and nothing should be re“ covered from the assured in either case for loss “ or damage, or for the premium which should “ have been given as the consideration for insu“ ring such goods and merchandizes, ship or “ vessel.”

This latter act, as far as relates to Ireland, has been repealed by a subsequent statute of 20 Geo. 3. c. 6.

From an attentive review of these statutes, the idea of the British parliament may be clearly and decidedly collected: and the statutes just referred to, are the most general in their import that could be found upon the subject; and consequently the most proper to be mentioned here.

The question naturally occurs, what goods come under the description of prohibited goods, so as to render an insurance upon them void. To mention by name all the different kinds of merchandize, which fall under that description, would be tedious; and, as it should seem, wholly unnecessary. Thus much may be laid down as a general

neral proposition, that all insurances upon goods, forbidden to be exported or imported, by positive statutes, or by the king's proclamation in time of war; or which, from the nature of the commodity, and by the laws of nations, must necessarily be contraband, are absolutely null and void. Under the first division may be ranked all offences against the revenue laws of this country; and therefore if an insurance were made in order to protect smuggled goods, such insurance would doubtless be of no effect. To this head also may be referred any breach of the navigation acts, which were established for the protection, encouragement, and advancement of our commercial and naval interests; and which have produced those effects to the wonderful extension of our commerce, and the aggrandizement of the nation. At a very early period of the history of this country, several wise provisions were made by parliament, solely with this view: but on account of the low state of commerce in those ages, which was the more depressed, by the warlike spirit of the nation, and the intestine commotions that agitated and disturbed the state, those provisions in some measure failed of their effect. But the most beneficial statute for the trade and commerce of England is the famous navigation act, which passed soon after the restoration of Charles the Second; the outlines of which were first framed, in the time of the commonwealth, by Oliver Cromwell. By the reports of historians, we do not find that he framed it with any view to those beneficial effects, which sprung from it, but with a partial and confined intention, being designed by him to mortify our own sugar islands, which were disaffected to the parliament, and held out for the king, by stopping the lucrative trade, which they then held with the Dutch. Another motive for his conduct was this, that as the Dutch were at that time rising into opulence and wealth, and had given him disgust; and as their commerce

5 Rich. 2.
c. 3.

Scobell 132.

7 Hume's
hist. of Eng.
211.

merce did not consist so much in the produce of their own country (which afforded but few commodities) as in being the general carriers and factors of Europe, he had it in his power to affect their trade in a considerable degree, by prohibiting all nations from importing into England in their own bottoms any commodity, which was not the growth and manufacture of their own country. At the restoration, however, those plans, the good effects of which had probably been experienced, were adopted by the legal and real constitution of the country; and were considerably improved by inserting clauses, which had been overlooked and omitted in the original design, or which time and experience had pointed out as necessary to the completion of that system, the beneficial effects of which are at this day most sensibly felt. It is not wholly impertinent in a work like the present to state briefly the outlines of a statute, so considerably affecting the commercial interests of the nation, and which has served as the groundwork of all subsequent laws for the good management of British navigation.

12 Car. 2.

c. 18. s. 1.

The first section of the act declares, “that no “ goods shall be imported into, or exported out
 “ of, any plantations or territories to his majesty “ belonging in Asia, Africa, or America, but in “ such ships only as belong to the people of Eng- “ land, or Ireland, Wales or Berwick, or are of “ the built of, and belonging to, any of the said “ territories, as the proprietors thereof, and “ whereof the master, and three-fourths of the “ mariners are English, (which word by a subse“ quent statute, 13 and 14 Car. 2. ch. 11. s. 6.
 “ was explained to mean his majesty’s subjects of “ England, Ireland, and his plantations gene“ rally) under penalty of the forfeiture of all the “ goods and commodities which shall be import“ ed into, or exported out of, any of the said “ places, in any other ship or vessel, as also of “ the ship and vessel.” It is also declared, “that “ no

Sec. 3.

“ no goods of the growth, manufacture, or pro“ duction of Africa, Asia, or America, be im“ ported into England, Ireland, Wales, Guernsey, See an act of “ Jersey, or Berwick, in any other ships than such 2 W. and M.
 “ as belong to the people of England, Ireland, f. 1, c. 9.
 “ Wales, or Berwick, or of the plantations to his prohibiting “ majesty belonging, as the proprietors thereof, the importa-“ and whereof the master and three-fourths of tion of “ the mariners are English, under the penalty of thrown silk.
 “ the forfeiture of all such goods, and of the “ ship.”

“ No goods of foreign growth, production, or Sect. 4.
 “ manufacture, which are to be brought into “ England, Ireland, Wales, Guernsey, Jersey, or This section “ Berwick, in English built shipping, or other was altered “ shipping belonging to some of the aforesaid as to the im-“ places, and navigated by English mariners as portation of “ aforesaid, shall be brought from any other American “ places but those of the growth or manufacture, drugs by 7
 “ or from those ports where the goods are first Anne, c. 8.
 “ usually shipped for transportation, under the f. 12.
 “ penalty of the forfeiture of all such goods, as “ shall be imported from any other place, as also “ of the said ship.”

“ It shall not be lawful to load in any ships, Sect. 6.
 “ whereof any stranger or strangers, born (un“ less such as be denizens, or naturalized) be “ owners, part owners, or master, and whereof “ three-fourths of the mariners at least shall not “ be English, any fish, victual, goods and mer-“ chandizes from one port or creek of England, “ Ireland, Wales, Guernsey, Jersey, or Berwick, to “ another port or creek of the same, under pe“ nalty of forfeiture of all such goods, together “ with the ship or vessel.”

“ Where any privilege is given by the book Sect. 7.
 “ of rates to goods or commodities exported or “ imported in English built shipping, that is to “ say, shipping built in England, Ireland, Wales, “ Guernsey, Jersey, Berwick, or in any of the lands, “ dominions and territories belonging to his ma“ jesty,

“ jesty, in Africa, Asia, or America, that it always “ is to be understood, that the master and three-“ fourths of the mariners be English; and where “ it is required that the master and three-“ fourths of the mariners be English, the true in“ tent thereof is, that they should continue such “ during the whole voyage, unless in case of “ sickness, death, or being taken prisoners in the “ voyage, to be proved by the oath of the mas“ ter or chief officer of the ship.”

Sect. 8.

The eighth section prohibits the importation of goods of the growth of Muscovy, Russia, or the Ottoman or Turkish empire, into England, except in English built ships, whereof the master and three-fourths of the mariners must also be English, under the penalty of forfeiting both ship and goods.

Sect. 9.

Upon this sect. see 13
 and 14 Car.
 2. c. 11. f. 23.
 6 Geo. 1.
 c. 15. f. 1.

And for preventing the practice of colouring aliens goods, the ninth section declares, that all wines of the growth of France or Germany imported in any other than English vessels, shall be deemed aliens goods, and pay all strangers customs, and duties: which provision is extended to certain commodities, named in the act, of the growth of Spain, the Canaries, Madeira, Portugal, or the Western islands, and of Muscovy, Russia, and Turkey. It was also ordained by the next subsequent section of the statute, in order to prevent the colouring or buying of foreign ships, that no foreign ship should pass as a ship to England, Ireland, Wales, or Berwick, until those claiming the said ship should make appear to the chief officer of the customs that they were not aliens, and should have taken an oath, that such ship was bonâ fide, and without fraud by them bought for a valuable consideration, expressing the sum, and also the time, place and persons, from whom it was bought, and who were the part owners: upon which oath that they should receive a certificate, whereby such ship should in future pass, and be deemed a ship belonging to the said port,

Sect. 10.

where

where the oath was so taken, and receive the privileges of such ship. The officers of the customs are not to allow any privilege to any foreign built ship, until certificate granted, or proof of those things required by this act. By the 13th section it is provided; that this act is not intended to restrain the importation of any East India commodities, loaden in English built shipping, whereof the master and three-fourths of the mariners are English, from the usual place of loading in those seas, to the southward and eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, although the said ports be not the very places of their growth. There is also a provision in favour of goods imported from Spain, Portugal, the Azores; Madeira or Canary islands; and concerning goods and commodities from Scotland, and seal oil from Russia. The 17th section imposes a duty upon every French ship coming into England. And it was lastly enacted, that the ships of England, Ireland, Wales, or Berwick, sailing to any English plantations in Asia, Africa, or America, should be bound in sufficient sureties, in proportion to the burthen of the ship, to bring the goods loaded at such plantations into England."

Such were the provisions of this famous statute, framed by the wisdom of our ancestors for the promotion of our naval and maritime strength: upon this statute have all subsequent commercial regulations been established; and from this source they have derived solidity and strength. But in vain have such rules been framed, if insurances upon the importation or exportation of the commodities mentioned in these statutes are to be tolerated. It would be to render void these good and wise plans, and to set the acts of the legislature at defiance. The conclusion is, that such insurances are absolutely null, and of no effect.

It was said, in a former part of this chapter, that an insurance upon any goods, the exporta-

U tion

Sect. 11.
V. 6 Anne,
c. 37. s. 21.

Sect. 13.

Sect. 14. and 16.

Sect. 17.

1 Black.Com.
270.

Delmada v.
Motteux.
B. R. Mich.
25 Geo. 3.
Vide ante
p. 266.

tion or importation of which was forbidden by royal proclamation in time of war, was equally void, as if prohibited by statute. The reason of this is, that the king's proclamation in time of war has equal force with an act of parliament, and is no less binding upon his subjects. The consequence of this doctrine is, that the breach of such a prohibition is equally criminal with the breach of a statute; and no contract founded upon such criminal act, can have any validity. These principles were fully considered in the preceding chapter; and the law upon the subject was clearly settled in the case of Delmada v. Motteux, there cited at length: in which it was held, that the king had an undoubted right to lay on an embargo, in time of war: that the consequence of a breach of such a proclamation had not been fully ascertained, but it was certainly a criminal act; and wherever a man makes an illegal contract, the courts of justice will not lend him their aid to compel a performance. The underwriter was accordingly discharged from the demand set up against him.

Grotius, lib.
3. c. 1.
Bynk. lib. 1.
c. 11.

Lib. 3. c. 1.
f. 5.

We come now to consider those commodities, which from their nature, as well as by the laws of nations, are contraband. Upon this occasion, Grotius and Bynkershoek are the best guides that can possibly be followed; and from them we may collect, that it is unlawful to carry any thing to besieged cities or fortresses: a rule which they declare to have been established by common consent, and the usage of all nations. Grotius divides goods into three kinds: such as can only be of use in time of war; and these are clearly contraband, such as arms and ammunition: 2dly. such as answer no purpose in war, and are merely intended for pleasure; and these may be lawfully conveyed to an enemy. But the third kind are of a mixed nature, such as money, provisions, ships, and the materials of ships; in which case, before we can decide upon the propriety of exporting

porting such commodities, the situation of the war between the contending parties is to be considered. Upon this point, his reasoning is excellent: "If," says he, "I cannot defend my" self without intercepting the commodities in" tended for my enemies, necessity will give me
 " the right, but still I shall be liable to make " restitution, unless some other cause of seizure
 " appears. For if the conveyance of such com" modities to the enemy shall prevent the execu" tion of my plans, and he who carried them
 " knew that I had besieged or blockaded the " town, and that peace or a surrender was ex" pected, he shall be answerable for the loss
 " sustained by his misconduct." With this opi- L. 1. c. 11.
 nion Bynkershoek for the most part coincides: because, as he observes, the siege alone is the cause why it is not lawful to carry any thing to the besieged, whether it be contraband or not: for a besieged city is never compelled to surrender by force, but by famine, and the want of other necessaries.
 If it were to be permitted to supply them with the things of which they stand in need, perhaps the assailants would be obliged to raise the siege.
 But as it is impossible to say, of what things the besieged stand in need, or in what they abound, every species of commodity is forbidden to be carried into the garrison; for otherwise there would be no certain rule of settling disputes.
 This learned author, however, differs from Gro-tius, in that passage where he says, "the carrier
 " of goods shall be answerable, if peace or a " surrender was expected, and it was frustrated
 " by such means." Bynkershoek is of opinion, that such doctrine is neither consonant to reason, nor to the agreements entered into by the laws of nations. He reasons thus: "Quæ ratio me
 " arbitrum constituit de futurâ deditiõne aut
 " pace? et si neutra expectetur, jam licet ob-
 " sessis quælibet advehere? imo nunquam licet,
 " durante obsidione, et amici non est causam amici
 U 2 " perdere,

“ perdere, vel quoquo modo deteriorem facere.
 “ Et qui advexit, non ultra tenebitur, quam de “ damno culpâ dato? atquin in subditis id sem-“ per capitale fuit, quin et in amicis, edicto ante “ monitis, sæpe et in non monitis. Rursus, si “ quis nondum advexit, sed, dum advehere vo“ luit, deprehendatur, sola rerum interceptarum “ retentione erimus contenti, idque donec cavea“ tur, nihil tale in posterum commissum iri?”
 He concludes thus: “ I do not agree to that “ opinion, having learnt from the custom and “ usages of all nations, to sell all intercepted “ goods, and often to inflict, if not a capital, at “ least a corporal punishment.”

Grot. Bynk.
 loc. cit.

Such are the opinions of these two very learned writers, who, although in some respects they differ, agree in establishing this as a settled, undisputed rule, that whoever conveys any necessaries to a besieged town, camp, or port, is guilty of a breach of the law of nations. This being the case, an insurance upon such commodities must necessarily be void and of no effect, agreeably to the principles which have already been advanced.

One question only remains to be considered;
 how far insurances upon goods, the exportation and importation of which are forbidden by the laws of other countries, are valid? In England, the law is clear, as it has been laid down by two very great judges, that such insurances are good;
 because the foundation of the contract is not illicit. It has been expressly held by Lord Mansfield more than once, in which he has been confirmed by the whole court of King's Bench, that one nation never takes notice of the revenue laws of another; and therefore such an insurance was certainly good and valid. A similar opinion seems to have been entertained by Lord Hardwicke; at least so much may be collected from his argument, in a case reported in Vezey.

Vide ante
 p. 217.
 Doug. 238.

1 Vezey 319.

But

But although this point is so clearly settled by the law of England, in which also the law of France coincides, it is certain that the expediency of it has been a question which has very much engaged the attention of some considerable French authors. Their opinions can in no way affect the law of England, which stands upon much higher authority than the sentiments of speculative men, however respectable; but it may be productive of some amusement, if not instruction, to see by what arguments the two different opinions are supported.

Those who contend that such insurances are illegal, argue in this manner: that they who carry on commerce in a country, are obliged, by the custom of nations, and natural law, to conform to the laws of that country, where they trade. Every sovereign has power and jurisdiction over every thing done in the country, where he has a right to command; he has consequently a right to make laws, relative to commerce within his dominions, which bind all those who trade, as well strangers as subjects. No one can dispute with the sovereign, the right he has to retain in his own country certain merchandizes which are there to be found, and to prohibit the exportation of them. To export them contrary to his orders, is to strike a blow at his undoubted authority; and consequently it is unjust. But admitting, say they, that a Frenchman would not himself be subject to the law of Spain, for the trade which he carries on in Spain, it cannot be denied that the Spaniards, whose assistance he requires, are subject to those laws; and that they offend extremely in assisting him to export that, the exportation of which is prohibited by law. This species of trade then is to be considered as illicit, and contrary to good faith; and consequently the contract of insurance, introduced in order to protect it, by charging the insurer with Pothier Tr.

d'Assurances,
c. 1. f. 2.
art. 2. f. 2.

2 Val. Com.
129.
1 Emerigon
212.

the risk of confiscation, is illicit, and cannot induce any obligation.

Those who support the opposite doctrine contend, that the exportation or importation of commodities prohibited by foreign laws is no offence; and that the means employed to effect it are regarded by the law, as a laudable and ingenious exertion of skill. Thus the exportation of certain commodities is prohibited in Spain, which the government of that country has a right to do: but the laws of his Catholick majesty are not the rule of action for Frenchmen. It is allowed them to bring from Spain into France, piastres, pistoles, and silks, for the support of the Banks, the manufactures, and the commerce of that country. These merchandizes are a lawful branch of trade; and there is no reason why they should not be the subject matter of a contract of insurance. But above all, they insist, that they are justified by the constant custom; and that the reasoners on the other side ought to be less strict, when it is considered, that this contraband trade is a vice common to all commercial nations. The Spaniards and English in time of peace practise it in France: it is therefore permitted to carry it on in their respective countries, by way of reprisal.

Whatever influence there may be on the question of expediency; it is universally admitted by the French writers, that insurances upon such goods are valid. We have already seen that the same ideas have been adopted by the law of England; and that every policy upon goods, the exportation or importation of which is not prohibited by the municipal laws of this country, or by the general laws of nations, is legal and binding upon the parties; and the underwriter must answer for every loss arising by means of any of the usual perils.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

Of Wager-Policies.

HAVING in the four preceding chapters stated the various cases, in which the contract of insurance is void from its very commencement, on account of its repugnancy to those principles of justice, equity, and good faith, which are the great foundation of all contracts between man and man; we proceed to treat of those policies, which by the positive statute law of the country are declared to be absolutely null and void. Of these the largest class are wager-policies, or policies as they are called, upon interest or no interest.

The nature of the contract of insurance, in its original state, was, that a specifick voyage should be performed free from perils; and in case of accidents, during such voyage, the insurer, in consideration of the premium he received, was to bear the merchant harmless. It followed from thence, that the contract related to the safety of the voyage thus particularly described, in respect either of ship or cargo: and that the person insured could not recover beyond the amount of his real loss.

In process of time, however, variations were made, by express agreement, from the first kind of policy; and in cases where the trader did not think it proper to disclose the nature of his interest, the insurer dispensed with the insured having any interest either in the ship or cargo. In this last kind of policy, (of which we are now to treat) “valued free from average,” and “interest or no interest,” it is manifest, that the performance of the voyage or adventure, in a reasonable time and manner, and not the bare existence of the ship or cargo, is the object of the insurance.

of 600 l. at which the goods were valued by the agreement.

2 Burr. 683.
Vide ante
p. 167.

There was one very remarkable difference between policies upon interest, and such as were not, of which I believe notice has already been taken in a former part of this work; namely, that in policies upon interest, you recover for the loss actually sustained, whether it be total or partial: but upon a wager-policy, you can never recover but for a total loss. All the doctrine, which turns upon this distinction between interest and wager-policies was considered at much length by Lord Mansfield in the famous cause of Goss v. Withers, to which we have had occasion more than once to refer.

Vide ante
c. 1. p. 9, 10.

It has already been observed, that the security given to the insured was very considerably increased by the erection of two Assurance Companies, which were incorporated by royal charter in the year 1720; for the legislature had taken care that those corporations should have sufficient funds to answer any demands, that might be made upon them, in the common course of business. But this additional security for the insured soon produced many dangerous and alarming consequences, which, if they had not been checked, would have proved very detrimental to the trade of this country. For instead of confining the business of insurances to real risks, and considering them merely as an indemnity to the fair dealer against any loss, which he might sustain in the course of a trading voyage, which, as we have seen, was the original design of them; that practice, which only prevailed since the revolution, of insuring ideal risks, under the names of interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest than the policy, or without benefit of salvage to the underwriters, was increasing to an alarming degree, and by such rapid strides as to threaten the speedy annihilation of that lucrative and most beneficial branch of trade. All these various

various kinds of insurance just enumerated, (and many others, which the ingenuity of bad men found no difficulty in devising) having no reference whatever to actual trade or commerce, were very justly considered as mere gaming or wager-policies: and therefore the legislature thought it necessary to give them an effectual check, and, by positive rules, to fix and ascertain what property or interest a merchant should be permitted to insure.

Accordingly an act of parliament passed, in the 19th year of the reign of king George the Second, entitled “an act to regulate insurance on ships “ belonging to the subjects of Great Britain, and
“ on merchandizes or effects laden thereon.” As this act is the most important and most extensive in the whole code of statute law, with regard to insurances, I shall now cite as much of it at length, as relates to the present chapter, and afterwards the other clauses of it under those heads, to which they more immediately apply.

The causes, which co-operated to induce the legislative body to pass such an act, are fully stated in the preamble. “Whereas it hath been “ found by experience, that the making assu“ rances interest or no interest, or without further “ proof of interest than the policy, hath been “ productive of many pernicious practices, “ whereby great numbers of ships, with their “ cargoes, have either been fraudulently lost and “ destroyed, or taken by the enemy in time of “ war; and such assurances have encouraged the “ exportation of wool, and the carrying on many “ other prohibited and clandestine trades, which “ by means of such assurances have been con“ cealed, and the parties concerned secured from “ loss, as well to the diminution of the publick re“ venue, as to the great detriment of fair traders:
“ and by introducing a mischievous kind of “ gaming or wagering, under the pretence of as“ suring the risk on shipping, and fair trade, the “ institution

19 Geo. 2:
c. 37.

“ institution and laudable design of making as“ surances, hath been perverted; and that, which “ was intended for the encouragement of trade “ and navigation, has, in many instances, become “ hurtful of, and destructive to the same.”

Sect. 1.

“ For remedy whereof be it enacted, that no “ assurance or assurances shall be made by any “ person or persons, bodies corporate or poli“ tick, on any ship or ships belonging to his ma“ jesty, or any of his subjects, or on any goods, “ merchandizes or effects, laden or to be laden “ on board of any such ship or ships, interest or “ no interest, or without further proof of interest “ than the policy, or by way of gaming or wa- “ gering, or without benefit of salvage to the assu- “ rer; and that every such insurance shall be “ null and void to all intents and purposes.”

Sect. 2.

“ Provided always, that assurance on private “ ships of war, fitted out by any of his ma“ jesty's subjects solely to cruize against his ma“ jesty's enemies, may be made by or for the “ owners thereof, interest or no interest, free of “ average, and without benefit of salvage to the “ assurer; any thing herein contained to the “ contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.”

Sect. 3.

“ Provided also, that any merchandizes or ef“ fects from any ports or places in Europe, or “ America, in the possession of the Crowns of “ Spain or Portugal, may be assured in such way
 “ and manner, as if this act had not been made.”

Sect. 4.

The fourth section relates to re-insurances, which will be the subject of the following chapter.

Sect. 5.

“ And be it enacted, that all and every sum “ and sums of money to be lent on bottomry, or “ at respondentia, upon any ship or ships belong“ ing to any of his majesty's subjects, bound to “ or from the East Indies, shall be lent only on “ the ship, or on the merchandize, or effects “ laden, or to be laden, on board of such ship, “ and shall be so expressed in the condition of

“ the

“ the said bond: and the benefit of salvage shall be “ allowed to the lender, his agents or assigns, who “ alone shall have a right to make assurance on the mo- “ ney so lent: and no borrower of money on bottom-“ ry or respondentia, as aforesaid, shall recover more “ on any assurance than the value of his interest “ in the ship, or in the merchandizes or effects, “ laden on board of such ship, exclusive of the “ money so borrowed; and in case it shall ap“ pear, that the value of his share in the ship, or “ in the merchandizes or effects laden on board, “ doth not amount to the full sum or sums he “ hath borrowed as aforesaid, such borrower shall “ be responsible to the lender for so much of the “ money borrowed, as he hath not laid out on “ the ship or merchandizes laden thereon, with “ lawful interest for the same, together with the “ assurance, and all other charges thereon, in the “ proportion the money not laid out, shall bear “ to the whole money lent, notwithstanding the “ ship and merchandizes be totally lost.”

Upon this last section, of which we shall treat more fully in the chapter on Bottomry, it may be sufficient in this place to observe, that none but the lender shall have a right to make insurance on the money lent. It is also to be remarked, that this regulation of insurance on bottomry or re- spondentia interest, extends only to East India ships: and therefore, an insurance of a respon- dentia interest upon any other ships may be made in the same manner as they used to be before this act. It has also been decided upon this clause of the act, that it never meant or intended to make any alteration in the manner of insurances: and it was declared by the whole court in the case of Glover v. Black, which was fully reported in a former chapter, to be the established law and usage of merchants; that respondentia and bottom-ry must be mentioned and specified in the policy of insurance.

Glover v.
Black.

3 Burr. 1394.
 Vide ante
 c. 1. p. 10.

By

By the first section of the act it is clear that at this day all insurances made contrary to it are absolutely void and of no effect; which, as has already been shewn, was also the case by the ancient law of this country. It may now be material to consider, first, what cases have, by the construction put by the learned judges upon this statute, been held not to fall within its description; and secondly, those which do, and in which, the policies have consequently been holden to be void.

It was formerly a matter of doubt, whether the act was meant to extend to insurances of foreign property, and on foreign ships. The better opinion, however, was, that it did not; for it was clear, that such insurances did not fall within the words of the statute; and from an attentive consideration of the preamble, they do not seem to come under the description of the mischiefs, against which it was the intention of the legislature to provide. But these doubts are entirely at an end by several decisions of the courts; and particularly by a very modern case, in which it was expressly declared by the court, (and the reason for it stated) that the act was not designed to extend to foreign ships.

Thellusson v.
Fletcher.
Doug. 301.

The case was this: the policy was on goods, on board three French vessels, from St. Domingo to Bordeaux. The material part of it, as to this case, was in the following words: "On all goods
" loaden or to be loaden on board the ships Le
" Soigneux, La Pucelle, and Le Vainqueur, all or " any of them. The said goods and merchan" dizes by agreement are, and shall be valued " at (a) on 25 casks of clayed
" sugar, and 12 hogsheads of muscavadoes; the " policy to be deemed sufficient proof of interest, in
" case of loss." The first count in the declara-

(a) This was blank, as here printed.

tion stated, that goods to a great amount, being the property of certain foreigners, had been shipped on board Le Soigneux, and that she had been lost. The second averred, that the goods were shipped on board the three ships, or some or one of them, to the amount of the sum insured; and that two of them had been captured, and the other lost.

This case came before the court upon a motion to set aside the writ of enquiry, which had been executed before the sheriff, after a judgment by default, on this ground: that the jury had assessed the damages to the amount of the defendant's subscription, without any proof of the amount or value, or any evidence whatever, except that of the defendant's handwriting to the policy. In addition to this objection, an affidavit was produced, tending to shew, that in fact the insured had no interest. It was argued for the defendant, that by the express agreement of the parties, no other proof of interest but the policy was required; and this insurance on foreign ships and property was not within the statute prohibiting such policies; so that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum insured by the defendant, even if it could be proved that the insured had no property on board. The court said, that this was not a policy within the statute, foreign ships not having been included in that act, on account of the difficulty of bringing witnesses from abroad to prove the interest. The only difficulty there could have been here, was from the circumstance of there having been three ships; but the second count was so framed, as to make the case the same, as if there had been but one. By suffering judgment to go by default, the defendant has confessed the plaintiff's title to recover; and the amount was fixed by the stipulation in the policy.

It was formerly thought, that a valued policy was a wager policy, like interest or no interest.

But

Vide ante
c. 1.

But this idea is now exploded, as we shall presently shew by a solemn decision of the court of King's Bench. Of the difference between open and valued policies much has been already said; and the origin of the latter was derived from this source, it being sometimes troublesome to the trader to prove the value of his interest, or to ascertain the quantity of his loss, he gave the insurer a higher premium to agree to estimate his interest at a precise sum. To recover upon this kind of policy, the insured need only prove that he had an interest, without shewing the value. If indeed it appeared, or could be made appear, that the interest proved was merely a cover to a wager, in order to evade the statute, there is no doubt such a policy would be void.

Lewis v.
Rucker.
2 Burr. 1167.
Vide ante
c. 6. p. 118.

All this doctrine was very fully stated, and commented upon, by Lord Mansfield, in giving judgment in a cause then depending in the court of King's Bench. "A valued policy," said his Lordship, "is not to be considered as a wager policy, or like interest or no interest. If it were, it would be void by the act of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. The only effect of the valuation is fixing the amount of the prime cost; just as if the parties had admitted it at the trial: but in every argument, and for every other purpose, it must be taken that the value was fixed in such a manner, as that the insured meant only to have an indemnity. If it be undervalued, the merchant himself stands insurer for the surplus. If it be much overvalued, it must be done with a bad view; either to gain, contrary to the 19th of the late king; or with some view to a fraudulent loss: therefore an insured never can be allowed to plead in a court of justice, that he has greatly overvalued, or that his interest was a trifle only. It is settled, that upon valued policies, the merchant need only prove some interest, to take it out of 19 Geo. 2. because the adverse party “ party has admitted the value: and if more were “ required, the agreed valuation would signify “ nothing. But if it should come out in proof, “ that a man had insured 2000*l.* and had interest

 “ on board to the value of a cable only; there “ never has been, and I believe there never will “ be a determination, that by such an evasion
 “ the act of parliament may be defeated. There “ are many conveniences from allowing valued “ policies: but where they are used merely as a “ cover to a wager, they would be considered as “ an evasion. The effect of the valuation is only “ fixing, conclusively, the prime cost. If it be “ an open policy, the prime cost must be “ proved: in a valued policy it is agreed.”
 For these reasons, Lord Mansfield held, that a valued policy is not void by the statute of the 19 Geo. 2.

The passage just quoted at length was, in a subsequent case, referred to in the judgment of the court; and the doctrine there advanced was adopted and confirmed.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on the ship Providence, at and from Surinam, or whatsoever other ports in the West Indies at which the ship might load, to Quebec. At the trial before Lord Mansfield, at the sittings after Trinity Term 1781, the principal question on the merits was, whether the plaintiff had an insurable interest. It was an insurance on the profits expected to arise on a cargo of molasses belonging to the plaintiff, who had a contract with government to supply the army with spruce beer. Lord Mansfield thought it an insurable interest. But the part of the case, which calls for our attention at present, was a clause declaring, “ that in case “ of loss, it was agreed that the profits should be “ valued at 1000*l.* without any other voucher “ than the policy.” This, it was insisted, rendered the policy void, as well within the letter, as within the spirit of the 19 Geo. 2. c. 37.

Grant v.
 Parkinson,
 Michaelm.
 22 Geo. 3.
 in B. R.

Lord Mansfield, at the trial, inclined to think that the contract was a fair one; but still he could not get over the objection, the instrument being void on the face of it. His Lordship, however, saved the point for the opinion of the court, a verdict being entered for the plaintiff, subject to that reference.

In Michaelmas Term following, the matter came on to be heard; when, after full argument at the bar,

Lord Mansfield, C. J. said: "I have, since
 " the sittings at Guildhall, on farther considera" tion, changed my opinion. I then thought
 " the present policy within the act of parlia" ment: I now think otherwise. On the con" struction of the act, it has uniformly been " held, that a valued policy is not void. It is " incumbent on the plaintiff to prove some in" terest; but it is not necessary to go into the " whole value. In the case of Lewis v. Rucker.
 " this doctrine was much considered."— [Here his Lordship read the words already reported, and then he proceeded thus] "This in" surance is on the profits of a cargo, belonging " to a man, having a contract to supply the " army, and if it arrive, the profits are pretty " certain. The meaning of the policy is not to " evade the act of parliament, but to avoid the " difficulty of going into an exact account of the " quantum. I cannot distinguish it from a va" lued policy; and there is no pretence for say" ing it is a wagering one." The other judges concurred; and the postea was given to the plaintiff.

De Costa v.
F. & L.
4 Burr. 1966.

In another case also it appeared, that an insurance had been made upon any of the packet-boats that should sail from Lisbon to Falmouth, or such other port in England as his majesty should direct, for one year, from October 1763, to October 1764, upon any kinds of goods and merchandizes whatsoever. And it was agreed, that the goods and merchandizes should be valued at the sum insured on such packet-boat, without farther proof of interest than the policy; and to make no return of premium for want of interest being on bullion or goods. The insured had an interest in bullion on board the Hanover packet, being one of the king's packets between Lisbon and Falmouth: and it was totally lost within the time mentioned in the policy.

This case has already been quoted for another purpose: but on this point, the court held, that this was a policy of a peculiar sort; and was an exception out of the statute of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. It is a mixed policy; partly a wager-policy, partly an open one: and it is a valued policy, and fairly so, without fraud or misrepresentation. Therefore the loss having happened, the insured is entitled as for a total loss. Vide ante p. 134, 186.

It has also been solemnly settled, that, upon a joint capture by the army and navy, the officers and crews of the ships, before condemnation, have an insurable interest, by virtue of the prize act, which usually passes at the commencement of a war.

This was so held in an action upon a policy of insurance on the ship St. Domingo, at and from Omoa to London; upon which a case was reserved for the opinion of the court. The facts of the case were these: Captain Luttrell, commanding five of his majesty's ships, and capt. Dalrymple, commanding a party of the land forces, captured two Spanish register ships, lying under the protection of Fort Omoa: that the ship St. Domingo (on which the insurance was made) was one of the prizes, and was coming home laden with the property then captured; upon which ship the defendant underwrote 500*l.* that the ship was lost by perils of the sea. The question was, whether, by virtue of the prize act of the 19 Geo. 3. c. 67. the officers and crew of the ships under captain Luttrell Le Cras v. Hughes. B. R. East. 22 Geo. 3.

Luttrell had such an insurable interest in the St. Domingo, as to entitle them to recover?

Lord Mansfield.—“There are two questions in this cause: 1st. Whether the sea officers had an insurable interest? This will depend on the prize act and proclamation. 2dly. Whether possession would entitle them to insure, upon the bare contingency of a future grant from the crown? As to the first; consider the act of parliament, which gives to all the people on board, that is, to the flag officers, commanders, and other officers; to the seamen, marines, and soldiers on board every ship and vessel of war, the sole interest and property of and in all and every ship and vessel, goods, and merchandizes, which they shall take during the war, after condemnation. Does the act say, that the seamen only shall take? does it leave a joint capture by the army and navy undefined? Certainly not. Suppose, for instance, a case which I remember to have happened: a Dutch and English fleet combined captured some ships; the English sailors could not take solely; nor could the act mean that they should have nothing. In the case in question, suppose captain Dalrymple had given no assistance, is there any doubt that captain Luttrell would have taken the whole? The only difference is, that now he has not the merit of a sole capture. The word “soldiers” in the proclamation, means soldiers on board the ship. Thus it stands on the act and proclamation. But supposing that doubtful, as far back as queen Anne’s time down to the present, wherever a capture has been made by a king’s ship or a privateer, the crown has always given a grant of it after condemnation. There is no instance to the contrary. Has not then the insured such an interest in the ship coming home, as to entitle them to an indemnity? Suppose a man is made agent of prizes; prizes; he has not the possession of the property, and yet he has such an interest in any ship coming home, that he may insure. Here the insured have the possession, and a certain expectation of receiving the property captured for their own emolument from the crown."

Judgment for the plaintiff.

In the construction of the act it has been holden, that all insurances made by persons having no interest in the event, about which they insure, or without reference to any property on board, are merely wagers, destructive of the true ends, for which this contract was introduced into the mercantile world; and therefore are to be considered as absolutely null and void.

Upon a motion for a new trial, Lord Mansfield, who had tried the cause, made the following report: This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who was a surgeon on board an East Indiaman, against the defendant, a passenger in the same ship, to recover a sum of 1000*l.* upon a special agreement, bearing date the 18th of July 1774; by which, after reciting, that, "whereas
" the plaintiff had agreed to pay to the defendant the sum of 20*l.* sterling at the next port
" the ship should arrive at, it was witnessed, that
" he the defendant, in consideration thereof,
" did undertake that the said ship should save
" her passage to China that season; and in case
" she did not, that then he would pay to the " plaintiff the sum of 1000*l.* at the end of one " month after the arrival of the said ship in the " river Thames." At the trial it appeared, that the plaintiff duly paid the amount of the 20*l.* to the defendant, at the next port, in pagodas: that the vessel being delayed below the Cape and Madras, in consequence of a miscalculation of five days in the reckoning, and the monsoons setting in earlier than usual, she lost her passage. That the plaintiff had some goods on board, which were liable to suffer by the loss of the season; and that

Kent v. Bird.
Cowp. 583.

whilst it was still doubtful whether the ship would or would not save her passage, the captain had applied to each of the parties, to persuade them to rescind the agreement; representing that the sum, to be paid in either event, would be more than the loser could afford. That the plaintiff was willing to have cancelled the agreement; but the defendant positively refused. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 980*l.* but I gave the defendant leave to move for a new trial upon the question, whether this were not an agreement within the statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. and therefore void.

After this case had been fully argued at the bar,

Lord Mansfield said: A policy of insurance is, in the nature of it, a contract of indemnity, and of great benefit to trade. But the use of it was perverted by its being turned into a wager. To remedy this evil, the statute of the 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. was made; which, after enumerating in the preamble the various frauds and pernicious practices introduced by the perversion of this species of contract; and amongst others, that of gaming or wagering under pretence of insuring vessels, &c. proceeds, under general words, to prohibit all contracts of insurance by way of gaming or wagering. Here, the plaintiff gives so much to the defendant in consideration that the ship should save her passage to Cbina; and if not, then, upon her returning safe to England, he is to receive 1000*l.* If the first of these events happened, the defendant won; but he could not lose, unless both happened. Is not this gaming? Is not this wagering? If this were allowed, all wagering policies would be turned into this form, and the act would be entirely defeated. If there is no interest in the case, it is gaming and wagering. Therefore there must be a new trial.

From this case we find, that the principle stated by Lord Mansfield in Lewis v. Rucker is confirmed:

confirmed: namely, that where a man insures 2000 l. and it turns out in proof that he has an interest to the value of a cable only, such an interest will never be allowed to operate so as to evade the statute. For in this case, it appeared in evidence, that the plaintiff had some goods on board; but that was held not to be an interest sufficient to justify an insurance so evidently contrary to the act of parliament.

Indeed wherever the court can see upon the face of the policy, that it is merely a contract of gaming, where indemnity is not the object in view, they are bound to declare such policy void.

The plaintiffs had lent to Lawson, captain of the Lord Holland, East Indiaman, 26,000 l. for which he had given them a common bond, in the penal sum of 52,000 l. While he was with his ship at China, the plaintiffs got a policy of insurance underwritten by the defendant and others, which was in the following terms: “at and from China “ to London, beginning the adventure upon the “ goods from the loading thereof on board the “ said ship at Canton, in China, &c. and upon the “ said ship from and immediately following her “ arrival at Canton in China, valued at 26,000 l. “ being the amount of captain Patrick Lawson’s “ common bond, payable to the parties, as shall “ be described on the back of this policy; and “ it bears date the 16th day of December 1775; “ and in case of loss, no other proof of interest to be “ required than the exhibition of the said bond: “ warranted free from average, and without benefit of salvage to the insurer.”

At the head of the subscriptions was written, “ On a bond as above expressed.” Captain Lawson sailed from China, and arrived safe with his privilege (as it is called) or adventure, in London, on the 1st of July 1777, none of the events insured against having happened. The receipt of the premium was acknowledged on the back of the policy.

policy. This case came before the court upon an action for a return of premium, on the ground that, the policy being without interest, the contract was void. This case, as far as it relates to the question of return of premium, will be considered in a future chapter: but in the course of the discussion, it became necessary to determine, whether the policy, just recited, was good within the statute. At the trial, which came on at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1780, the Chief Justice was of opinion, that this was a gaming policy, prohibited by the statute of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. and a verdict was given for the defendant. His lordship, however, having expressed a doubt upon the propriety of his opinion on other points of the cause, a motion for a new trial was afterwards made, and all the questions came to be debated before the court: when the majority of the judges confirmed Lord Mansfield's first direction upon all the points. It is true Mr. Justice Willes differed from his brethren upon that occasion; the learned judge being of opinion, upon the question relating to our present enquiry, that this was not a gaming policy: that it did not appear to him, that the parties had any idea they were entering into an illegal contract: that the whole was disclosed, and they thought there was an interest; this was a mistake; but it is a new point of law.

The three other judges supported their opinions upon the following grounds.

Lord Mansfield.—It is certainly true, in many instances, that first thoughts are best. I am now very much inclined to my first opinion. There are two sorts of policies of insurance; mercantile and gaming policies. The first sort are contracts of indemnity, and of indemnity only; and from that principle a great variety of decisions and consequences have followed. The second sort may be the same in form; but in them there is no contract of indemnity, because there is no interest terest upon which a loss can accrue. They are mere games of hazard, like the cast of a die. In the present case, the nature of the insurance is known to both parties. The plaintiffs say, "We mean to game; but we give our reason for it; captain Lawson owes us a sum of money, and we want to be secure in case he should not be in a situation to pay us." It was a hedge. But they had no interest; for if the ship had been lost, and the underwriters had paid, still the plaintiffs would have been entitled to recover the amount of the bond from Lawson. This then is a gaming policy; and against an act of parliament.

Mr. Justice Asbhurst.—A policy of insurance ought to be a mere contract of indemnity, and nothing more; but here the money might have been paid twice, which shews decisively that this was a gaming policy.

Mr. Justice Buller.—It is very clear to me that the plaintiffs ought not to recover. There was no fraud on the part of the underwriters, nor any mistake in matter of fact. If the law was mistaken, the rule applies, that ignorantia juris non excusat. This was a mere gaming policy without interest. Agreeably to this opinion, the rule for a new trial was discharged.

The second section of the act in question, which allows of insurances being made on private ships of war, interest or no interest, seems sufficiently clear, and requires no explanation.

The third section, by which insurances upon any merchandizes or effects from any ports or places in Europe or America, in the possession of the crowns of Spain or Portugal may be effected in the manner practised before this act was passed, seems to be obscurely worded. The learned commentator upon the law of England observes, that the reason of this proviso is sufficiently obvious. Notwithstanding this authority, in order to comprehend the meaning of the legislature,

Mr. Justice
Blackstone,
2. vol. Com.
460.

legislature, we must observe, that the trade from Spain and Portugal to their respective colonies and establishments in South America, and the returns thereof, can only be carried on by their own subjects; and all other persons are prohibited from that trade by positive regulations of these respective states. The consequence of such a prohibition is, that all the goods and merchandizes, which the subjects of this and other countries export from Spain and Portugal, must be in the names of Spanish subjects. So that it was absolutely necessary to make this exception; (for no other proof, but the policy itself can be brought) otherwise all insurances upon that branch of trade must have been entirely void. The words, however, seem to allow a greater latitude than was meant by the legislature in making such a provision: for by adverting merely to the words, insurances from any ports or places in Europe or America, belonging to Spain and Portugal to England or other ports of Europe may be made, as if this act had never passed. Whereas by attending to the prohibition of trade just mentioned to any but the subjects of Spain and Portugal, as the commerce between these colonies and the parent countries can only be carried on by subjects, it is evident, that the legislature intended rather to have said, that insurances on goods from ports belonging to Spain and Portugal in Europe to any ports in America belonging to those courts; and from such ports in America to such ports or places in Europe, shall be valid and effectual contracts, than to authorize insurances from the dominions of Spain and Portugal in Europe or America, to whatsoever place in the world the ship, in which these goods are to be carried, may happen to be destined. The words, however, certainly admit of that broad construction; for the place of destination is not ascertained.

Upon this section of the act, it may be observed, that the equitable construction of such contracts contracts of insurance as are protected by it, seems to be, that they may be made without interest, notwithstanding the case of Goddard v. Garrett, above cited: since in such instances it is impossible for the person insured to bring any certain proof of interest on board. V. ante p. 297.

Hitherto we have spoken merely of that part of this very salutary act, which requires, that every person making such a contract, should have an interest in that, which is the object of the insurance. Another part of it still claims our attention, that which prohibits re-assurances. What a re-assurance is; in what cases it is prohibited; and when it is allowable, will form the subject of the following chapter.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

Of Re-Assurance : and Double Insurance.

RE-ASSURANCE, as understood by the law of England, may be said to be a contract, which the first insurer enters into, in order to relieve himself from those risks which he has incautiously undertaken, by throwing them upon other underwriters, who are called re-assurers. This species of contract has obtained a place in most of the commercial systems of the trading powers of Europe; and is allowed by them at this day to be politick and legal. The learned Roccus has decided expressly in favour of it; and has cited many respectable authorities in support of his opinion. “Assecurator, post factam asseductionem, potest se assedurari facere ab alio asseduratore, et iste secundus assedurator tenetur pro asseduratione factâ a primo, et ad sol-vendum

*Roccus de Assedur. Not.
12.*

Le Guidon.
c. 2. art. 19.

Ord. Lewis
14. tit. Assur.
art. 20.

2 Mag. 190.
233, 419.

1 Emerigon.
p. 247.

Pothier, tit.
Assurance.
No. 96.

“ vendum omne totum, quod primus affecurator “ solverit, et ista secunda affecuratio valet.” By the ancient law of France such assurances were reckoned valid, and perfectly consistent with equity and good conscience. The author of the Guidon observes, that if it so happen that the insurers, after underwriting the policy, repent of their engagement, or are afraid to encounter the risk, they are at liberty to re-insure; but still they cannot prevent the insured from making his demand upon them in case of loss, for having, by their signature, promised indemnity, they cannot, by any protestations to the contrary, discharge themselves from their responsibility, without the consent of the insured. Lewis the Fourteenth, when, by the assistance of the famous Colbert, he promulgated those ordinances, which will be a lasting honour to the French nation, adopted the idea that prevailed when the Guidon was written: for by an article in that celebrated code of laws, he expressly declared, “ that it “ should be lawful to the insurers to make re“ assurance with other men of those effects, which “ they had themselves previously insured.” It is not in France alone that this law prevails; for by the positive and express regulations and ordinances of Koningsberg, Hamburg, and Bilboa, re-assurances are allowed to be effected, and consequently are lawful contracts.

By the passage cited from the Guidon it might be observed, that it was a distinguishing character of this species of contract, that notwithstanding a re-insurance, the first contract subsists as at first, without change or amendment. The re-insurer is wholly unconnected with the original owner of the property insured; and as there was no obligation between them originally, so none is raised by the subsequent act of the first under-writer. The risks of the insurer form the object of the reinsurance, which is a new independant contract, not at all concerning the insured; who confe-

consequently can exercise no power or authority with respect to it.

Agreeably to the laws of those countries just referred to, and consistently with the opinions of those respectable writers, whose works we have had such frequent occasion to mention, the law of England adopted their regulations, and permitted the underwriters upon policies to insure themselves against those risks for which they had inadvertently engaged to indemnify the insured; or where perhaps they had involved themselves to a greater amount, than their ability would enable them to discharge. Although such a contract seems perfectly fair and reasonable in itself, and might be productive of very beneficial consequences to those concerned in this important branch of trade; yet, like many other useful institutions, it was so much abused, and turned to purposes so pernicious to a commercial nation, and so destructive of those very benefits it was originally intended to promote and encourage, that the legislature was at last obliged to interpose, and by a positive law to cut off all opportunity of practising those frauds in future, which were become thus glaring and enormous.

Accordingly by the fourth section of that statute, which formed the subject of the preceding chapter, it was enacted, “that it should not be “lawful to make RE-ASSURANCE, unless the “assurer should be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die; in either of which cases, such “assurer, his executors, administrators, or assigns, might make re-assurance, to the amount “before by him assured, provided it should be “expressed in the policy to be a re-assurance.”

19 Geo. 2.
c. 37. s. 4

From this act it is apparent, that all kinds of re-assurance are not prohibited; but wherever such a contract tends to the advancement of commerce, or to the real benefit of an individual, in such case it shall be permitted. Thus in case of insolvency or bankruptcy, it is advantageous to the
 the

the creditors in general, as well as to the individual, that a re-assurance should be made : for by these means the fund of the bankrupt's estate is not diminished in case of loss, and the insured has a better security for the payment of the amount of his damage, or at least a proportion of it. (a) If the insurer die, it is no less necessary

19 Geo. 2.
c. 32. s. 2.

(a) Formerly, if an underwriter became a bankrupt after he had subscribed the policy, and before a loss happened, the insured was not entitled to a dividend out of the bankrupt's estate. This being found a heavy inconvenience, and a discouragement to trade, parliament was obliged to interpose, and to alter the law in this respect. The statute recited, " that merchants and traders frequently lend money on bottomry, or at respondentia, and in the course of their trade, frequently cause their ships or vessels, and the goods and merchandizes loaded thereon, to be insured; and that where commissions of bankruptcy have issued against the obligor in such bottomry or respondentia bond, or the underwriter, or assurer in such assurance, before the loss of the ship or goods, in such bond or policy of insurance mentioned, had happened, it had been made a question, whether the obligee or obligees in such bond, or the assured in such policy of insurance, should be let in to prove their debts, or be admitted to have any benefit or dividend under such commission, which might be a discouragement to trade." It was therefore enacted, " that the obligee in any bottomry, or respondentia bond, and the assured in any policy of insurance, made and entered into, upon a good and valuable consideration, bonâ fide, should be admitted to claim; and after the loss or contingency should have happened, to prove his, her, or their debt and demands, in respect of such bond or policy of insurance, in like manner as if the loss or contingency had happened before the time of the issuing of such commission of bankruptcy against such obligor or insurer; and should be entitled unto, and should have and receive, a proportionable part, share, and dividend of such bankrupt's estate, in proportion to the other creditors of such bankrupt, in like manner, as if such loss or contingency had happened before such commission issued: and that all and every person and persons, against whom any commission of bankruptcy should be awarded, should be discharged of and from the debt or debts, owing by him, her, or them, on every such bond and policy of insurance as aforesaid, and should have

"the

sary and beneficial to his successors, that there should be a re-assurance, than it was in the former case of a bankruptcy: because it will provide assets to satisfy the insured in case a loss should happen, and thus secure the estate of the deceased for the benefit of his heirs. Indeed, in both cases, the intention of the legislature seems to have been, to provide a fund for the payment of that proportion, which, in case of an insolvency, the insured will have a right to demand, in common with the other creditors; and for the payment of the whole, without prejudice to the heir, even in cases where the ancestor, at the time of his death, was in solvent circumstances.

There is another species of re-assurance allowed by the laws of France, as established by an ordinance of Lewis the Fourteenth, which was also taken from that ancient and excellent French treatise, that has been so frequently mentioned. By this regulation, it is declared lawful for the assured to insure the solvency of the underwriter. By these means, the person insured gets rid of those fears, which he may have conceived concerning the ability of the insurers to pay, and he gains a second security to answer for the sufficiency of the first. But it is not to France alone that this kind of contract is restrained; for by the positive laws of many other maritime states, such re-assurances are valid and binding contracts. The English statute, which has been the subject of this and the preceding chapter, takes no express notice of this sort of insurance; because in truth, I believe, it never was very much in practice in England: but, however, it seems clear, that such

Le Guidon
c. 2. art. 20.

Ord. of Lewis
14. tit. Assu.
art. 20.

2 Mag. 190,
419.

“ the benefit of the several statutes now in force against “ bankrupts, in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as “ if such loss or contingency had happened, and the money “ due in respect thereof had become payable, before the time “ of the issuing out the commission.”

a cir-

a circumstance, as the solvency of the underwriter, is not an insurable interest; that a policy opened upon such an event would be treated as a wager-policy; and would consequently fall within the statute of George the Second, which declares all policies, made by way of gaming or wagering, to be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

Double Insurance.

1 Burr. 496.

19 Geo. 2.
c. 37. s. 4.

1 Black. Rep.
416.

1 Burr. 492.

Having said thus much of re-assurances, I shall proceed to consider the nature of a double insurance, and to state the few cases that have been determined upon the subject. I treat of it in this place, because these two kinds of insurance have been sometimes confounded together, and supposed to mean the same thing: whereas no two ideas can be more distinct. We have already seen what is meant by a re-assurance. A double insurance is where the same man is to receive two sums instead of one, or the same sum twice over, for the same loss, by reason of his having made two insurances upon the same goods or the same ship. The first distinction between these two contracts is, that a re-assurance is a contract made by the first underwriter, his executors, or assigns; to secure himself, or his estate: a double insurance is entered into by the insured. A re-assurance, except in the cases provided for by the statute, is absolutely void: a double insurance is not void; but still the insured shall recover only one satisfaction for his loss. This requires explanation. Where a man has made a double insurance, he may recover his loss, against which of the underwriters he pleases, but he can recover for no more than the amount of his loss. This depends upon the nature of an insurance, and the great principles of justice and good faith. An insurance is merely a contract of indemnity, in case of loss; it follows as a necessary consequence that a man shall not recover more than he has lost, or recover a satisfaction greater than the injury he has sustained. This rule was wisely established established, in order to prevent fraud, lest the desire of gain should occasion unfair and wilful losses. It being thus settled, that the insured shall recover but one satisfaction, and that, in case of a double insurance, he may fix upon which of the underwriters he will for the payment of his loss, it is a principle of natural justice that the several insurers should all of them contribute in their several proportions, to satisfy that loss, against which they have all insured.

These principles have been fully declared to be law in several cases, which are now to be mentioned.

In the year 1763, it was ruled by Lord Mansfield, Chief Justice, and agreed to be the course of practice, that upon a double insurance, though the insured is not entitled to two satisfactions; yet, upon the first action he may recover the whole sum insured, and may leave the defendant therein, to recover a ratable satisfaction from the other insurers.

Newby v. Reed. Sit. in London in Easter Vacat. 1763. 1 Black. Rep. 416.

Thus also it was determined in a subsequent case at Guildhall. It was an action on a policy of insurance on a ship from Newfoundland to Dominica, and from thence to the port of discharge in the West Indies. It was a valued policy on the ship and freight; and on the goods as interest should appear. The ship sailed from St. John's the 17th of December, 1775, and the plaintiff declared as for a total loss. The defendant underwrote for 200 l. and has paid into court 124 l. This sum was paid on a supposition, that the underwriters on a former policy should bear a share of the loss. The plaintiff had originally insured at Liverpool on a voyage from Newfoundland to Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands, with an exception of American captures: but the plaintiff afterwards, for the purpose of securing himself against captures, and having altered the course of his voyage, made the present insurance. The plaintiff now insisted he was entitled to receive the full amount of his insurance against the de-defendant, and not to any part from the Liverpool underwriters, because the voyage now insured was different from that insured at Liverpool. There was, however, a verdict for the plaintiff for his full demand, with liberty for the defendant to bring an action against the Liverpool underwriters, if he thought fit.

Rogers v. Davis. Sittings in Mich. Vac. 17 Geo. 3. before Lord Mansfield.

Davis v.
Gildart. Sittings in East.
Vac. 17 Geo.
3 at Guildhall.

Accordingly in the Easter term following, an action was brought for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff, who was the defendant in the last cause, in order to recover a contribution for the loss which the plaintiff had been obliged to pay. It was agreed by both parties to admit, that on the London policy (which was the subject of the former action) 2200*l.* were insured; that on the two Liverpool policies 1700*l.* were insured: that the merchant was interested to the amount of 500*l.* on the ship; 300*l.* on the freight; and 1400*l.* on the cargo. That the plaintiff had paid 200*l.* loss, and 47*l.* for the costs. The question was, whether the defendant was liable to contribute any thing, and what. The whole interest was 2200*l.* and the whole insurance was 3900*l.* It was insisted by the counsel for the defendant, that the insurance in London was an illegal re-assurance; and therefore the plaintiff might have made a good defence in an action brought against him: and if so, he could not now recover over against the defendant.

Lord Mansfield.—The question seems to be whether the insured has not two securities for the loss that has happened. If so, can there be a doubt that he may bring his action against either? It is like the case of two securities; where, if all the money be recovered against one of them, he may recover a proportion from the other. Then this would bring it to the question, whether the second insurance is void as a re-assurance. But a re-assurance is a contract made by the insurer to secure himself; and this is only a double insurance. There was another ground taken in the cause, which is not material to be mentioned here: but upon this direction, the plaintiff had a verdict.
was

Although a man, by making a double insurance, shall not be allowed to recover a double satisfaction for the same loss; yet various persons may insure various interests on the same thing, and each to the whole value (as the master for wages; the owner for freight; one person for goods, another for bottomry) and such a contract does not fall within the idea of a double insurance. There is a full case upon this subject, and a very elaborate argument of Lord Mansfield, in delivering the judgment of the whole court of King's Bench, in which most of the questions relative to double insurances are clearly and decisively settled. In this cause the question was, whether the plaintiff ought to recover his whole loss, or only a half; it being objected that there was a double insurance. A verdict was found for the whole, subject to the opinion of the court upon Lord Mansfield's report.

1 Burr. 496.

Godin and Others v.
The London
Assu. Comp.
1 Burr. 489.
1 Black. Rep.
103.

Lord Mansfield, in delivering the opinion of the court, began, by stating the facts, as they appeared to him at the trial.

Mr. Meybobm of St. Petersburg had dealings with Mr. Amyand and Company of London, who often sent ships from London to Mr. Meybobm at St. Petersburg. Meybobm, as appeared by the evidence, was indebted, on the balance of their accounts, to Amyand and Company. Amyand and Company sent a ship, called the Galloway, Stephen Barker, master, to Mr. Meybobm at St. Petersburg, to fetch certain goods. Meybobm sent the goods, and promised to send the bill of lading by the next post, but never did. Afterwards, in August 1756, Amyand and Company got a policy of insurance from private underwriters, for 100*l.* on the ship, tackle, and goods, at and from London to St. Petersburg, and at and from thence back again to London: which policy was signed by several private underwriters, quite different persons from the present defendants; and of this sum of 1100*l.* thus underwritten, 500*l.* was declared to be on $\frac{1}{2}$ parts of the ship, and the remaining 600*l.* to be on goods. Between the 26th of August and the 28th of September 1756 (both included) Mr. Amyand insured 800*l.* more, with other private insurers: and this latter insurance was upon goods only: and was only at and from St. Petersburg to London. On the 28th, 29th, and 30th of October 1756, Mr. Amyand insured 900*l.* more with other private insurers: which last insurance was on goods only, at and from the Sound to London. So that the whole sum insured by Amyand and Company was 2800*l.* of which the sum of 2300*l.* was on goods, and the remaining sum of 500*l.* was on the ship. Several letters being given in evidence, it appeared that Meybohm wrote from Petersburg on the 7th of September 1756 (the date of his first letter on this subject) to Amyand and Company; and mentioned what goods he should send to them, referring to the invoice for particulars; and directed them to get insurance thereon, and to place the goods and the insurance to a particular account which he named in his letter; in which he also specified some iron, which was for Mr. Amyand's own account. This letter Mr. Amyand afterwards received (probably about the 27th of October) and in consequence of it, made the insurance accordingly, upon the 28th, 29th, and 30th of the same October, as before mentioned. Meybohm, having shipped the goods, indorsed the bills of lading to one Mr. John Tamez in Moscow (the plaintiff, in effect, in the present action) who, on the 7th of October 1756, wrote to his correspondent Mr. Uhtboff here in London to insure these goods. In this letter, he desires Mr. Uhtboff to insure the whole, that he (Tamez) might be safe in all events; for he suspected that these goods were intended to be consigned by

Meybohm

Meybohm to somebody else, and perhaps might be insured by some other persons. And he says, they were transferred to him, in consideration of his being in advance to Meybohm more than their amount. This letter from Mr. Tamez, with these directions to insure, was received by Mr. Ubtboff, on the 15th of November 1756. Mr. Ubtboff accordingly applied to the defendants, the London Assurance Company; and disclosed to them, at the same time, all these particulars: and they, upon the 16th of November 1756, after being thus apprised, that there might be another insurance, made the insurance now in question, for 2316 l. on the goods at and from the Sound to London. The goods were lost in the voyage. Mr. Ubtboff's insurance was made by the plaintiffs Godin, Guion and Company, who are insurance brokers: and they declare that this insurance was made by order of Henry Ubtboff Esq. This declaration is indorsed upon the policy, and is dated the 18th of November 1756. There is no doubt as to the value of the goods, or as to the loss of them. It is admitted by the defendants, that the plaintiffs ought to recover half the loss from them: but they say, they ought to pay only half, not the whole of the loss. So that the only question is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled, upon the circumstances of this case, and upon the facts I have been stating, to recover the whole loss from the present defendants; or only the half of his loss from them, and the remainder from the underwriters of Mr. Amyand's policy. The verdict is found for the plaintiff, for the whole: but it is agreed to be subject to the opinion of this court, upon the question I have just mentioned.

First, to consider it as between the insurer and insured. As between them, and upon the foot of commutative justice merely, there is no colour why the insurers should not pay the insureds the whole: for they have received a premium for the risk. Before the introduction of wagering policies, it was upon principles of convenience very wisely established, that a man should not recover more than he had lost. Insurance was considered as an indemnity only, in case of a loss; and therefore the insurance ought not to exceed the loss. This rule was calculated to prevent fraud; lest the temptation of gain should occasion unfair and wilful losses. If the insured is to receive but one satisfaction, natural justice says that the several insurers shall all of them contribute pro rata, to satisfy that loss, against which they have all insured. No particular cases are to be found, on this head: or, at least, none have been cited by the counsel on either side. Where a man makes a double insurance of the same thing, in such a manner that he can clearly recover against several insurers in distinct policies a double satisfaction, the law certainly says that he ought not to recover doubly for the same loss, but be content with one single satisfaction for it. And if the same man really and for his own proper account insures the same goods doubly, though both insurances be not made in his own name, but one or both of them in the name of another person, yet that is just the same thing; for the same person is to have the benefit of both policies. And if the whole should be recovered from one, he ought to stand in the place of the insured, to receive contribution from the other, who was equally liable to pay the whole. But in this case if Tamez was not to have the benefit of both policies in all events, then it can never be considered as a double policy.

It has been said, that the indorsement of the bills of lading transferred Meybohm's interest in all policies, by which the cargo assigned was insured; and therefore Tamez has a right to Mr. Amyand's policy: and that Tamez, being the assignee of Meybohm, is the cestuy qui trust of it, and may recover the money insured; and even that he

he may bring trover, or detinue, for the very policy itself: and it is urged from hence, that he either will, or may, have a double satisfaction for the same loss.

But allowing that, by the indorsement of the bills of lading and assigning the cargo to Tamez, he stands in the place of Meybohm in respect of his insurances; yet Mr. Amyand has an interest of his own, and had actually insured the ship and goods, to the amount of 1900*l.* (upon both together) prior to any directions or intimation received from Mr. Meybohm, to insure for him. Various people may insure various interests on the same bottom: (as one person for goods; another for bottomry, &c.) And here, Mr. Amyand had an interest of his own, distinct from that of Mr. Meybohm: he had a lien upon these very goods as a factor to whom a balance was due. And he had the sole interest in the ship; which was a part of the things insured by him. It is far from appearing, that even his last insurance (in October) was made on the account of Meybohm, or as agent for him. So far from it, Mr. Amyand insists upon it for his own benefit, (as he expressly declared at the trial) and absolutely refuses to give it up, or to suffer his name to be used by the plaintiff; though he was a witness for the defendants, and was produced by them, and inclined to serve them. So that the foundation of this argument, urged by the defendant's counsel, fails them; and there is, in reality, nothing to support it. But even supposing that Mr. Amyand had made his insurance, not upon his own account, but as agent or factor for Mr. Meybohm, and upon the account of Meybohm; yet even then Tamez can never come against Amyand's underwriters, or come at Amyand's policy, to his own use. For Amyand, the factor of Meybohm, has possession of the policy, and appears to have been a creditor of Meybohm upon the balance of accounts between them, at the time when he made the insurance: and I take it to be now a settled point, “that a factor, “to whom a balance is due, has a lien upon all “goods of his principal, so long as they remain “in his possession.” Kruzer and others v. Wilcox and others, was a case in Chancery upon this point. It came on first before Sir John Strange, then Master of the Rolls, who decreed an account, and directed allowances to be made for what the factor had expended on account of the ship or cargo, and reserved all further directions till after the master’s report. It came on again, afterwards, for further directions, after the master’s report, before the Lord Chancellor, who was attended by four eminent merchants, whom he interrogated publicly. After which he took time to consider of it; and on the first of February 1755, decreed, “that the factor has a lien “on goods consigned to him; not only for incident charges, but as an item of mutual account “for the general balance due to him so long as he “retains the possession. But if he part with the “possession of the goods, he parts with his lien; “because it cannot then be retained as an item “for the general account.” There was another case, in the same court, of Gardiner v. Coleman, a few months after; in which the former case, determined as I have mentioned, was considered as a point settled; and this latter case of Gardiner v. Coleman was decreed agreeably to it. So that Mr. Amyand, even considered as factor or agent to Meybohm, and as making the insurance upon Meybohm’s account, is yet entitled to retain the policy; Meybohm being indebted to him upon the balance of the account between them; and he has a lien upon the policy, whilst it continues in his possession. Therefore, even in this view of the case, Mr. Tamez must first have paid to Amyand the balance of his (Amyand’s) account, before he could have gotten that policy out of Amyand’s hands; and consequently, Mr. Tamez was was very far from being entitled to the benefit of it as a cestuy qui trust, absolutely and entirely.

But if the question, "whether Tamefz could take benefit of Mr. Amyand's policy," were doubtful; yet here, Tamefz insured the goods with the defendants, expressly under the declaration of his suspicion, that there might have been a former consignment, and some former insurance made upon the goods by some other person: but he desired to insure the whole for his own security; and to this the defendants agreed, and took the whole premium. Mr. Amyand insisted upon his right to the whole benefit of his own policy, when he was examined as a witness; and is now litigating it in Chancery. It would neither be just nor reasonable, that Tamefz should only recover half of his loss from the defendants, and be turned round for the other half, to the uncertain event of a long and expensive litigation. I do not believe there ever will or can be a recovery by Tamefz, or those who shall stand in his place, against Amyand's underwriters. However, if those underwriters are liable to contribute at all, the contribution ought to be among the several insurers themselves: but Tamefz, the insured, has a right to recover his whole loss from the defendants, upon the policy now in question, by which they are bound to pay the whole. For though here be two insurances, yet it is not a double insurance: to call it so is only confounding terms. If Tamefz could recover against both sets of insurers, yet he certainly could not recover against the underwriters of Amyand's policy, without some expence; nor without also first paying and reimbursing to Mr. Amyand the premium he paid, and also his charges. This is by no means within the idea of a double insurance. Two persons may insure two different interests; each to the whole value; as the master, for wages; the owner, for freight, &c. But a double insurance is where the same man is to receive two sums instead of one, one, or the same sum twice over, for the same loss, by reason of his having made two insurances upon the same goods, or the same ship. Mr. Tametz is entitled to receive the whole from the defendants, upon their policy; whatever shall become of Mr. Amyand's policy: and they will have a right in case he can claim any thing under Mr. Amyand's policy, to stand in his place, for a contribution to be paid by the other underwriters to them. But still they are certainly obliged to pay the whole to him. Therefore upon these grounds and principles, in every light in which the case can be put, we are all of us clearly of opinion, that the verdict is right, as it now stands for the whole; and that the postea must be delivered to the plaintiff.

Ord. of Mid-dleb. 2 Mag.
p. 77.
Ord. of Fran.
and Stockh.
2 Mag. 172;
267.
Ord. of Bil-
boa, 2 Mag.
p. 411.

In the course of what has been said upon double insurance, no notice has been taken of the laws of foreign states respecting that point: the reason of this silence is the great contrariety to be found in their laws upon the subject; it being almost impossible to mention two countries, whose regulations, as to this matter, are similar. In one the contract is absolutely void, and a forfeiture ensues: in others, if the first policy amount to the value of the effects laden, the other insurers shall withdraw their insurance, retaining one half per cent. and in some other countries, the double insurance is merely void, without any forfeiture being incurred. When there is such a diversity in the ordinances upon the subject, it seemed needless to enter into them, especially as the law of England with respect to double insurance is so clear, and so well founded in reason and natural justice, as to require no illustration or confirmation from the laws of any other country.

Having, in this and the five preceding chapters, treated of those circumstances; by which the contract of insurance is rendered void from its commencement, on account of some radical defect, which prevents the policy from ever having any operation at all : and having, in the course of that enquiry, been led into a variety of discussion, involving in it a very material part of the law of insurance: we shall proceed to shew in what cases the policy, although not void ab initio, is rendered of no effect, because the insured has not himself fully complied with those conditions, which he has either expressly, or tacitly, from the nature of his contract, undertaken to perform. It was indeed observed in the first chapter of this work, that al- Vide ante, though the policy is not subscribed by the in- P. 1. insured, yet there are certain conditions to be performed on his part, with as much good faith and integrity as if his name appeared at the foot of the policy ; otherwise it is a dead letter, and he can never recover an indemnity for any loss, which he may happen to sustain.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

Of Changing the Ship.

OF those causes, which will operate as a bar to the insured's recovering upon a policy of insurance, against the underwriter, the first to be mentioned is that of changing the ship ; or, as it has commonly been called, changing the bottom. This will require but very little discussion. We formerly said, that except in some spe- Vide ante, cial cases of insurances upon ship or ships, it was c. 1. essentially requisite to render a policy of insurance effectual, that the name of the ship, on which the risk was to be run, should be inserted. That being done, it follows as an implied condition that the insured shall neither substitute another ship for for that mentioned in the policy before the voyage commences, in which case there would be no contract at all : nor during the course of the voyage remove the property insured to another ship, without the consent of the underwriter. If he do, the implied condition is broken, and he cannot recover a satisfaction, in case of a loss, from the insurer ; because the policy was upon goods, on board a particular ship, or upon the ship itself ; and it becomes a material consideration in a contract of insurance, upon what vessel the risk is to be run ; since the one may be much stronger, and more able to resist the perils of the sea ; or by its swift sailing, much better able to escape from the pursuit of an enemy, than the other.

Mal, Lex.
Merc. 118.

Malynes, it is true, in his Lex Mercatoria, appears to be of a different opinion ; for he says, “ It sometimes happens, that upon some special consideration, this clause forbidding the transferring of goods from one ship to another is inserted in policies of assurance ; because in time of hostility or war between princes, it might be unladen, in such ships of those contending princes, by which the adventure would be increased. But according to the usual insurances which are made generally without any exception, the assurer is liable thereunto ; for it is understood, that the master of a ship, without some good and accidental cause, would not put the goods from one ship to another, but would deliver them, according to the charter-party, at the appointed place.”

The reason given by Malynes, in support of his position, is by no means satisfactory, nor is it well founded in point of experience : neither has he adduced a single authority to corroborate the opinion advanced. Indeed, the whole current of authority turns the other way : at least, as far as I have been able to trace it.

Molloy, l. 2.
c. 7. s. 11.

Molloy has said, that if goods are insured in such a ship, and afterwards in the voyage she becomes becomes leaky and crazy, and the supercargo and master, by consent, become freighters of another vessel for the safe delivery of the goods; and then after she is loaded, the second vessel miscarries, the assurers are discharged. It is true, the sentence proceeds thus: "If these words be inserted, namely, the goods laden to be transported and delivered at such a place by the said ship, or by any other ship or vessel, until they be safely landed, the insurers must answer the misfortune." But this does not at all affect the general rule before laid down; for it only goes to shew that, which is not denied, that the parties may take a case out of the general rule of law, by a special agreement: and the exception proves the truth of the first proposition.

This opinion is confirmed by foreign writers. "Merces si eâdem navigatione transferantur de unâ navi in aliam, et si novissima navis, ubi merces transfusæ fuerunt, deperdatur, tunc est inspicienda forma assécurationis, in quâ si fuit dictum, quod assécurentur merces, quæ sunt in tali navi, tunc assécutor non tenetur, eo quod mentionem fecit in assécuratione de tali navi. Et ratio est, quia non par est ratio assécurationis, quando merces debebuntur in una navi, et quando in alterâ; imo solet id principaliter considerari inter ipsos assécutores, cum una navis sit magis fortis quam alia." Roccus is corroborated by several learned writers upon this branch of jurisprudence.

Roccus de
Assécurat.
Not. 28.

In the law of England, there is only one case to be met with in print upon the subject; and that is not expressly in point to the present enquiry, although it seems to decide it. It was a case which came on at Guildhall before Lord Chief Justice Lee. The plaintiff had insured interest or no interest on any ship he should come in from Virginia to London, beginning the adventure on his embarking on board such ship; the money to be paid, though his person should escape,

Santer. de
Assécurat.
p. 3. n. 35.
Stracca glos.
8. n. 10.

Dick v.
Barrell.
2 Stra. 1248.

escape, or the ship be retaken. He embarked on the Speedwell; but she springing a leak at sea, he went on board the Friendship, and arrived safe at London; but the Speedwell was taken after he left her. And now in an action against the underwriter, he was held liable; for the insurance is on the ship the plaintiff set out in: and bad that got safe home, and the other been lost, the plaintiff could not have recovered upon the ground of having removed his person into that ship in the middle of the voyage.

From this case it appears, that although no ship was named in the policy, yet the moment the ship was ascertained by the embarkation of the insured, the contract was at an end, provided the second ship had been lost; for so the words in Italicks expressly import. A fortiori, therefore, the insured could not be entitled to recover, upon a change of the bottom, when the name of the vessel is expressly mentioned in the very instrument by which the contract is effected. And although the insured, notwithstanding the change of bottom, recovered in the case cited from Strange; it may be accounted for in two ways, consistent with the doctrine advanced in this chapter. In the first place, it was a gaming policy, interest or no interest; and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the moment the ship was taken, although he might perhaps not be interested at all: or perhaps the effects insured might be left in the first ship, although the plaintiff removed his person; in which case, even at this day, upon a fair bond fide policy, he would be entitled to recover from the underwriters a satisfaction for the loss he had sustained.

The general doctrine relative to changing the bottom of the ship was alluded to by Lord Mansfield, when delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Pelly against the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, which has already been fully reported in a preceding chapter. "One "objection,"

“ objection,” said his Lordship, “ was formed “ by comparing this case to that of changing
 “ the ship or bottom, on board of which goods “ are insured: which the insured have no right to “ do. For there the identical ship is essential; “ that is the thing insured. But that case is not “ like the present.”

From this passage it is evident, that Lord Mansfield intended to confirm the principle advanced in this chapter, namely, that when an insurance is made on a specific ship, and the insured, without the consent of the underwriter, changes the ship in the course of the voyage, he has not kept his part of the contract, and cannot recover against the underwriter.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEENTH.

Of Deviation.

DEVIAION, in marine insurances, is understood to mean a voluntary departure, without necessity or any reasonable cause, from the regular and usual course of the specifick voyage insured. Whenever a deviation of this kind takes place, the voyage is determined; and the underwriters are discharged from any responsibility. It is necessary, as we have seen, to insert Vide ante in every policy of insurance, the place of the c. 1. ship's departure, and also of her destination. Hence, it is an implied condition to be performed on the part of the insured, that the ship shall pursue the most direct course, of which the nature of things will admit, to arrive at the destined port. If this be not done; if there be no special agreement to allow the ship to go to certain places out

Roccus Not.
52.

Doug. Rep.
278.

out of the usual track ; or if there be no just cause assigned for such a deviation ; it is but just and reasonable, that the underwriter should no longer be bound by his contract, the insured having failed to comply with the terms, on which the policy was made. For if the voyage be changed after the departure of the ship, it becomes a different voyage, and not that, against which the insurer has undertaken to indemnify : (which is the true objection to a deviation) the risk may be ten times greater, which probably the insurer would not have run at all, or at least would not, without a larger premium. Nor is it at all material, whether the loss be or be not an actual consequence of the deviation ; for the insurers are in no case answerable, for a subsequent loss, in whatever place it happen, or to whatever cause it may be attributed. Neither does it make any difference, whether the insured was, or was not, consenting to the deviation:

These principles have been established by many decisions in the various courts of Westminster Hall, and also by a solemn determination in the House of Lords.

Fox v. Black.
Exeter assizes
1767, before
Mr. Justice
Yates.

The plaintiff was a shipper of goods in a vessel bound from Dartmouth to Liverpool : the ship sailed from Dartmouth, and put into Loo ; a place she must of necessity pass by, in the course of the insured voyage. But as she had no liberty given her by the policy to go into Loo, and although no accident befel her in going into, or coming out of Loo, (for she was lost after she got out to sea again) yet Mr. Justice Yates held that this was a deviation, and a verdict was accordingly found for the underwriters.

Townson v.
Guyon, before Lord
Mansfield.

In another case, an action was brought upon a policy on goods and merchandizes loaded on board the ship, called the Charming Nancy, from Dunkirk to Leghorn. The ship came to Dover in her way to procure a Mediterranean pass ; and was afterwards lost.

Lord

Lord Mansfield was of opinion, that the calling at Dover was a deviation ; and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

It was also held by Lord Chief Justice Lee, that if the master of a vessel put into a port not usual, or stay an unusual time, it is a deviation, and discharges the insurer.

The next case to be reported underwent a variety of discussion in the several courts in Scotland ; and in all of them, judgment was given against the underwriters : but upon an appeal to the House of Lords, the various decrees of the courts below were reversed, agreeably to those principles adduced in the beginning of this chapter, and which have been uniformly admitted as sound law.

The harbour of Carron, situate near the head of the Firth of Forth, is chiefly resorted to by ships in the service of the Carron Company, who have a great iron work and considerable collieries in the neighbourhood. From thence vessels, intended principally to convey the manufactures of the company, their coals, and such goods as may be offered them on freight, sail periodically for Hull, and other places on the Eastern coast of England. This is a coasting or carrying trade, the vessels in going down the Firth touching at different places to take in additional loading, or to discharge part of what they have received at places higher in the river. Particularly it is usual for these vessels to call at Borrowstones and Leith, and at Morrison's Haven, a port six miles farther down the Firth, and on the same side with Leith in the bay of Prestonpans. In February 1774, the respondents had occasion to ship fourteen hogsheads of tobacco, on board one of these vessels for Hull ; and desiring to insure them, gave the following instructions in writing to Hamilton and Bogle, insurance brokers in Glasgow : “ Please “ to insure for our account by the Kingston, “ George Finlay, master, from Carron to Hull, Z “ with

Elliot and Others v.
Wilson and
Co., 7 Brown's Parl. Cases,
p. 459.

“ with liberty to call as usual, fourteen hogheads “ of tobacco;” and these instructions were entered in the broker’s books for the perusal of the underwriters, as is the practice at Glasgow. Upon the 9th of February, the appellants underwrote a policy of insurance in these terms; “ beginning “ the adventure of the said tobacco, at and from “ the loading thereof on board the said ship “ Kingston, at Carron wharf, and to continue and “ endure until said Kingston (being allowed a “ liberty to call at Leith) shall arrive at Hull, and “ there be safely delivered.” The respondents were not privy to the allowance to call at Leith, being thus substituted in the policy for the more general term, as usual, mentioned in the instructions to the broker. The premium agreed on was 1 l. 5 s. per cent. a rate equal at least, if not higher than was usual to be given in the voyage, in cases where it was understood, or expressed in the policy, that the vessel might touch at the customary ports. And in particular, some of these appellants in February 1772, underwrote a policy upon this very vessel, and for the same voyage, with liberty to call at Leith and Morrison’s Haven, at a premium of one per cent. only.
 The vessel thus insured had sailed from Carron five days before the date of the policy, that is, on the 4th of February 1774, it did not call or touch at Leith, but put into Morrison’s Haven; set sail from thence on the 9th, got safe into the direct course from Carron to Hull, cleared the Firth of Forth, and proceeded with a fair wind, till on the evening of the 10th the vessel, being overtaken by a storm at Holy Island, on the coast of Northumberland, was wrecked, and the cargo totally lost. All these were facts admitted; nor was it alleged by the appellants, that the ship received the smallest damage, in going into, or coming out of Morrison’s Haven. Intelligence of this misfortune reached Glasgow on the 14th of February, when the respondents for the first time saw

saw the policy of insurance, or understood that it differed in terms from their instructions to the broker, in whose hands it remained. It did not, however, occur to them, that this slight variation would afford a pretext to the underwriters for refusing payment; nor does it seem to have then occurred to those gentlemen, who wrote immediately to the respondents, desiring they would request the Carron Company to give the necessary orders for preserving the tobacco, and forwarding it to Hull, promising to contribute towards the expence, so far as they were interested. Upon the 24th of February, however, the appellants, in an instrument drawn by a publick notary, protested against the ship's having gone into Morrison's Haven, as a deviation from the terms of the policy, which only contained a liberty to call at Leith; and absolutely refused payment of the loss. On this refusal, the respondents brought their action against the appellants in the court of Admiralty in Scotland, the only competent court for determining questions about insurances, and other maritime affairs in that country, in the first instance. The appellants put in their defence, which was followed by other pleadings, in January 1775, the Judge Admiral pronounced the following interlocutor (or decree :) “ Having “ considered the whole circumstances of this case,
 “ and in particular that it is not alleged by the “ defenders, that the pursuers were in the know“ ledge of the ship the Kingston being intended “ to put into Morrison's Haven, he repels the “ defence pleaded by the defenders.” The appellants reclaimed against this interlocutor, (petitioned for a review of the sentence) and answers being put in to their petition, the Judge Admiral, because they set forth, and seemed to found on conversations between them and the brokers, at the time of underwriting or settling the terms of the policy, allowed them to bring proof of what passed at and previous to making the insurance.

But the appellants presented a second petition, declining to go into any proof, insisting that the cause turned singly upon the words of the policy, and demanding judgment on the abstract question, whether the vessel touching at Morrison's Haven, when not allowed by the policy, discharged the underwriters? Whereupon the Judge again decreed in favour of the respondents. The appellants then sued out a writ of suspension from the Court of Session, of these sentences of the Judge Admiral, and after the usual preliminary step of procedure before the Lord Ordinary, the cause being reported to the whole bench of Lords, their Lordships, having before them the opinions of several of the most eminent merchants both in England and Scotland, gave judgment for the respondents, in the month of January 1776, in the following terms: "Having advised informations, " hinc, inde, and considered the policy of insurance and the whole circumstances of the case, " the Lords repel the reasons of suspension, find " the letters orderly proceeded," (that is, that the appellants were obliged to pay the sums underwritten, in terms of the Judge Admiral's decree) and their Lordships decree accordingly. The appellants having also reclaimed against this interlocutor, it was in March 1776, finally confirmed. From these several decrees the present appeal was brought; and the House of Lords were of opinion, that a wilful deviation from the due course of the insured voyage is in all cases a determination of the policy; that from that moment, the engagement between the insurers and insured is at an end; that it is immaterial from what cause, or at what place, a subsequent loss arises, the insurers being in no case answerable for it: that the going into Morrison's Haven was a wilful deviation from the due course of a voyage from Carron to Hull; that though it may be true, as contended on the part of the respondents, that ships sailing through the Firth of Forth

Forth have sometimes been permitted by the terms of a policy, underwritten at the same premium as the present, to go into that port, it could not avail in the present case, since the policy in question had given no such permission. It was therefore ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that the interlocutors complained of should be reversed.

These principles being once established, it follows as a necessary consequence, that however short the time of deviation may be, if only for a single night, or even for an hour, the underwriter is equally discharged, as if there had been a deviation for weeks or months: for the condition being once broken, no subsequent act can ever make it good.

The ship George was bound from Cork to Jamaica with a convoy in the course of a war: the captain, in concert with two other vessels, took advantage of the night, and being ships of force, cruised, and thereby deviated out of the direct course of their voyage, in hopes of meeting with a prize. Lord Camden clearly held, and a special jury of merchants, agreeably to his directions, determined, that from the moment the George deserted or deviated from the direct voyage to Jamaica, the policy was discharged.

Cock v. Townson. C. B. before Lord Camden, Ch. Just.

In a modern case, however, it seemed to be the general opinion of Lord Mansfield, and a special jury; and was sworn to be the usage by several witnesses, that if a merchant ship carry letters of marque, she may chase an enemy, though she may not cruise, without being deemed guilty of a deviation.

On an insurance of the Mary at and from London to Cork and the West Indies, the question was whether a ship, having letters of marque, could chase an enemy's ship, without being said to have deviated. The facts were, that in the night, the Mary had descried a Spanish sail; and after chasing, lost sight of her for six hours till the morning, when they engaged. The Mary did not make a prize of the Spanish fail, but she proceeded on her voyage, and was afterwards captured. It was agreed on all hands, that a ship, in such circumstances, might not cruise; and several witnesses spoke to the usage and practice of ships, which carried letters of marque, chasing an enemy. It was admitted on the part of the insurers, that if an enemy came in the way, the ship must defend or engage; but contended, that if the letter of marque lost sight of the enemy, that it was no longer chasing, but cruising. Lord Mansfield left it upon the evidence to the jury, who found for the plaintiffs; thereby deciding the question in the affirmative.

Jolly v. Walker, at Guildhall. East. Vac. 1781.

But though the consequences of a voluntary deviation are thus fatal to the validity of the contract of insurance; yet wherever the deviation arises from necessity and a just cause, the underwriter still remains liable, although the course of the voyage is altered.

Elton v.
Brogden.
2 Stra. 1264.
Vide ante
p. 98.

This rule is illustrated by the following case. The ship Mediterranean went out in the merchants service with a letter of marque, and bound from Bristol to Newfoundland, insured by the defendant. In her voyage she took a prize, and returned with it to Bristol, and received back a proportionable part of the premium. Then another policy was made, and the ship set out, with express orders from the owners, that if another prize was taken, the captain should put some hands on board such prize, and send her to Bristol; but that the ship in question should proceed with the merchants goods. Another prize was taken in the due course of the voyage, and the captain gave orders to some of the crew to carry her to Bristol, and designed to go on to Newfoundland: but the crew opposed him, and insisted he should go back, though he acquainted them with his orders; upon which he was forced to submit, and on his return his own ship was taken, taken, but the prize got in safe. And now in an action against the underwriters, it was insisted, that this was such a deviation, as discharged them. But the court and jury held, that this was excused by the force upon the master, which he could not resist; and therefore fell within the excuse of necessity, which had always been allowed. So the plaintiff had a verdict for the sum insured.

The general writers upon this subject have enumerated the various circumstances, which will operate as a justification to the insured, for leaving the direct track of the voyage, upon the ground of necessity and reasonable cause: such as, to repair his vessel, to escape from an impending storm, or to avoid an enemy. In our reports of decisions in the English courts of justice, we find instances of all these various excuses being allowed as sufficient to justify a deviation; and also another species of excuse, namely, to meet a convoy, which, indeed, is nearly connected with that of avoiding an enemy. I shall rank all the cases, which apply to this branch of our enquiry, under these several divisions.

Roccus 52.
Santer de Assicur.
part 3. n. 52.

The first ground of necessity which justifies a deviation, is that of going into port to repair. If a ship is decayed, and goes to the nearest place to refit, it is no deviation; because it is for the general interest of all concerned, and consequently for that of the underwriters, that the ship should be put in a proper condition, capable of performing the voyage.

The ship Eyles, being at Bengal in the year 1732, the owner employed Mr. Halhead to insure this ship in the London Insurance Office for 500*l.* the adventure thereon to commence from her arrival at Fort St. George, and thence to continue till the said ship should arrive at London; and that it should be lawful for the said ship, in the said voyage, to stay at any ports or places without prejudice. The Eyles came to Fort St.

Mcuteux and Others v.
the London
Assurance Company.
1 Atk. 545.

George in February 1733, in her way to England; but being leaky, and in very bad condition, upon the unanimous advice of the governor, council, commanders of ships, &c. she sailed for Bengal to be refitted; and after being sheathed, in her return upon her homeward-bound voyage, she struck upon the Engilee Sands, and was lost. Evidence was read on the part of the plaintiffs, to prove that Bengal was the proper place to refit, and that the ship went thither for that reason; that this was a voyage of necessity, and not a trading voyage, for she took nothing on board but water, provisions, and ballast. When this cause came on to be heard before Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, he refused to decide it, but directed an issue at law. His Lordship, however, observed, that the general principles laid down by the plaintiffs' counsel were right, as stress of weather, and the danger of proceeding on a voyage, when a ship is in a decayed condition: and in such a case, if she went to the nearest place, he should consider it equally the same, as if she had been repaired at the very place from whence the voyage was to commence, according to the terms of the policy, and no deviation. It is a very material circumstance, that the governor ordered the lading to be taken out, to shew the necessity of the ship's being repaired; but there is not a syllable of proof why she might not have been equally repaired at Fort St. George. His Lordship therefore directed an issue to try, whether the loss in July 1733 was a loss during the voyage, and according to the adventure which was agreed upon, or intended to be insured. On a trial at Guildhall in the court of Common Pleas, the jury found in favour of the plaintiff.

Guibert v.
Readshaw.
Sitt. in Lond.
Hil. Vac.
1786.

This was an action on a policy of insurance on the Nancy, at and from La Rochelle to the coast of Africa, during her stay and trade thereon, and at and from thence to her port of discharge in the the island of St. Domingo. Three days after the ship sailed from La Rochelle, she met with a gale, which strained her seams, and split her mizen-yard and rigging. The crew came in a body to the captain, desiring for the preservation of their lives to make to some port to repair. The vessel being a new one, and the captain finding that she had too little ballast, complied, and put into Lisbon, the nearest port; from whence, after taking in 500 rolls of tobacco as ballast, he proceeded to the coast of Guinea, traded there, and the ship was afterwards captured in the sight of St. Domingo, before she arrived. The defendant insisted, that going into Lisbon was a deviation, and called witnesses, who were of opinion, that in the latitude in which the storm happened, there could be no difficulty in repairing all the damage the vessel was described to have received, even in the worst weather, as she might have proceeded to the coast of Africa, and repaired there at a less expence; and that a ship, loaded like that in question, could not need additional ballast. On the cross examination, it came out that the premium would not have varied, had the voyage been by the way of Lisbon.

Lord Mansfield left it to the jury, on the ground of necessity to go to Lisbon for repairs. He said, that much depended upon the circumstance, that no additional premium would have been required for liberty to touch there. If the jury believed the evidence of the witnesses, they must find for the plaintiff, for that the whole of the defendant's case rested merely upon surmise and suspicions alone. The plaintiff accordingly had a verdict.

The next excuse for leaving the direct course is stress of weather. Upon this point the rule is this, that wherever a ship, in order to escape a storm, goes out of the direct course; or when, in the due course of the voyage, is driven out of it by stress of weather, this is no deviation; because cause it was occasioned by the act of God, which, by a maxim of law, is said to work an injury to no man. It has also been held, that if a storm drive a ship out of the course of her voyage, and she do the best she can to get to her port of destination, she is not obliged to return back to the point from whence she was driven. This rule is exemplified by the following case.

Harrington
v. Halkeld.
Sitt in Lond.
Mich. Vac.
1778.

In an action on a policy of insurance of the ship Atlantic, warranted to sail with convoy from England to St. Kitt's on or before the first of August; the question was, whether there had been a deviation. The ship was separated from her convoy by a storm. The captain being examined, said, his object, after his separation, invariably was to gain St. Kitt's, or to fall in with the convoy. That the ship was taken by an American privateer in lat. 34. lon. 59. Several captains were examined, who swore, that they would have taken the same course to get to St. Kitt's, or regain the fleet.

Lord Mansfield.—The single question is, whether the captain was taken as he was going to St. Kitt's. If he was not, he is perjured. The account he gives is, that on the 28th of July there was a storm, which separated the fleet: that he did all he could to get to St. Kitt's, and to direct his course so as to meet the convoy crossing. The captain goes on the ground not to reason, but to obey, be the consequence what it might. He knows nothing of the insurance: he says to himself, If I obey, I am doing right. As to the protest, I do not see that it contradicts the captain's evidence. Other captains have looked at the log-book or journal; and they say, they would have held the same course.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

Upon the subject of a departure from the course of the voyage, on account of stress of weather, another very important point has lately been determined, though the same principle runs through through all the cases, that whatever happens by the act of God, shall not be imputed to man. On this ground it has been held, that if a ship be driven out of her port of loading by stress of weather into another, and then does the best she can to get to her port of destination, it shall not be deemed a deviation, though she do not return to the port from whence she was driven.

The case here alluded to was an action upon the case against the defendant, for not having insured a ship and cargo, pursuant to the orders of the plaintiff, by means whereof he was damaged, the ship having been lost (a). It was tried before Mr. Justice Buller at Guildhall, at the sittings after Trinity Term 1785; and a verdict was found for the plaintiff.

Delaney v. Stoddart.
Term Rep.
for Mich.
26 Geo. 3.
p. 22.

Upon a motion for a new trial, the facts appeared to be these: The plaintiff, who lived at St. Kitt's, wrote a letter to the defendant, dated the 30th of April 1781, informing him that he intended to purchase a ship, and offering the defendant a share. On the 4th of May 1781, he wrote a second letter to the defendant, acquainting him, that he had purchased the ship, but had only a share in it himself, the residue being divided into three or four more shares, one of which he had reserved for the defendant, in case he should wish to be concerned; and directing an insurance upon the ship at and from St. Kitt's

(a) It may be proper to explain the nature of this action. When a man undertakes, either by an implied or express promise, to do a thing for another, and he neglects to do it, the law gives the person injured an action for the non-feasance. This is the case in question with respect to insurance; and the only difference between this action, and that on a policy against the underwriters, is in point of form; for the plaintiff in this action is entitled to recover the exact sum he ordered to be insured: and the defendant is entitled to every benefit, of which the underwriter could have taken advantage, such as fraud, deviation, non-compliance with warranty, &c.

to London, warranted to sail with convoy. On the 28th of June, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, that he had no objection to a fourth, or a share equal to the plaintiff's. On the 3d of July, the plaintiff informed the defendant, that the ship had left the port to take in her cargo; that she let go an anchor at Sandy Point, but as the wind blew fresh, she drove out, and could not come in again; that she was obliged to go to St. Eustatius, and he therefore hoped that the defendant had not neglected to make the insurance, for fear of accidents. The defendant, on the 19th of July, wrote thus to the plaintiff: "The insurance you ordered shall be done." Plaintiff again, on the 25th of July, wrote, that the Friendship did all in her power to get up from St. Eustatius, but could not, and therefore he sold her to Mr. Ross at Eustatius. I have already transcribed as much of the several letters as are material to the subject of this chapter; in addition to which, the following facts appeared in evidence: That the ship Friendship had sailed from St. Eustatius, on the first of August, with the convoy, and that she had afterwards foundered at sea; that St. Eustatius is in the direct road to London from St. Kitt's, and the convoy from St. Kitt's always looked into St. Eustatius, to take up any ships that might be there; that if the Friendship had sailed from St. Kitt's, she must have gone by Eustatius, but would not have stopped there: that when she was driven to St. Eustatius, after making several efforts to get back to St. Kitt's to finish her loading, and finding she could not succeed, she then took in the rest of her loading at St. Eustatius.

At the trial, several grounds of defence were made; but the only one, material for our consideration was, that the remaining at St. Eustatius, and not going back to St. Kitt's was a deviation. The learned judge, who tried the cause, was of opinion that it was not a deviation, being occasioned sioned by stress of weather. Upon this ground; amongst others, the motion for a new trial was founded.

After argument at the bar,

Lord Mansfield said, the only material question is, whether there is a deviation in this case: and that depends on the evidence. If a storm drive a ship out of her voyage into any port, and being there, she does the best she can to get to her port of destination, she is not obliged to return back to the point from whence she was driven; but here the witnesses say, she tried to get back to St. Kitt's, and could not: and it is a much easier navigation to go directly from St. Eustatius to London, than to go back to St. Kitt's first. And as to the taking in the cargo at St. Eustatius, I do not find that the ship lost any time by it. Every thing is the effect of the storm, and occasioned by it. This is the only point, on which I had any doubt, and it required some consideration. It was a question, which was proper to be left to a jury, whether this was the same voyage or not, and they have determined it.

Mr. Justice Willes inclined to a different opinion. My only doubt is, whether it was the same voyage, as that insured. So far as the ship was driven by stress of weather, so far there is an exception. When she is driven to St. Eustatius, she attempts to get back to St. Kitt's; but I do not find that she made any attempt to get to London at that time. When she was at St. Eustatius, the owner of the ship sold her to Ross, who loaded her afresh with tobacco instead of sugar, which was to have been her original cargo; so that there is a new cargo, a new owner, and a new voyage. In these cases we lean very much to deviation. In a case lately determined in this court, it was held, that going to Beaumaris, though only a few leagues out of the way, was a deviation. It strikes me as a case of some difficulty: perhaps the jury had not evidence enough laid before before them, on which to determine; for there is nothing said on the part of the defendant as to the usual course of the voyage. The risk was certainly encreased by the ship's continuing at St. Eustatius so long; for the insurance, if good at all, was good all the time she lay by at St. Eustatius; and she might have continued there much longer. In my opinion, it is very well worth the re-consideration of a jury.

Mr. Justice Asbhurst.—This ought to be considered as the same voyage insured. Wherever a ship is driven by stress of weather out of her own port into another, that shall not be considered as a deviation. Here the ship was forced by stress of weather to go to St. Eustatius; and being there, she endeavoured several times to get back to St. Kitt's, but without effect. In fact it was better for the parties that the cargo should be completed at St. Eustatius; her continuing there, rather diminishes the risk than otherwise; because if she had gone back to St. Kitt's, it would have taken up a longer time. If then every thing was done, that could be done, under such circumstances, for the benefit of the adventure, this shall not vacate the policy.

Mr. Justice Buller.—It has been much relied on in this case, that there was a change of property; but that, in my opinion, makes no difference. Then laying that out of the question, and supposing the ship as not being sold to Ross, I will first consider whether this is a different voyage. But that cannot be, as it would be contrary to the evidence: neither is it true, that the vessel afterwards pursued the same voyage by accident; for that part of the cargo, which she took in at St. Kitt's, continued on board of her the whole time, and the original intention of the ship's coming to London, was likewise continued; the parties never thought of a different voyage. But it is said, that she took in another cargo at St. Eustatius: what says the evidence? Where a captain has has not taken in a full cargo, it is usual to take in the rest at St. Eustatius; such was proved to be the custom of the voyage: and it was proved, that on a voluntary act of the captain's going to St. Eustatius, the policy would have protected the ship's stay there; à fortiori it will, when the ship was driven there by stress of weather. As to the defendant's not being prepared at the trial to answer the usage, he ought to have come prepared with that, which was the gift of his defence. Then was the risk altered? had it been so, it was in the defendant's power to have proved it: but there was no proof that it was altered; part of the same cargo continues; nor does it appear that they meant to alter the cargo, for she endeavoured to get back to St. Kitt's to take in the rest; but was prevented by storms. I think the risk would in reality have been much greater, if she had gone back; for she must have come by the way of St. Eustatius again in her passage home. The part of the cargo, which was taken in at the time the ship was driven from St. Kitt's, has already been paid for by the defendant; even this would not have been paid for by the defendant, if he had conceived that the voyage had been at an end. The learned judges therefore, except Mr. Justice Willes, after giving their opinions upon the other points in the cause, ordered the rule for a new trial to be discharged.

A deviation may also be justified, if done to avoid an enemy, or to seek for convoy; because it is in truth no deviation to go out of the course of a voyage, in order to avoid danger, or to obtain a protection against it.

In an action upon a policy, which was to insure the William Galley in a voyage from Bremen to the port of London, warranted to depart with convoy: the case was this, the Galley set sail from Bremen, under convoy of a Dutch man of war to the Elb, where they were joined by two other Dutch men of war, and several Dutch and English merchant

Bond v. Gonsales. 2 Salk.
445.

merchant ships, whence they sailed to the Texel, where they found a squadron of English men of war and an Admiral. After a stay of nine weeks, they set out from the Texel, and the Galley was separated in a storm, and taken by a French privateer, taken again by a Dutch privateer, and paid 80 l. salvage.

It was ruled by Lord Chief Justice Holt, that the voyage ought to be according to usage, and that their going to the Elb, though in fact out of the way, was no deviation; for till after the year 1703, there was no convoy for ships directly from Bremen to London. And the plaintiff had a verdict.

Gordon v.
Morley.
Campbell v.
Bordieu.
2 Stra. 1265.

On an insurance from London to Gibraltar, warranted to depart with convoy; it appeared there was a convoy appointed for that trade at Spithead; and the ship Ranger having tried for convoy in the Downs, proceeded to Spithead, and was taken in her way thither. The insurers insisted that this being the time of a French war, the ship should not have ventured through the channel, but have waited in the Downs for an occasional convoy. And many merchants and office-keepers were examined to that purpose.

But Lord Chief Justice Lee held, that the ship was to be considered as under the defendant's insurance to a place of general rendezvous, according to the interpretation of the words warranted to depart with convoy. And if the parties meant to vary the insurance from what is commonly understood, they should have particularized her departure with convoy from the Downs. The juries were composed of merchants; and in both cases they found for the plaintiffs upon the strength of this direction.

Cowp. Rep.
601.

In the case of Bond against Nutt, in which the material question was, whether a warranty had or had not been complied with, and which consequently will be fully stated in the following chapter, the point of deviation for the purpose of procuring curing convoy also came under the consideration of the court. Upon that occasion, Lord Mansfield and the whole court held, that if a ship go to the usual place of rendezvous, for the sake of joining convoy there ready, though such place be out of the direct course of the voyage, it is no deviation.

And in a more modern case, the only question was, whether there was a deviation or not. Lord Mansfield there directed the jury to find for the plaintiffs, if they believed that the captain fairly and bonâ fide acted according to the best of his judgment: that he had no other view or motive but to come the safest way home, and to meet with convoy; for that it was no deviation to go out of the way to avoid danger.

Enderby and Another v.
Fletcher.
Sittings in London.
Trin. Vac.
1780.

In our law books we sometimes meet with cases, which say, that a deviation may be justified by the usage and custom of the trade. But that is not quite correct; for if by the usage of any particular trade, it is customary to stop at certain places, lying out of the direct course from A. to B. it is not a deviation to stop there; because it is a part of the voyage. There is no deception upon the insurer; because he is bound to take notice of the usages of trade; they are notorious to all the world; and when the usage has declared it lawful in a specifick voyage to go to any place, though out of the immediate track, it is as much a part of the contract of insurance between the parties, as if it had been particularly mentioned. But in order to justify the captain of a ship in quitting the straight and direct line from the port of loading to that of delivery, there must be a precise, clear, and established usage upon the subject, not depending merely upon one or two loose, and vague instances.

Where a ship was insured from Liverpool to Jamaica, and had put into the Isle of Man; it appeared that there were some instances of the Liverpool ships putting in there, but it was not Salisbury v.

Townson.

the settled, common, established, and direct usage of the voyage and trade: it was therefore held a deviation, and the underwriters were discharged from any loss that happened subsequent to the deviation.

Cowp. 601. Having thus mentioned all the cases to be found in the books of reports, which operate as an excuse for a departure from the due course of the voyage, and which prevent those effects, which always follow a deviation, namely, the discharge of the insurer from his contract; it will be proper to observe, that it is not meant to insinuate that other circumstances may not frequently happen, which will have precisely the same consequences. For wherever a ship does that which is for the general benefit of all parties concerned, the act is as much within the intention and spirit of the policy, and consequently as much protected by it, as if expressed in terms. And therefore in all cases, in order to determine whether a diversion from the direct course of the voyage is such a deviation as in law vacates the policy, it will be proper to attend to the motives, end, and consequences of the act, as the true criterion of judgment.

If any of the circumstances above stated do really and bonâ fide occur, so as to render a deviation absolutely necessary, the ship must pursue such voyage of necessity in the direct course, and in the shortest time possible, otherwise the underwriters will be discharged. Because a voyage superadded by necessity, ought to be subject to the same qualifications, and entitled only to the same sort of latitude as the original voyage, it having become, by operation of law, a part, as it were, of that original voyage.

Lavabre v.
Walter.
Dougk. 271.

This was laid down as law by the Court of King's Bench in a case, in which the voyage insured was described in these words: "At and from " Port L'Orient to Pondicherry, Madras and " Cbina, and at, and from thence back to the ship's

“ ship’s port, or ports, of discharge in France,
 “ with liberty to touch, in the outward or home“ ward-bound voyage, at the isles of France and “ Bourbon, and at all or any other ports or places “ what or wheresoever: and it shall be lawful for “ the said ship, in this voyage to proceed and sail
 “ to, and touch and stay at any ports or places “ whatsoever, as well on this side, as on the other “ side, the Cape of Good Hope, without being “ deemed a deviation.” The ship did not sail till the 6th of December 1776, and did not reach Pon- dicherry till the 23d of July 1777. She continued there till the 23d of August following, when; instead of proceeding to Cbina, she sailed for Bengal, where having passed the winter, and undergone very considerable repairs, she sailed from thence early in the year 1778, (being the second ship that left the Ganges) returned to Pondicherry; and, after taking in a homeward bound cargo at that place, proceeded in her voyage back to L’Orient, but was taken in October in that year by the Mentor privateer. The usual time, in which the direct voyage between Pondicherry and Bengal is performed, is six or seven days, but the Carna- tic was about six weeks in going to Bengal, and two months on the way back from thence to Pon- dicherry. Both going and returning, she either touched at, or lay off, Madras, Masulipatam, Vi- sigapatam and Yanon, and took in goods at all those places. The plaintiffs rested their case chiefly on this ground, that the voyage to Bengal was adopted by necessity for the safety of the ship, upon the bond fide opinion of the captain, and the rest of the officers, and of one Berard the supercargo, who had the principal management.
 To prove this necessity it was sworn by Berard and four mates, that the ship had been detained longer in Europe than at first was foreseen, and that she met with extremely bad weather on her outward passage; and at Pondicherry was so leaky, that it appeared to them, that she must be careened,

reened, which could only be done at Bengal, there being no other place so near, to which she could proceed with safety, where that operation could be performed; for that no harbour between Pondicherry and the Ganges on the one side, and Pondicherry and Bombay on the other, would admit of so large a vessel being hove down, her burthen being near 800 tuns. Indeed it turned out, when they got to Bengal, that she could be repaired without careening; but this was only discovered, they said, after she was unloaded of much more of her contents than could have been done with safety in the open road of Pondicherry. All the witnesses for the plaintiffs swore that they took the resolution of going to Bengal much against their inclination; for that it would have been not only more for the advantage of the owners, but also more for their private interest as individuals, to go to China, they having prepared their own adventures for that market. Besides the circumstance of the leak, they assigned an additional reason for relinquishing the voyage to China, viz. that they had been so long detained at Pondicherry, from delays in unloading their outward-bound cargo, that they were not ready to leave that place, till it was too late to undertake the China voyage with any degree of prudence or safety; and they said Bengal was the best place they could go to, in order to winter. The defence set up was: 1st, That the ship had never failed on the voyage insured, her destination, when she left Europe, having been for Bengal, and not for China. 2d. That supposing her to have failed on the voyage described in the policy, yet her going from Pondicherry to Bengal, instead of proceeding to China, was a deviation, and was not justified by necessity. In support of the first ground of defence, certain secret instructions were relied upon which were found on board the ship, and were addressed by the owners at L'Orient to Berard the supercargo, and which, though obscurely

obscurely penned, gave great room to contend, either that, at her departure, it had been resolved to substitute the Bengal for the China voyage, or, at least, that the alternative was left with Berard, to be decided one way or the other, according to certain events in India, which events turned out in the sort of way that, according to the instructions, was to determine the voyage for Bengal. On the second ground, it was said, that from the plaintiff's own witnesses, there was no necessity for going to Bengal; and that instead of going directly thither, a trading voyage had been made from Pondicherry, which afforded a strong presumption that trading, and not the leak, or lateness of the season, was the object of going to Bengal. On the part of the defence also, several letters were read (written by the owners to their correspondents who had got the policy underwritten) to raise a presumption that the necessity of going to Bengal, was merely a pretence devised after the capture; and when the insured began to apprehend that the words of the policy would not cover a voyage to that place. This is the substance of the evidence given in this, and two other causes upon the same ship, though not on the same policy: in addition to which in the present case, the secret instructions given to Berard had been more attentively perused, and afforded stronger reasons than they at first seemed to do, that the voyage to Bengal was predetermined before the departure from L'Orient. The plaintiff's witnesses were much pressed, on this occasion, to say, whether the lateness of the season alone was such as, independent of the leak, would have determined them to abandon the China voyage; and on the other hand, whether the leak, independent of the other reason, would, in their opinion, have rendered it necessary so to do. To this they said, they could not give a certain answer; for that, as neither of the cases had happened, they had not exercised their judgment upon them.

Vide ante.
c. 2.

Lord Mansfield summed up very strongly against the plaintiffs, on the head of fraud. But, independent of that ground, he stated a new point against them, namely, that if necessity were admitted to have been the sole motive for substituting the voyage to Bengal in the place of that to China, still it was incumbent on the insured to have pursued that voyage of necessity directly, in the shortest and most expeditious manner; and that the delay in going from Pondicherry to Bengal, and the repeated stops by touching at different places, and trading there, were deviations, and not within the protection which the supposed necessity afforded to the direct voyage.

Notwithstanding this direction, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. Upon a motion for a new trial, after argument at the bar, the opinion of the court of King's Bench was delivered by Lord Mansfield.—If this application were made upon the ground of impeaching the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses, whatever my private sentiments might be, after two concurrent verdicts, I should not be inclined to interpose. But, without impeaching the evidence, I think there ought to be a new trial, or rather, that the case has been ill decided. The question is, whether, without imputation on any body, circumstances have not happened to take the voyage out of the policy. A deviation from necessity must be justified, both as to substance and manner. Nothing more must be done than what the necessity requires. The true objection to a deviation is not the increase of the risk. If that were so, it would only be necessary to give an additional premium. It is, that the party contracting has voluntarily substituted another voyage for that which has been insured. If the voyage to Bengal was unavoidable, avoidable, where was the necessity to trade? All the ports touched at were out of the direct course; and six weeks and two months were consumed, instead of six days. The justice of the case required a different decision. The rule for a new trial was accordingly made absolute. The cause was again set down for trial; but the plaintiffs, when they were ready to be called on, submitted to the opinion of the court, and abandoned their claim against the underwriters.

But though an actual deviation from the voyage insured is thus fatal to the contract of insurance; yet a deviation merely intended, but never carried into effect, is considered as no deviation, and the insurer continues liable. This has been frequently so decided. Thus in the Foster v. Wilmer case of an insurance from Carolina to Lisbon, and at and from thence to Bristol; it appeared, that the captain had taken in salt, which he was to deliver at Falmouth, before he went to Bristol; but the ship was taken in the direct road to both, and before she came to the point, where she would have turned off to Falmouth. It was held, Ld. Ch. Just. that the insurer was liable; for it is but an intention to deviate, and that was held not sufficient to discharge the underwriter. 2 Stra. 1249.

In the case of Carter v. the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, where the insurance was from Honduras to London, and a consignment to Amsterdam: a loss happened before she came to the dividing point between the two voyages, for which the insurers were held liable to pay. 2 Stra. 1249.

The doctrine laid down in these cases has since been frequently recognized in subsequent decisions, and particularly by Lord Mansfield in the case of Tbelluffon v. Ferguffon, which will be fully reported in the next chapter. The insurance was from Guadaloupe to Havre; and one of the grounds of defence was, that the ship never sailed from Guadaloupe to Havre, but on a voyage from Guadaloupe to Brest. Lord Mansfield, in answer, said, "the voyage to Brest was, at most, but an "intended deviation, not carried into effect."

If, however, it can be made appear by evidence, that it never was intended, nor came within the contemplation of the parties, to sail upon the voyage insured; if all the ship's papers and documents be made out for a different place from that described in the policy, the insurer is discharged from all degree of responsibility, even though the loss should happen before the dividing point of the two voyages. This distinction was very properly taken by the court of King's Bench, in a very modern case: and by that distinction they admitted the general doctrine, with respect to the intention to deviate, in its fullest extent.

Wooldridge
v. Boydell.
Doug. 16.

The ship Molly being insured "at and from "Maryland to Cadiz," was taken in Chesapeake Bay, in the way to Europe. Upon this the insured brought this action against the defendant, one of the underwriters on the policy. The trial came on at Guildhall before Lord Mansfield, when a verdict was found for the defendant. A new trial being moved for, the material facts of the case appeared to be as follows:—The ship was cleared from Maryland to Falmouth, and a bond given that all the enumerated goods should be landed in Britain, and all the other goods in the British dominions. An affidavit of the owner stated that the vessel was bound for Falmouth. The bills of lading were, "To Falmouth and a "market:" and there was no evidence whatever that she was destined for Cadiz. The place where she was taken, was in the course from Maryland both to Cadiz and Falmouth, before the dividing point. Many circumstances led to a suspicion that she was, in truth, neither designed for Falmouth nor Cadiz, but for the port of Boston, to supply the American army; but there was not sufficient direct evidence of that fact.—At the trial, Lord Mansfield told the jury, that if they they thought the voyage intended was to Cadiz, they must find for the plaintiff. If, on the contrary, they should think there was no design of going to Cadiz, they must find for the defendant. It also appeared in evidence, that the premium to insure a voyage from Maryland to Falmouth, and from thence to Cadiz, would have greatly exceeded what was paid in this case. Upon the motion for a new trial being argued, the counsel for the plaintiff cited the two cases above stated from Strange's Reports.

Lord Mansfield.—The policy, on the face of it, is from Maryland to Cadiz, and therefore purports to be a direct voyage to Cadiz. All contracts of insurance must be founded in truth, and the policies framed accordingly. When the insured intends a deviation from the direct voyage, it is always provided for, and the indemnification adapted to it. There never was a man so foolish as to intend a deviation from the voyage described, when the insurance is made, because that would be paying without an indemnification. Deviations from the voyage insured arise from after-thoughts, after-interest, after-temptation; and the party, who actually deviates from the voyage described, means to give up his policy. But a deviation merely intended, but never carried into effect, is as no deviation. In all the cases of that sort, the terminus a quo, and ad quem, were certain, and the same. Here, was the voyage ever intended for Cadiz? There is not sufficient evidence of the design to go to Boston, for the court to go upon. But some of the papers say to Falmouth and a market: some to Falmouth only. None mention Cadiz, nor was there any person in the ship, who ever heard of any intention to go to that port. A market is not synonymous to Cadiz; that expression might have meant Naples, Leghorn, or England. No man upon the instructions, would have thought of getting the policy filled up to Cadiz. In short, that was never ver the voyage intended, and consequently is not what the underwriters meant to insure.

Mr. Justice Buller.—I am of the same opinion, I believe the law to be according to the authorities mentioned on the part of the plaintiff; but it does not apply here. This is a question of fact. There cannot be a deviation from that, which never existed. The weight of the evidence is, that the voyage was never designed for Cadiz.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Asburst concurring in the opinion delivered by Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Buller, the rule for a new trial was discharged.

From the proposition just established, namely, that a mere intention to deviate will not vacate the policy, it follows as an immediate consequence, that whatever damage is sustained before actual deviation, will fall upon the underwriters.

Green v.
Young.
2 Ld. Raym.
840.
2 Salk. 444.
S. C.

Thus it was held by Lord Chief Justice Ho't, who said, that if a policy of insurance be made to begin from the departure of the ship from England until, &c. and after the departure a damage happens, &c. and then the ship deviates; though the policy is discharged from the time of the deviation, yet for the damages sustained before the deviation, the insurers shall make satisfaction to the insured.

Doug. 758.

Subject to the rules already advanced, deviation or not is a question of fact, to be decided according to the circumstances of the case.

Vid. Po 3.
c. 19.

In cases of deviation, the premium is not to be returned; because the risk being commenced, the underwriter is entitled to retain it: but of this more will be said in a subsequent chapter.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

Of Non-Compliance with Warranties.

IN the two preceding chapters we have seen the effect, which the non-observance of implied conditions has upon the contract of insurance: we shall now proceed to consider the nature of warranties; their various kinds; and how far they must be complied with on the part of the insured, in order to render the contract binding between the parties. A warranty in a policy of insurance is a condition or a contingency, that a certain thing shall be done, or happen, and unless that is performed, there is no valid contract. It is perfectly immaterial for what view the warranty is introduced; or whether the party had any view at all: but being once inserted, it becomes a binding condition on the insured; and unless he can shew that he has literally fulfilled it, or that it was performed, the contract is the same, as if it had never existed. We have already seen that the breach of an implied condition is sufficient to avoid the policy; a fortiori therefore, the effect must be the same, where the condition is express, and not liable to misrepresentation or error, because it makes a part of the written contract. To say that the underwriter should answer for a loss, notwithstanding the other party has failed in his engagements, would be to make a different rule in this species of contract, from that which subsists in every other; although this of all other contracts depends most upon the strictest attention to the purest rules of equity and good faith. Indeed the obligation to a strict performance of all promises and conditions in every species of contract, may be deduced, as has been truly observed by

Term Rep.
for Trin.
26 Geo. 1.
p. 345.

Chap. 16, 17.

an

Paley's Mor.
Phil.

an elegant moral writer, from the necessity of such a conduct to the well-being, or the existence of human society.

Term. Rep.
for Trin.
26 Geo. 3.
p. 346.

Pothier Tr.
du Contrat
d'Assurance,
p. 197.

Cowp. 607.

We have said that a warranty must be strictly and literally performed; and therefore whether the thing, warranted to be done, be or be not essential to the security of the ship; or whether the loss do or do not happen, on account of the breach of the warranty, still the insured has no remedy: because he himself has not performed his part of the contract, and if he did not mean to perform, he ought not to have bound himself by such a condition. And though the condition broken be not perhaps a material one, yet the justice of the law is evident from this consideration: that it is absolutely necessary to have one rule of decision; and that it is much better to say, that warranties shall in all cases be strictly complied with, than to leave it in the breast of a judge or jury to say, that in one case it shall, and in another it shall not. The very meaning of a warranty is to preclude all enquiries into the materiality, or the substantial performance of it: and although sometimes partial inconveniencies may arise from such a rule; yet upon the whole, it will certainly produce publick salutary effects. The insured is bound not to draw the underwriter into error, by false declarations respecting those things, about which the contract is made. Debet præstare rem ita esse ut affirmavit.

This being the case, it follows as a necessary consequence, that it is very immaterial to what cause the non-compliance is to be attributed; for if the fact be, that the warranty was not complied with, though perhaps for the best reasons, the policy has no effect. The contingency has not happened; and therefore the party interested has a right to say, that there is no contract between them. Upon this account it is, that if a ship be warranted to sail on or before the 1st of August, and she be prevented by any accident from from sailing till the 2d of August, as by the sudden want of any necessary repair, or by the appearance of an enemy at the mouth of the port, the captain would do right not to sail; but there would be an end of the policy.

In this strict and literal compliance with the terms of a warranty consists the difference between a warranty and a representation.

Of this distinction something was said in a preceding chapter: it is sufficient now to observe, Vide ante c. 10.

that a warranty, as part of the agreement, and a condition on which it was made, must be strictly complied with; whereas a representation need only be performed in substance. In a warranty, the person making it takes the risk of its truth or falsehood upon himself: in a representation, if the insured assert that to be true, which he either knows to be false, or about which he knows nothing, the policy is void on account of fraud. But a representation, made without fraud, if not false in a material point, or if it be substantially, though not literally fulfilled, does not vitiate the policy. Pawson v. Watson. Cowp. 787.

But as representations were very often made in writing, by way of instructions for effecting a policy, it became necessary to specify what written declarations should be deemed warranties, and what representations. It was, therefore, by several decisions of the courts, held to be law, that in order to make written instructions valid and binding as a warranty, they must appear on the face of the instrument itself, by which the contract of insurance is effected.

This was declared by Lord Mansfield in a very particular manner in answer to a question put to him by Mr. Davenport at the desire of the underwriters, after he had delivered the opinion of the court upon a question on a representation. Pawson v. Watson. Cowper 790.

Even though a written paper be wrapt up in the policy, when it is brought to the underwriters to subscribe, and shewn to them at that time: or even even though it be wafered to the policy, at the time of subscribing; still it is not in either case a warranty, or to be considered as part of the policy itself, but only as a representation. Both these instances have occurred in causes before Lord Mansfield.

Pawson v.
Barnevelt.
at Guildh.
Trin. Vac.
1779.
Doug. p. 12.
in the notes.

In an action on a policy of insurance, the counsel for the defendant offered to produce witnesses to prove, that a written memorandum inclosed was always considered as part of the policy. But Lord Mansfield said, it was a mere question of law, and would not hear the evidence; but decided, that a written paper did not become a strict warranty, by being folded up in the policy.

Bize v. Fletcher, at Guildh. East.
Vac. 1779.
Doug. p. 12.
in the notes.

In the other case it appeared, that at the time when the insurers underwrote the policy, a slip of paper was wafered to it, describing the state of the ship as to repairs and strength, and also mentioning several particulars of her intended voyage, which particulars, in the event, had not been complied with. Lord Mansfield ruled, that this was only a representation; and if the jury should think there was no fraud intended, and that the variance between the intended voyage, as described in the slip of paper, and the actual voyage as performed, did not tend to increase the risk to the underwriters, he directed them to find for the plaintiff, which they accordingly did.

Doug. 271.

This verdict was afterwards set aside upon another ground.

It being thus settled, that a warranty must appear on the face of the instrument, it still became a question, whether a warranty, written in the margin of the policy, was to be considered equally binding, and subject to the same strict rule of construction, as if inserted in the body of the policy itself. This point came under the consideration of the court in the case of Bean and Stupart, in which the material question was, whether, supposing

posing it to be a warranty, boys were included under the word seamen. That case, as far as it is material to our present enquiry, was as follows:

The plaintiff insured the ship called the Martba, at and from London to New York; the voyage to commence from a day specified; and in the margin of the policy were written these words, "Eight nine pounders with close quarters, six
" six pounders on her upper decks; thirty sea-
" men besides passengers."

Bean v. Stur-
part.
Dougk 10.

Upon a motion for a new trial in this case, Lord Mansfield said, there is no doubt but that this is a warranty. It's being written on the margin makes no difference. Being a warranty, there is no doubt but that the underwriters would not be liable if it were not complied with; because it is a condition on which the contract is founded.

In an action on a policy of insurance, it appeared that the following words were written transversely on the margin of the policy: "In " port 20th July, 1776." In fact, the ship had sailed the 18th of July. The question was, whether this marginal note was a warranty or a representation.

Kenyon v.
Berthon.
Mich. Vac.
1779.
Dougk. p. 12.
note (4)

Lord Mansfield, The question is, whether the ship's being in port on the 20th is part of the condition of the instrument. When it is on the face of the instrument it is a part of the policy; so that here, if the ship was not in port, it is no contract. As to its being only in the margin, that makes no difference; it is all part of the contract when it is once signed. And though the difference of two days may not make any material difference in the risk, yet, as the condition has not been complied with, the underwriter is not liable.

The propriety of these decisions has never been questioned, and the rule has been constantly and tacitly acquiesced in from the time in which these cases were determined till the year 1786, when, notwithstanding the uniformity of the determina-

De Hahn v.
Hartley.
Term Rep.
for Trin.
26 Geo. 3.
p. 343.

tions upon the subject, it once more became an object of discussion.

It came before the court upon a special verdict: it was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiff (an underwriter) against the defendant, to recover back the amount of a loss which he had paid upon a policy of insurance. The defendant pleaded the general issue. The cause came on to be tried before Mr. Justice Buller, at Guildhall, when the jury found a special verdict, stating:

That the defendant, on the 14th of June 1779, gave to his insurance broker instructions in writing, to cause an insurance to be made on a certain vessel, called the Juno. (Then the instructions are set out in the verdict, signed by the defendant.) The verdict then states, that the broker, in consequence of such instructions, on the said 14th of June 1779, did cause a policy of insurance to be made on the Juno, upon goods and merchandizes laden on board, and also on the ship, at and from Africa, to her port or ports of discharge in the British West Indies, at and after the rate of 15 l. per cent. The verdict, after reciting two memorandums, not material, then proceeded to state, that in the margin of the said policy were written the words and figures following: “Sailed “ from Liverpool with 14 six pounders, swivels, “ small arms, and 50 hands or upwards; copper-“ sheathed.” That the plaintiff underwrote the policy for 200 l. at a premium of 31 l. 10 s. That the Juno sailed from Liverpool on the 13th of October 1778, having then only 46 hands on board her, and arrived at Beaumaris, in the Isle of Anglesea, in six hours after her sailing from Liverpool, with the pilot from Liverpool on board her, who did pilot her to Beaumaris, on her said voyage; and that at Beaumaris the Juno took in six hands more, and then had, and during the said voyage, until the capture thereof, continued to have 52 hands on board her. That the said ship in the voyage from Liverpool to Beaumaris, until and when

when she took in the said six additional hands, was equally safe, as if she had had 50 hands on board her for that part of the voyage. The verdict then states, that the defendant was interested, and that the ship was captured: that on receiving an account of the loss of the vessel, the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of 200*l.* not having then had any notice that the said ship had only 46 hands on board her when she sailed from Liverpool.

For the defendant it was said, that this representation had no relation to the voyage insured; for that was at and from Africa, &c. whereas this is merely an account of the state of the ship at Liverpool.

Lord Mansfield. There is a material distinction between a warranty and a representation. A representation may be equitably and substantially answered: but a warranty must be strictly complied with. Supposing a warranty to sail on the 1st of August, and the ship did not sail till the 2d, the warranty would not be complied with. A warranty in a policy of insurance, is a condition or a contingency, and unless that is performed, there is no contract. It is perfectly immaterial, for what purpose a warranty is introduced; but being inserted, the contract does not exist unless it is literally complied with. Now in the present case, the condition was, the sailing of the ship with a certain number of men, which not being complied with, the policy is of no effect.

Mr. Justice Asburst. The very meaning of a warranty is, to preclude all questions whether it has been substantially complied with: it must be literally so.

Mr. Justice Buller. It is impossible to divide the words written in the margin, in the manner which has been attempted at the bar; that that part which relates to the copper sheathing should be a warranty, and not the remaining part. But the whole forms one entire contract, and must be complied

B b

complied with throughout. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Having stated those rules, which apply to warranties in general, it will now be proper to consider the several kinds of warranties, and those principles which are peculiar to each species, confirmed by decisions of the courts. It would be endless to enumerate the various warranties that are to be found in policies; because they must frequently, and for the most part, do depend upon the particular circumstances of each case; such as the number of men, of guns, being copper sheathed, &c. But those which most frequently occur in our books of reports, and upon which the greatest questions have arisen, may be reduced to three classes: Warranty as to the time of sailing; warranty as to convoy; and warranty of neutrality. Of each of these we shall treat; observing, in the first place, that those rules which are applicable to warranty in general, must necessarily also apply to each of these individually.

Roccus. Not.
38.

Kenyon v.
Berthon.
Supra.

1st. As to the time of sailing. In most voyages, the time at which they are to commence is a material circumstance; because in every country there are some seasons when navigation is much more dangerous than at others, owing to periodical winds, monsoons, and various other causes. Indeed, we have seen, that a man having once warranted to sail on a particular day, whether the risk be, in fact, materially altered or not by a breach of that warranty, the underwriter is no longer answerable. But this strict adherence to the very day specified, must have arisen from the principles just stated: for if a latitude of one day were given, why not extend it farther? It has therefore been held, that when a ship has been warranted to sail on a particular day, though the ship be delayed for the best and wisest reasons, or even though she be detained by force; the warranty ranty has not been complied with, and the insurer is discharged from his contract.

Thus, in an action on a policy of insurance, upon a motion to set aside the verdict which had been given for the plaintiff, the case appeared to be this. The declaration stated, that a policy was made on the ship New Westmorland, at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to sail on or before the 26th of July 1776, free from capture, and free from all restraints and detentions of kings, princes, and people of what nation, condition, or quality soever. It further stated, that the said ship was preparing and ready to sail, and would have sailed on the 25th of July, on her intended voyage, if she had not been restrained by the order and command of Sir Basil Keith, the then governor of Jamaica, and detained beyond the day: that she afterwards sailed and was captured. For the plaintiff it was said, that the usual clause against the detention of rulers and princes being inserted in this policy, the embargo, by which the ship was prevented from sailing on the day mentioned in the warranty, came expressly within the meaning of it, and therefore excused the delay.

Hore v.
Whitmore.
Cowp. 784.

On the other hand it was said, that the loss of the ship could in no possible respect be connected with the embargo. That the warranty was positive and express; that the ship should depart on or before the day appointed, and therefore must be complied with. Of this opinion was the court; and accordingly the rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit was made absolute.

But the necessity of a punctual adherence to the day on which the ship is warranted to sail by the policy, is not peculiar to the law of England; for we find that foreign writers declare, that the same rule is universally adopted. If, say they, the owner of the ship or goods has said in the policy, that he will be ready to sail at a particular time, at which, perhaps, the navigation may be less

Roccus Not.
38.

dangerous; and on this account the insurer is more easily induced to underwrite the policy; and he afterwards delay the time of sailing, and the ship and goods perish, the underwriter is not bound, for he who neglects to depart at the appointed time, must, if he sail at a subsequent period, do it entirely at his own risk. (a)

If the warranty be to sail after a specific day, and the ship sail before, the policy is equally avoided as in the former case; because the terms of the warranty are as much departed from in the one case as in the other.

Vezian v.
Grant, bef.
Mr. Just.
Buller,
Guildhall,
East. Vac.
1779.

On the 8th of December 1777, a policy was underwritten by the defendant on goods in a French ship, Le Comte de Trebon, "at and from Martinico to Havre de Grace, with liberty to touch at Guadaloupe; warranted to sail after the 12th of January, and on or before the first of August 1778." The insurance was made by the plaintiff on account of Jacques Horteloupe and Louis Delamare, of Havre de Grace, owners of the ship and cargo; at which time it was not known whether she would load at Martinico or Guadaloupe, they having goods to come from both places; the policy was therefore intended to cover the risk from both, or either of them. The ship, having finished her outward voyage at Martinico, sailed from thence on the 6th of November 1777, for Guadaloupe, where she took in her whole loading, without returning to Martinico, which the captain intended to do, had he not got a complete cargo at Guadaloupe; from whence she sailed on the 26th of June 1778, and was taken on the 3d of September. The plaintiff demanded payment of the loss from the underwriters, which being refused, he brought actions against them for the recovery thereof. This cause came on to be tried at Guildhall, before Mr. Justice Buller, when the defendant's objections were, that, according to the words of the policy, the voyage was to commence from Martinico, and not from Guadaloupe; and that the warranty of the time of sailing was not complied with, the ship having sailed from Martinico before the 12th of January 1778, to wit, on the 6th of November 1777. The jury, under the direction of the learned judge, were of that opinion, and accordingly found a verdict for the defendant.

(a) Roccus, in this passage, quotes the work of Sarnata, upon insurances, who, he observes, exclamat contra magistros navium, et nautas, quando detinentur in portu a mulierculis, vel dulcedine vini.

But when a ship is warranted to sail on or before a particular day, if she sail from her port of loading, with all her cargo and clearances on board, to the usual place of rendezvous at another part of the same island, merely for the sake of joining convoy, it is a compliance with the warranty, though she be afterwards detained there by an embargo beyond the day. The ground is, that Cowp. 602 when a ship leaves her port of loading, when she has a full and complete cargo on board, and has no other object in view but the safest mode of sailing to her port of delivery, her voyage must be said to commence from her departure from that port. If, indeed, her cargo was not complete, it would not have been a commencement of the voyage. It is true, in the case about to be reported, Lord Mansfield was of a different opinion, at the trial; and it certainly was a case of considerable difficulty: but when it came again before the court, it underwent a great deal of discussion, and after long and mature deliberation of all the judges, his lordship candidly acknowledged that his former decision was wrong; and upon a subsequent occasion, he declared he was completely convinced, that the voyage commenced from the port of loading. As that is the leading case upon this subject, it is here reported at length.

Bond v.
Nutt.
Cowp. 601.

This was an action on a policy of insurance upon the ship Capel in the West India trade, lost or not lost, at and from Jamaica to London; warranted to have sailed on or before the 1st of August 1776. The policy was effected on the 20th of August 1776, at a premium of 15 guineas per cent. to return 5 per cent. if the ship departed with convoy; and 8 per cent. if with convoy for the voyage, and arrived safe. At the trial, there was no controversy about the facts; and they are shortly these: the ship was completely laden for her voyage to England, at St. Anne's in Jamaica; and sailed from St. Anne's Bay, on the 26th of July for Bluefields, in order to join the convoy there, Bluefields being the general place of rendezvous for convoy on the Jamaica station, like Spithead in England; and where a convoy then lay, which was expected to sail for England every day: but the greater part of the way from St. Anne's to Bluefields, is out of the direct course of the voyage from St. Anne's to England. That she arrived off Bluefields on the 28th or 29th of July, where she was immediately stopped by an embargo laid on all vessels being in any part of Jamaica, and was detained there till the 6th of August, when she sailed with the convoy for England; but afterwards, being separated in the passage, was taken by an American privateer. Upon these facts the jury found a verdict for the defendant. When this case was first argued at the bar, two points were relied upon for the defendant, in support of the verdict, which the jury had given in his favour: 1st. That the departure from St. Anne's, was not a departure from Jamaica, within the meaning of this policy. 2d. If it were, that the going to Bluefields was a deviation. Upon the first argument, Lord Mansfield said: One point now started is entirely new: that supposing the voyage to have begun from St. Anne's, the going to Bluefields (which, it is admitted on all hands, was out of the course of the voyage) voyage) though for the purpose of convoy only, shall be considered as a deviation. In answer, it has been said by the counsel for the plaintiff, that there are cases in which the contrary has been held: but they are not cited. I could wish therefore that these cases might be particularly looked into, and this ground mentioned again. It is a very material point: but widely different from a warranty to depart on a particular day, which is a condition precedent that admits of no latitude. Vide the preceding chapter.

The second point was again argued; and then the judges severally mentioned their ideas upon the subject, without coming at that time to any decision.

Lord Mansfield.—I am extremely glad this motion has been made; the cause came on at Guildhall, by the candour of the parties in the fairest manner. But I had no intimation of it's being a cause of consequence till after the verdict; when I was informed 100,000*l.* depended upon it. The question was fairly tried, and the case has been very well argued on both sides. I have thought much of it since the trial. Some things are clear, and there are others, which require consideration. The policy was made on the 20th of August 1776, upon the contingency of a fact, which must have existed one way or the other at the time the policy was underwritten. That contingency was, that the ship should have sailed on or before the 1st of August: consequently it must have taken place or not upon the 20th of that month. The port, from whence the ship was to be insured, was, if I may use the expression, the whole island of Jamaica: but from which of the ports the ship would sail, neither party knew: therefore they have used the words, “at and “from Jamaica.” by force of which, she certainly was protected in going from port to port, and till she sailed. It follows, that the word sailed in the warranty, must mean that she had sailed on her homeward bound voyage. The question then is a matter of fact; and one that admits of no latitude, no equity of construction, or excuse. Had she or had she not sailed on or before that day? That is the question. No matter what cause prevented her; if the fact is, that she had not sailed, though she staid behind for the best reasons, the policy was void: the contingency had not happened; and the party interested had a right to say, there was no contract between them. Therefore what was said in argument is very true: if she had been prevented by any accident from sailing till the 2d of August, as by the sudden want of any necessary repair, or if an enemy had been at the mouth of the port; the captain would have done very right not to sail, but there would have been an end of the policy. It is very different from the cases where a voyage has been begun: there the usage of the voyage may justify going a little out of the direct course. This also is clear; if the ship had broken ground, and been fairly under sail upon her voyage for England on the 1st of August, though she had gone ever so little a way, and had afterwards put back from the stress of weather, or apprehension from an enemy in sight, or had then been put under an embargo, and had been detained till September, it would still have been a beginning to sail; and the stoppage would have come too late: because the warranty was upon a fact antecedent. Such a case happened before me a day or two after the present action was tried. It was an insurance upon a ship from Grenada to London, warranted to sail on or before the 1st of August. She had barely begun to sail on the day, when she was stopped by an embargo, and detained beyond the time. I thought the voyage was begun: the jury were of that opinion; and there has been no motion for a new trial. I am giving no opinion, only breaking the case. Here the whole question turns upon this: did the voyage from Jamaica

Thellusson v.
Fergusson at Guildhall.
Hil. Vac.
1777.

maica homeward begin from St. Anne's, or from Bluefields? Perhaps where a voyage is once begun, the going a little out of the way to join convoy may be very reasonable, and for the benefit of all parties: but still it does not vary the fact of sailing. Here it was very reasonable: but the question, whether the voyage began from St. Anne's or Bluefields, still remains. Another material circumstance arises from the words, "at" and from Jamaica." At the trial, I reasoned thus: "By the terms of the policy she was protected during her stay at Jamaica: by force of them, she had a right to go to any port, or all round the island; and she went to Bluefields for reasons best known to herself. Therefore the voyage began from Bluefields." Had the insurance been at and from the port of St. Anne's, it did strike me, that going round the island to Bluefields, would have been a deviation. But this is a question of so much value and consequence, that the court wishes to consider the case thoroughly, before they give a final decision upon it.

Mr. Justice Aston.—I shall be very glad to consider this case. As at present advised, it seems to me to depend upon a mere matter of fact: and therefore to be very different from the cases of deviation that have been put. In them, the change of voyage, being from necessity, is excused in point of law: but here, the whole question is, did the Capel sail from Jamaica on or before the 1st of August, according to the true sense and meaning of the policy. If she had fairly commenced her voyage, on her departure from St. Anne's, and the going to Bluefields is to be taken as the usage of the voyage, I should think the underwriters would be liable. So, if she had broken ground for the voyage, and had gone but a league, and been blown back again. But if she had found no convoy at Bluefields, she could not have staid there to wait for convoy: that would have vacated the policy.

policy. So, if her going to Bluefields is to be considered only as a continuation of her stay at Jamaica, the policy is at an end. She certainly was ready at St. Anne's to depart for the voyage: and she went to Bluefields, not to take in part of her cargo; (for then it would clearly not have been a commencement of the voyage) but from a just motive. Whether that was or was not a commencement of the voyage, is clearly a matter of fact; and in this case a very material one; therefore ought to be very fully considered.

Mr. Justice Willes.—This is clearly a matter of fact. I think if the ship upon her arrival at Bluefields had found no convoy, she could not have staid there; but must have sailed immediately: or if she had met with convoy, and had staid an unreasonable time for other ships, the insurers would not have been liable.

After these opinions, which evidently lean in support of the verdict, had been delivered, the court took further time to deliberate; and then their unanimous opinion was pronounced by

Lord Mansfield.—We are all satisfied that the truth of the case is, that the voyage from Jamaica to England began from St. Anne's. That, when the ship sailed from St. Anne's, she had no view or object whatsoever, but to make the best of her way to England. That the value of this question, admitted on both sides, shews, that every other ship under the same circumstances looked upon the touching at Bluefields, where the convoy then lay ready, to be the safest course of navigation from Jamaica to England; and that it would have been unwise and imprudent for any ship not to have touched there. The great distinction is this: that she sailed from St. Anne's for England by the way of Bluefields; and that it was not a voyage from St. Anne's to Bluefields with any object or view distinct from the voyage to England. If she had gone first to Bluefields for any purpose independent of her voyage to England, to have taken

taken in water, or letters, or to have waited in hopes of convoy coming there, none being ready, that would have given it the condition of one voyage from St. Anne's to Bluefields; and another from Bluefields to England. But here, under all the circumstances, we think she had no other object than to come directly to England by the safest course. Therefore the rule for a new trial was made absolute.

A few years afterwards a similar decision was made; and the only difference between the cases was this, that in the case now to be mentioned, it was a condition inserted in one of her clearances, that she should pass by the place (at which she was detained by the governor beyond the day named in the warranty) to take the orders of government. But this was not thought sufficient to induce the court to depart from the decision in Bond and Nutt; especially as in this case, the place where the ship was detained was in the direct course of the voyage.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on the French ship L'aimable Gertrude, "at and from Guadaloupe to Havre, warranted to sail on or before the 31st of December." It was tried before Lord Mansfield, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. A motion having been made for a new trial, the case from his Lordship's report, appeared to be as follows: The ship took in her complete lading and provisions for France, and all her clearances and papers, at a port, called Pointe a Pitre, in the island of Guadaloupe, and sailed from thence on the 24th of October, for Basseterre, where there is no port, but only an open road. The town of Basseterre is the residence of the French governor. The ship arrived there at night, when the captain went on shore, and next day waited on the governor, who would not permit him to depart, and to prevent it, took his ship's papers from him. At this place he was detained with his ship till the 10th of January, when Thellusson v. Fergusson.

Doug. 346.

when he set sail with a convoy, which had arrived some little time before, and being separated after some days from the convoy, the ship was taken by an English vessel. The captain, who was the only witness produced at the trial, swore, that notice had been given, on the part of the governor, some days before he sailed, to him and the other captains of ships at Pointe a Pitre, who were preparing to sail for Europe, that a convoy was expected to be at Basseterre from Martinico, on the 25th of October, and that, in consequence of this intimation, he had worked night and day to get ready, and had paid extraordinary gratifications to obtain the ship's papers and clearances as soon as possible; that the desire of being in time for the convoy was the only reason for this haste; and that, although he was not able to sail till the 24th, he was still in hopes of being in time for the convoy, as he thought it might very probably have been detained at Martinico some days beyond its time. The last ship-paper, which he received at Pointe a Pitre, was Le Role d'equipage, or the muster roll. This paper, which was much relied upon by the counsel for the defendant, was dated the 24th of October, and was in the following words: "Vu par nous, chargé du " detail des classes au departement de La Grande
 " terre Guadaloupe, l'equipage denomme au role
 " des autres parts au nombre de vingt personnes,
 " le capitaine compris. Permis au Sieur Jean
 " Jacques Lethuillier commandant le navire L'ai-
 " mable Gertrude du Havre, de s'en servir pour " faire son retour, au dit lieu, passant a la Basse-
 " terre pour y prendre les ordres du gouvernement,
 " en observant les ordonnances et reglemens de
 " la marine." Under this there was written, on the same paper, an account, dated the 30th of October, of some changes in the number of the crew, and under that, the following entry: "Vu par nous, ecrivain de la
 " marine chargé du detail des classes, les vingt
 " cinq personnes existantes au present rôle, le ca-
 " pitaine

“ pitaine compris. Il est permis au Sieur Letbu- “ illier commandant le navire L’aimable Gertrude, “ du Havre, de faire son retour au dit lieu en se “ conformant aux ordonnances et reglemens “ royaux de la marine. A Basseterre Guadeloupe, “ le 2 Janvier, 1779.” On another paper, called Le Congé, dated the 16th of October, which was read on the part of the plaintiff, there was written, at the bottom, as follows: Vu de re“ lache a la Basseterre Guadeloupe, pour y atten“ dre un convoi pour France. Ce 28 Octobre, “ 1778, Monentheil.” The captain swore, that he understood the only reasons for the condition in the muster roll, that he should go to Basseterre, were, that the convoy was to be at that place, and that he might take such dispatches as were ready for Europe. He had not objected to it; because in the regular course of his voyage to France from Pointe a Pitre, he must have gone that way, close under the guns of Basseterre, in order to avoid Montserrat, there being no other road, except they were to keep quite to the leeward, which is not the custom. If he had arrived there in the day-time, he would not have cast anchor, but would have sent his boat for the dispatches; but having arrived at night, his ship had been detained, contrary to his intention and expectation. The defendant’s counsel to invalidate the captain’s testimony, besides the muster-roll, and the entry under it, as above stated, read the protest made by the captain on his arrival at Dover; and also his deposition in answer to the 29th interrogatory in the proceedings in the Admiralty, on the condemnation of the ship. The words of the protest, on which they relied, were as follows: “ Whereupon he (the captain) wait“ ed on the proper officer at Pointe a Pitre for “ his muster roll, and was by him informed, it “ could not be granted, but on condition that he “ should first sail to Basseterre, and there wait the “ directions of the general of the island.” And
 in

in a subsequent part, " Whereupon at his (the " captain's) instance, the said John Nicholas Le-
 " thuillier, his father, came to Basseterre, and " went with Messrs. Gobert and Boteul, commis" sioners of commerce, to the superintendant, and " also to the general of the island, stating to them
 " that the said ship and cargo were insured upon " condition that she should have departed from
 " the island of Guadaloupe before the 31st of De- " cember, the terms of which insurance they " judged it essential to fulfil, notwithstanding " which, they were still refused permission to de" part, and were kept there until after the 31st
 " of December." The deposition relied on was as follows: " At the time the ship was first pur" sued and taken, she was steering her course to" wards Brest. Her course was not altered upon " the appearance of the vessel, by which she was " taken. Her course was at all times, when " the weather would permit, directed to Brest,
 " for which port she was directed to sail, although " the destination was for Havre de Grace, by the " ship's papers. She was not, before nor at the " time of the capture, sailing beyond or wide of " Havre de Grace. She was then about eight " leagues west of Ushant, and her course was not " altered to any other port or place, but was o" bliged to be directed to Brest, in consequence " of the orders he had received, subsequent to " the delivery of the ship's papers." In answer to the 27th interrogatory, his deposition was, " That
 " all the ship's papers found on board were true
 " and fair, and none of them false and colour-" able." At the trial the captain swore, that he had received the directions to keep in the course to Brest at Basseterre from his father, who had formerly commanded the ship; but that this was done as the safest way, in time of war, of getting to Havre, which still continued to be the place of the ship's destination. Upon this evidence, the defendant's counsel made two objections, as grounds
 for

for a new trial : 1st. That there had been no inception of the voyage on the 24th of October, nor till after the 31st of December : 2dly. That the ship never sailed on the voyage insured, viz. from Guadaloupe to Havre, but on a voyage from Guadaloupe to Brest. After both these points had been fully argued at the bar,

As to the 2d point, vide ante c. 17. P. 359.

Lord Mansfield said: In my apprehension, there is no contradiction between the parole evidence, and the protest and depositions. This captain had never heard of the case of Bond and Nutt. Under an insurance at such a place as Guadaloupe or Jamaica, the ship is protected in going from port to port in the island. But the question here is, whether the voyage was bond fide commenced; and stopt by accident. As to the condition about taking the orders of government; the ship could not sail from any part of the island without the governor's leave. But the captain, when he left Pointe a Pitre, expected to meet a convoy at Basseterre, and to proceed immediately without interruption. A convoy had been published, and he certainly would have gone to Basseterre at any rate, independent of the clause in the muster-roll. With regard to the second point, the voyage to Brest was, at most, but an intended deviation, not carried into effect.

Vide c. 17.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Ashurst concurred.

Mr. Justice Buller.—The case in 1777 between the same parties is in point. There was no embargo there, nor in the present case, when the ship sailed. There must be a lawful bond fide sailing, which I think there was in this case. The ship was completely ready in all respects. The rule for a new trial was, therefore, discharged.

See Lord Mansfield's opinion in the case of Bond v. Nutt, where he quotes the case alluded to.

Notwithstanding the uniformity of decision in all these cases, the judgment given in the last cause was not satisfactory to about twenty other under-

See the Introduction for the History of the Consolidating Rule.

Thellusson v. Staples.
Sittings at Guildhall.
East. Vac.
1780.

underwriters upon the same policy, nineteen of whom obtained leave to consolidate their different causes, upon the usual terms, in order to bring the question once more into court. Accordingly, in the ensuing sittings, the cause was set down for trial.

In this cause, the second point as to the deviation was abandoned; and on the first, the same evidence was given as upon the former occasion. The point was again fully argued for the defendant.

Lord Mansfield.—The single question on this policy is, whether the ship sailed on her voyage to Havre before the 31st of December. She certainly sailed from Pointe a Pitre completely loaded before that time. The doubt on the first question of this sort was this: the policy was “at and “from Jamaica,” now the word at certainly comprizes the whole island, and, under that word, you may sail from one port to another every-where along the coast of the island. The ship therefore, in that sense, was still at Jamaica, after she had got to Bluefields. She did not leave Bluefields till after the day named in the warranty, and that place was quite out of the course of navigation from St. Anne’s to England. I own, at the trial, I thought the voyage to England did not commence till the ship sailed from Bluefields, and, according to my opinion then, a verdict was found for the defendant. But there was a doubt. I therefore wished (as I always do in such cases) that the opinion of the court might be taken, in order to settle the point. The case, when it came on in court, was very ably argued; I was completely convinced, and the court were unanimously of opinion, that the voyage to England began when the ship sailed from St. Anne’s; and upon the second trial, the plaintiff had a verdict. Earle and Harris was still a stronger case. There an embargo was actually published, before the ship sailed, and the captain, immediately after crossing Earle v. Harris.

At Guildh.
Hil. Vac.
1780.

crossing the bar, returned to make a protest, and sent his ship knowingly into the embargo: but he swore that he expected the embargo was to be taken off, and that he should proceed immediately upon his voyage; and the jury believed him. In this case to go by steps. There was public notification of a convoy to be at Basseterre on the 25th of October. The captain thought that it might be stopped a day or two at Martinitico, and that he should get to Basseterre in time. He worked night and day, paid double fees for his papers, and sailed with full expectations of pursuing his voyage directly. He knew of no embargo, and Basseterre was directly in his road. In that respect, this case differs strongly from Bond v. Nutt. He was even in the regular voyage obliged to pass under the cannon of Basseterre. He had his muster-roll, on condition of calling there; but he made no difficulty of taking it on that condition, because he knew he must pass that way at all events. Did he not boná fide begin his voyage? He certainly had no idea, when he sailed from Pointe a Pitre, of meeting with any stop. So it was in the former case of Thebellusson v. Fergusson. There was no idea of the embargo in that case, when the ship sailed. Here there is not the least suspicion of fraud. This captain certainly did not know of the decision in Bond v. Nutt. He thought, when he was detained at Basseterre beyond the 31st of December, that the policy was forfeited, which is a strong circumstance in the plaintiff's favour, for it shews that the sailing was not colourable. This question has undergone the consideration of a special jury and of the court. Underwriters have a right to litigate questions, which seem to them to be in their favour. But, at last, there should be an end of litigation. If you should be of the same opinion with the former jury and the court, you will find for the plaintiff: which they did accordingly. The cause of the twentieth

The Grenada Case.
Vide Supra.

underwriter, on the same policy, who refused to consolidate, stood next in the paper for trial; but upon the above verdict being given, his counsel consented that a verdict should also be entered against him.

From this long train of uniform and consistent determinations, it should seem that the question, what shall or shall not be a departure within the meaning of the warranty is now completely settled.

Postlethw.
Dict. tit.
Convoy.

J Emerigon,
Traité des Assurances,
p. 164.

The second species of warranty, which most frequently occurs in insurances, is that of sailing under the protection of convoy; that is, certain ships of force, appointed by government, in time of war, to sail with merchantmen from their port of discharge to the place of their destination. When the nature of a convoy is considered, it is highly reasonable, that the policy should be forfeited, if the insured fail to comply with so material a condition; because the risk, which the underwriter takes upon himself, is very considerably increased, in time of war, by the want of convoy. Accordingly, by the laws of this, and of all other maritime powers, if the insured warrant that the vessel shall depart with convoy, and it do not; the policy is defeated, and the underwriter is not responsible. We have already seen, that every warranty must be strictly and literally complied with; and that a liberal and substantial performance merely will not be sufficient. Hence in a warranty to sail with convoy, it becomes material to consider, what shall be deemed a convoy within such a condition. Upon this point, it has been solemnly settled by the court of King's Bench, Mr. Justice Willes excepted, who differed from the other learned judges upon that occasion, that it is not every single man of war, which chuses to take a merchant ship under its protection; that will constitute such a convoy as a warranty means; but it must be a naval force under the command of a person appointed by the government of the country country to which they belong. The reason of such a decision is wise; because government must be supposed to be better informed of the designs and strength of the enemy, and what degree of force will be sufficient to repel their attempts. In the case, in which these points were settled, it also became a question, how far sailing orders from the commander in chief to the particular ship or ships, were requisite to the constitution of a convoy. But it was not thought necessary to decide that point, although it seemed to be the opinion of the majority of the judges, that they were not absolutely essential.

This case came before the court upon a rule to shew cause why the verdict, which the defendant had obtained, should not be set aside, and a new trial had. It was an action upon a policy of insurance on the ship Arundel, captain Mann, at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to depart with convoy. The insurance was at 18 guineas per cent. to return 3 per cent. if the ship sailed on or before the first of August. The facts appearing on the report of Lord Mansfield, who tried the cause, are these: On the 25th of July the Arundel sailed from Morant harbour to Kingston, where she met the Glorieux man of war, Captain Cadogan, who was likewise on his way to join Admiral Graves at Bluefields. Lord Rodney had appointed Admiral Graves to rendezvous at Bluefields, in order to take the fleet of merchant ships, which were to sail from thence upon the first of August, under his command, and to convoy them to Great Britain. Captain Mann, upon their meeting in Kingston harbour, asked for sailing orders from Captain Cadogan, who said, he had none, not having himself at that time joined the Admiral: but he was sure that Admiral Graves would not sail from Bluefields till the Glorieux joined him. However, if he should have sailed, he, Captain Cadogan, would give Captain Mann sailing orders, and take every care of the Arundel

Hibbert v.
Pigon. B. R.
Easter.
23 Geo. 3.
1783.

in his power. They proceeded together, and arrived at Bluefields on the 28th of July; but they found that Admiral Graves had sailed two days before. The Glorieux and Arundel then sailed from Bluefields, the former firing guns, giving signals, and behaving in every respect like a convoy. Upon the fifth of August a signal was made, that the fleet was in sight; and on the seventh they joined the fleet off Cape Antonio. The Arundel was afterwards lost in September, in a dreadful storm, which dispersed the whole fleet, and in which a vast number of the ships perished. Upon this evidence, the jury were of opinion, under the direction of the Chief Justice, that the terms of the warranty had not been performed, and they therefore found a verdict for the underwriters, the defendants. After this question had been fully argued at the bar, the three judges, Mr. Justice Ashurst being, at that time, one of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, delivered their opinions severally.

Lord Mansfield.—Though the underwriters and insured are equally innocent; yet I cannot help saying, that now, as well as at the trial, my inclination led me to wish, that the plaintiffs were in the right. But the more it is argued, it is the less liable to dispute. There are hypothetical contracts and conditional contracts. In the former, the contract depends upon an event taking place; there is no latitude; no equity; the only question is, has that event happened. But conditional contracts admit of a more liberal construction. Now the only question upon this contract is, whether this ship has departed with convoy. A great deal must be referred to the usage of merchants. The government appoints a convoy for the trade, and also names a place of rendezvous. Then comes the reference to the usage of merchants; the voyage is begun at Kingston; but the risk only commences at Bluefields. Now though Lord Rodney desires the captain of the

Glorieux

Glorieux to take any ships he may pick up in his way, and convoy them to Bluefields; yet the warranty in the policy by the usage, does not require convoy to Bluefields. The second reference to the usage of merchants is, what is esteemed a convoy by merchants. A convoy is a naval force, under the command of that person, whom government has appointed. They trust to the knowledge of government, which must be supposed to be better acquainted with the plans and force of the enemy, and with the strength necessary to repel their attempts. Now this is the general usage, to which matters of this kind are referred. Then let us see what the case is here.—Lord Rodney appoints Admiral Graves to go with ten sail of the line to Bluefields; and from thence to convoy the Jamaica trade to Great Britain. When they come to the place of rendezvous, they take sailing orders from the Admiral, which are essential to convoy, as by them they know the signals, for what places they are to steer, in case of dispersion by storm, or any other just cause. Admiral Graves, on the 26th of July, for reasons best known to himself, thinks he has got all the ships, for which he ought to stay, and proceeds on his voyage. He leaves no order for the Glorieux to follow him to Cape Antbonio; and though it is very true, that it is in the power of the Commander in Chief to change the place of rendezvous, yet in this case it is not true, as was supposed in argument, that Cape Antbonio was appointed. At the time of sailing from Bluefields, the Glorieux was no part of the convoy; for she did not come there, till two days after the fleet was gone. Upon these facts it did appear to me, and to the jury at the trial, that the warranty was not complied with: I continue of the same opinion now; and that this rule should be discharged.

Mr. Justice Willes.—I cannot perfectly coincide with every thing which Lord Mansfield has laid down. The form of the contract is in general words, "to depart with convoy," without mentioning any particular day, or pointing out any specifick convoy. The terms of the policy seem to me to have been liberally and substantially complied with; for there was no laches on the part of the Arundel; she came with all possible expedition, and was at Bluefields two days before the time appointed for sailing. When captain Mann found that the fleet was gone, he did every thing in his power for the security of the ship; for he put himself under the protection of the Glorieux, which was appointed by Lord Rodney to make a part of the convoy: and it appears in evidence, that in every respect Captain Cadogan behaved as a convoy. I have searched a good deal for cases; and I can only find one in Strange 1250, upon the subject of sailing orders; and I do not think that case goes so far as to say, that sailing orders are essential to a convoy. The loss of the Arundel happened long subsequent to her joining the fleet; and I am therefore of opinion, that the warranty in this policy has been substantially performed.

V.de Post.
1. 398.

Mr. Justice Buller.—In deciding this case, it is not necessary to say, whether sailing orders are essential or not: as at present advised, I do not say that they are absolutely necessary. The present question is simply this: did the Arundel sail with convoy. This is a condition which must be literally complied with, as all the cases agree. As to the question itself, it is undoubtedly a question of fact: and the facts of the case seem to me to prove, that the Glorieux was no part of the convoy. Admiral Graves had sailed before they arrived; and that circumstance, which my Lord stated, seems very material, that no orders were left behind for the Glorieux. I say that, on this evidence, she was not a part of the convoy: for in order to make her so, it must appear that she was under the orders of Graves. Did he leave

leave her behind to take care of the ships that remained? If so, it would alter the case very materially. But there was no such idea; for if there had, the Glorieux would have remained at Blue-fields for the rest of the ships, until the 1st of August: on the contrary, Captain Cadogan, finding that Admiral Graves was gone, immediately followed; for his sole object was to join Admiral Graves. Ships must sail under the convoy appointed by the government of the country, who proportion the strength of it to the necessity of the times. To what end would this care be taken, if merchantmen were to sail under the protection of single ships, with which they may happen to meet? I am therefore of opinion, that if a ship do not sail with the convoy appointed by government, it is not a sailing with convoy, within the terms of the policy. The rule for a new trial was therefore discharged.

Although the decisions of the court of King's Bench require no additional authority to support them; yet it will be proper, merely by way of illustration, to point out to the reader, in what cases the opinions of foreign writers agree with the determinations of the English courts of justice. Monsieur D'Emerigon, a very distinguished French writer upon this branch of jurisprudence, puts this case: "On avoit fait des assurances sur un navire, de sortie de Marseille jusqu' aux D^etroits de Gibraltar, et dans la police il étoit dit que le navire partiroit de Marseille sous l'escorte d'un bâtiment de roi; autrement, assurance nulle. Une fregate, chargée de munitions de guerre pour Algeras, se trouvoit à l'Estaque. Le navire assuré mit à la voile sous les auspices de cette fregate qui lui accorda protection, et qui partit en meme temps. Consulté sur ce cas, je fus d'avis que si le navire étoit pris par les ennemis, les assureurs seroient fondés à refuser le payment de la perte: car autre chose est d'être

i Emerigon.
P. 171.

C C 4

sous

“ sous l'escorte d'un bâtiment de roi, et autre chose “ est de naviguer simplement sous ses auspices.”

See the Case.

From the case of Hibbert and Pigeon we collect this; that a convoy appointed by the Admiral, commanding in chief upon a station abroad, is a convoy appointed by government. And besides the instruction it affords, applicable to the particular subject, for which it was here inserted, it serves to establish some principles laid down at the beginning of this chapter; that whether the loss do or do not happen, on account of the breach of the warranty, still the policy is forfeited: for in this case, the ship insured perished in a storm, long after she had joined the regular convoy; and consequently the loss did not happen, on account of the breach of the condition.

Having seen what shall be deemed a convoy, let us proceed to consider what shall be a departure with convoy, within the meaning of a warranty to depart with convoy. The rule on this point is short and clear, that such a warranty implies, that the ship shall go with convoy from the usual place of rendezvous, at which the ships have been accustomed to assemble; as Spithead, or the Downs for the port of London; and Blue-fields for all the ports in Jamaica. And from the particular port to such usual place of convoy, the ship is protected by the policy.

Lethulier's
 Case.
 2 Salk. 443.

Thus in an action on a policy of insutance by the defendant at London, insuring a ship from thence to the East Indies, warranted to depart with convoy; the declaration states, that the ship went from London to the Downs, and from thence with convoy, and was lost. After a frivolous plea and demurrer, the case stood upon the declaration, to which it was objected, That here was a departure without convoy.

Per Curiam.

The clause, warranted to depart with convoy, must be construed according to the usage among merchants, merchants, that is, from such place, where convoys are to be had, as the Downs, &c.

It is true, Lord Chief Justice Holt, upon that occasion, was of a different opinion; but the judgment of the other judges was relied upon, and confirmed in the following case by Lord Chief Justice Lee, and has also been recognized in several other cases, in which the question has come collaterally before the court. Indeed of late years, it has been tacitly acquiesced in; for there never is a convoy from the port of London.

On an insurance from London to Gibraltar, Gordon v. Morley. warranted to depart with convoy, it appeared that there was a convoy appointed for that trade at Spithead, and the ship Ranger, having tried for convoy in the Downs, proceeded for Spithead, and was taken in her way thither. The insurers insisted, that this being the time of a French war, the ship should not have ventured through the Channel, but have waited in the Downs for an occasional convoy. And many merchants and office-keepers were examined to that purpose. But Lord Chief Justice Lee held, that the ship was to be considered as under the defendant's insurance to a place of general rendezvous, according to the interpretation of the words, "warranted to depart with convoy." Salk. 443. And if the parties meant to vary the insurance from what is commonly understood, they should have particularized her departure with convoy from the Downs. The jury was composed of merchants, who found for the plaintiff, upon the strength of this direction. 2 Stra. 1265.

A similar decision was made in the year 1781, by the Admiralty of France, which is reported in the work of Emerigon. Tom. 1. p. 165.

Upon this kind of warranty, it is to be observed, that although the words commonly used are, "to depart with convoy," or, "to sail with convoy," yet they extend to sailing with convoy. 2 Salk. 443.

voy throughout the whole of the voyage, as much as if those words were inserted. Indeed, to suppose the contrary would introduce an infinite variety of frauds; as a ship would sail out of harbour with the convoy, continue with it for an hour or two, then leave it, and run every peril, at the risk of the underwriter. If, therefore, the convoy is only to go a part of the way, that is not a compliance with the warranty; and the insurer is discharged from his engagements.

3 Levinz.
320.

This was one of the points ruled in Jeffreys v. Legendra, that will be quoted at length presently, in which Lord Chief Justice Holt and the rest of the court held, that although the words of the policy only were "to depart with convoy," yet they extend to sail with convoy throughout the whole voyage.

In a more modern case, however, this doctrine came again in question; and after very full consideration, the opinion of Lord Holt was unanimously confirmed by the whole court of King's Bench.

Lilly v. Ewer.
Doug. 72.

It was an action for money had and received, brought against an underwriter for a return of premium. The policy was on the ship the Parker Galley, "at and from Venice to the Current Islands, and at and from thence to London," at a premium of 5 guineas per cent. "to return 2 per cent. if the ship sailed with convoy from Gibraltar, and arrived." The ship touched at Gibraltar on her way home, and sailed from thence under convoy of the Zephyr sloop of war, but the convoy was destined only to go to a certain latitude, about as far as Cape Finisterre, being ordered on the Lisbon station; and accordingly the ship and convoy separated, and the ship arrived safe at London. The only question in the cause was, whether, by the terms of the policy, the condition for the return of premium was a departure from Gibraltar with such convoy as could be met with, for whatever part of the voyage that might happen to be, or a departure with convoy for the voyage. The trial came on before Lord Mansfield and a common jury, when a verdict was found for the plaintiffs.

A rule having been obtained to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, the evidence from his Lordship's report, appeared to be thus: That the plaintiffs had called witnesses (one of whom was Mr. Gorman, an eminent merchant) to prove that for some years past, when convoy for the voyage, or the whole voyage was intended, those explanatory words had been added, and that, by this usage, the expressions of "sailing with convoy," and "sailing with convoy for the voyage," had received distinct technical meanings: "with convoy," signifying whatever convoy the ship should depart with, whether for a greater or less part of the voyage. Several policies were also produced, which had been filled up at the office of the same broker, who had prepared that which had given occasion to this cause, in which the words, "for the voyage," or "for England," were added. The captain proved, that at the time when he left Gibraltar, no other convoy was to be had. The witnesses for the defendant swore, that they understood the words "with convoy," to mean, convoy for the voyage; and the broker said, that, at the time this policy was signed, he understood, and apprehended it was so understood by all the parties, that the convoy was to be for the voyage, and that the return was such as was usual, when convoy for the voyage was meant. His Lordship, after stating the evidence, said, that when the case was opened, he thought, on the face of the policy, that the words must mean for the voyage. He had not admitted the counsel to ask the opinion of the witnesses on the construction; but to learn whether there was any usage in this case, which would give a fixed and technical sense to the words. This was a question question of fact to be ascertained by evidence, and proper for the consideration of a jury.

The case was fully argued at the bar.

Lord Mansfield. On the words I was strongly of opinion, that the policy meant a departure with convoy intended for the voyage. The parties could not mean a departure with convoy, which might be designed to separate from the ship in a minute or two; though, when convoy for the whole of a voyage is clearly intended, an unforeseen separation is an accident, to which the underwriter is liable; for the meaning of such a warranty is not that the ship and convoy should continue and arrive together. But I still think that the evidence was properly admitted at the trial of this cause; because the sense contended for by the plaintiffs, was not inconsistent with the words of the policy, and therefore it was material to see what the usage was. I laid great stress on Mr. Gorman's testimony. I did not consider him as a common witness. However, it seems, from what I have heard since, that people in the city are dissatisfied with the verdict, and think the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses was founded on a mistake. Certainly critical niceties ought not to be encouraged in commercial concerns; and wherever you render additional words necessary, and multiply them, you also multiply doubts and criticisms. It may be hard, because words have been added in some instances, to force a construction in this case, from the omission of them. The question is of great importance. The rule was therefore made absolute.

Doug. p. 74.
note (7)

The new trial came on before Lord Mansfield at the sittings after Trinity term, 19 Geo. 3. when a verdict was found for the defendant, the insurer.

Doug. 73.

But although it has been thus settled, that a ship must depart with convoy for the whole of the voyage; yet in the last case, it was truly said by Lord Mansfield, that an unforeseen separation is an accident, cident, to which the underwriter is liable. It is the law of reason and common sense; for it would be the height of injustice and cruelty to heap misfortune upon misfortune, and to say, that, because a ship has been separated from her convoy by stress of weather, or the fury of the elements, that the insured shall suffer still greater misery, by being deprived of that indemnity which he had secured to himself by paying a sufficient and adequate premium. The law of England does not tolerate such principles; and the first decision upon the subject was such, that it never has been departed from in any instance.

Assumpsit on a policy of insurance made in the usual form, "from London to Cadiz, warranted "to depart with convoy." Upon the general issue pleaded, the jury found a special verdict, stating, that the ship did depart from the port of London, in company of the convoy intended, and sailed together as far as the Isle of Wight, in pursuance of the voyage towards Cadiz; and there they were separated by stress of weather; that the convoy put into Torbay, and the insured ship into the port of Fowey in Cornwall. That three days afterwards, the wind setting right to bring the convoy down the channel, the master of the insured ship sailed out of Fowey on purpose to meet the convoy; but it did not come: and then the insured ship was seized with another storm, so that she could not return from whence she came, but was driven upon the French coast, and there taken by the enemy.

After several arguments of this special verdict, the plaintiff had judgment per totam curiam; and their principal reason was, because there was no manner of neglect, or other default found in the master of the ship; but it appeared he had done all in his power to keep in company of the convoy. It is found expressly, that he departed with convoy from his first port, which answers the words of the policy: but it would have been otherwise, if 166.

1 Emerigon,

Jeffery v. Legendra.

3 Lev. 320.

2 Salk. 443.

Carth. 216.

1 Shower,
320.

4 Mod. 58.
S. C.

Carthew, 216.

if any fraud or neglect had been found in the master of the insured ship after his departure, notwithstanding he departed out of the first port with convoy; for the meaning of the words "warranted to depart with convoy" is, that the insured ship should keep company with the convoy, during the whole voyage, if possible.

Even where the ship has by tempestuous weather been prevented from joining the convoy at all, at least, of receiving the orders of the commander of the ships of war, if she do every thing in her power to effect it, it shall be deemed a sailing with convoy, within the terms of the warranty.

Victoria v.
Cleeve.
2 Stra. 1250.

The plaintiff had insured on goods in the John and Jane from Gottenburgh to London, with a warranty to depart with convoy from Fleckery. In July 1744, the ship sailed from Gottenburgh to Fleckery, and there she waited for convoy two months. On the 21st of September, at nine in the morning, three men of war, who had one hundred merchant ships in convoy, stood off Fleckery, and made a signal for the ships there to come out, and likewise sent in a yaul to order them out. There were fourteen ships waiting, and the John and Jane got out by twelve o'clock, and one of the first; the convoy having sailed gently on, and being two leagues a-head. It was a hard gale, and by six in the afternoon, the ship came up with the fleet; but could not get to either of the men of war for sailing orders, on account of the gale of wind. It was stormy all night, and at day-break the ship in question was in the midst of the fleet; but the weather was so bad, that no boat could be sent for sailing orders. A French privateer had sailed amongst them all night; and it being foggy on the 22d, attacked the John and Jane about two, who kept a running fight till dark, which was renewed the next morning, when she was taken. For the defendant it was insisted, that this ship was never under convoy, nor is ever ever considered so, till they have received sailing orders; and if the weather would not permit the captain to get them, he should have gone back.

But the Chief Justice and the jury were both of opinion, that as the captain had done every thing in his power, it was a departing with convoy: and those agreements are never confined to precise words; as in the case of departing with convoy from London, when the place of rendezvous is Spithead, a loss in going thither is within the policy. So the plaintiff recovered.

Sir William Lee.

But it is evident from all that has been said, that if there be an opportunity of convoy; if the convoy throw out repeated signals to join; and by the negligence and delay of the captain of the insured ship, the opportunity be lost, the warranty to depart with convoy, is not complied with, and the underwriter is discharged.

Thus in an action on a policy of insurance tried before Lord Mansfield, the plaintiff was nonsuited, there being a warranty to depart with convoy; and it appearing from the evidence, that the commodore of the convoy had made signals for sailing from Spithead to St. Helen's the night before, and had made repeated signals the next morning from seven o'clock till twelve, notwithstanding which, the ship insured had neglected to sail with him, and did not sail till two hours after, in consequence of which he was taken by a privateer (a).

Taylor v. Woodness. Sittings at Guildhall. Hil. Vac. 4 Geo. 3.

The third and last species of warranty, which falls under our consideration, is that of neutrality; or that the ship or goods insured are neutral property. This condition is very different from either of the two former; for if this war-

(a) As to the duty of the officers appointed for convoy to merchant ships, see it prescribed in the stat. of the 13. Cha. 2. stat. 1. c. 9. art. 17, which regulations were confirmed by the 22d. of Geo. 2. c. 33. s. 2. art. 17.

Vide c. 10.

ranty be not complied with, the contract is not merely avoided for a breach of the warranty, but it is absolutely void ab initio, on account of fraud. This ground was entered upon in the chapter of fraud; and the principle, on which the difference turns, is this. A man may warrant that his ship shall sail with convoy; and if that condition be not complied with, it is not his fault, because it depends upon the acts of other men: but still he is the sufferer, for he loses the benefit of his contract. So also if he warrant to sail on a particular day, and do not, he is guilty of no crime; for that was a circumstance, the performance of which depended on a thousand accidents, such as wind, weather, repair, &c.: but as he had expressly undertaken, he loses the effect of his policy by non-compliance. But in neither of these cases, as I have said, is the insured, making such a warranty, guilty of any offence. Not so with him, who warrants property to be neutral. That is a fact, which at the time of insuring, must be within his own knowledge; and if he assert it to be neutral, knowing it to be otherwise, he is guilty of a wilful and deliberate falsehood, and incurs moral turpitude. In such a case, therefore, the contract between the parties is absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

Woolmer v.
Muilman.
4 Burr. 1419.
1 Blackst.
Rep. 427.
Vide ante
p. 196.

Thus on a special case reserved for the opinion of the court, it appeared that an action was brought for the recovery of a total loss on a policy of insurance made on goods, on board the ship Bona Fortuna, at and from North Bergen to any ports or places whatsoever, until her safe arrival in London, "warranted neutral ship and property." The ship, with the goods so being on board her, after her departure from North Bergen, and before her arrival at London, proceeding on her voyage, was, by force of the winds, and stormy weather, wrecked, cast away, and sunk in the seas; and the said goods were thereby wholly lost. The ship called La Bona Fortuna,

Fortuna, at and before the time she was lost, was not neutral property, as warranted by the said policy. The question was, whether, under such circumstances, the plaintiff could recover. Lord Mansfield, after hearing counsel for the plaintiff, stopped those for the defendant, saying, the point was too clear to be argued. There was a falsehood, with respect to the thing insured; for he insured neutral property, when it was not so: therefore there is no contract. We must give judgment for the defendant.

If, however, the ship and property are neutral at the time when the risk commences, this is a sufficient compliance with a warranty of neutral property: because it is impossible for the insured to be answerable for the consequences of a war breaking out during the voyage. The insurer takes upon himself the risk of peace or war; they are public events, equally known to both parties.

The plaintiffs insured the ship the Yonge Herman Hiddinga, and her cargo, "at and from L'Orient to Rotterdam, warranted a neutral ship and neutral property." The ship being captured in the course of her voyage by some English men of war, the plaintiffs brought this action against the defendant, one of the underwriters on the policy, stating in their declaration, that the defendant subscribed the policy on the 28th of November 1780, and averring that the ship and cargo were, at that time, neutral property. The trial came on before Lord Mansfield, at Guildhall, when a verdict was found for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the court upon a case stating, that the ship in question sailed from L'Orient, on the voyage insured, on the 11th of December 1780, having the insured cargo on board, and both the ship and cargo were neutral property at the time of the ship's departure from L'Orient, and so continued until the 20th of December 1780, on which day hostilities having

Eden and Another v.
Parkinson.
Doug. 705.

D d

com.

commenced between the English and the Dutch, the Dutch ceased to be a neutral power, and the ship and cargo ceased to be neutral property. They were taken on the 25th of December 1780, and condemned as lawful prize, in the Admiralty court, on the 19th of February 1781.

Lord Mansfield.—Many points have been gone into in the argument on both sides at the bar, which are not necessary for the decision of this case. For instance, there is no doubt but you may warrant a future event. But the single question here is, what is the meaning of this policy. I had not a particle of doubt at the trial, and I know the jury had none; but Mr. Lee pressed for a case, and I granted one out of respect to him. What is the case? It is an insurance upon a ship and her cargo, at and from L'Orient to Rotterdam. The insured warrant them neutral, and the defendant would have the court to add, by construction, "and so shall continue during the whole voyage." The contract is not so. The insured tell the state of the ship and goods then, and the insurers take upon themselves all future events and risks, from men of war, enemies, detentions of princes, &c. The parties themselves could not have changed the nature of the property; but they did not mean to run the risk of the war. If it made a difference what country the property belonged to, the underwriters should have enquired. The risk of future war is taken by the underwriter of every policy. By an implied warranty every ship must be tight, staunch, and strong; but it is sufficient if she be so, at the time of her sailing. She may cease to be so in twenty-four hours after her departure, and yet the underwriter will continue liable. The case of Lilly v. Ewer turns quite the other way. The decision there was, that the ship must sail with convoy, according to the usage of the trade; that is, convoy destined to go as far as usual in that voyage.

Vide ante,
c. 11.

Vide supra.

The

The present is the clearest case that can be. The warranty is, that things stand so at the time; not that they shall continue.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Asbhurst concurred.

Mr. Justice Buller.—The case of Lilly v. Ewer is much against the defendant, for it was not contended there, that the ship must continue with the convoy during the whole voyage. The postea was delivered to the plaintiffs.

And afterwards in a subsequent case of Saloucci v. Johnson, in the course of the argument, Mr. Justice Buller said; I do not agree with the counsel, who contend, that the property must continue neutral during the whole voyage: if it be neutral at the time of sailing, and a war break out the next day, the underwriter is liable. Vide infra.

Having seen what shall be deemed a compliance with a warranty, asserting that the property insured is neutral; and having also considered what effect the breach of such a warranty has upon the contract of insurance; it may be proper to observe, before this chapter is closed, how far our courts of law hold the sentences of foreign courts to be conclusive evidence, that the property was not neutral, so as to discharge the underwriters.

In the first case upon this point it was held, that the sentence of condemnation by a foreign court of Admiralty is not conclusive evidence, that the ship was not neutral; unless it appear that the condemnation went upon that ground: consequently the underwriter remains liable. A sentence of a court of Admiralty binds all the world, as to every thing contained within it; but where the cause of condemnation does not appear to be on the specific ground material to the point in issue, evidence must be admitted in order to explain it.

Insurance of freight and goods was made upon the ship the Jane (or Joanna) at and from Venice to Motteux. Bernardi v. Motteux.

D d 2

London, Doug. 554.

London, “warranted neutral ship and neutral property.” The cause was tried before Lord Mansfield, at Guildhall, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court, upon a case which stated as follows: That the defendant underwrote the policy; that the ship was taken by a French frigate, called La Magicienne, as she was sailing from Venice on her voyage to London; that the plaintiff offered to give evidence on the trial, that the property of the ship and the property of the cargo were neutral; and that the papers belonging to the ship fell overboard by accident, after she was brought to by the French frigate; but the defendant objected to such evidence being received; and he produced as the ground of his objection, the sentence of the condemnation of the ship in the French Admiralty Court, which was read, and is as follows:

“Almeria
“The Joanna.”

“Louis Jean Marie de Bourbon, Duke de Penthièvre, Admiral of France. Seen by us, the “procès verbal, made on board the snow Joanna, “taken by the king’s frigate La Magicienne, com“manded by M. De Boades, dated the 2d of De- “cember last. Signed Saint Owey, steward, Bon- “ret, Dominico Zané. Seen by the captain “commander. Signed Boades;—purporting that “the said 2d of December last, at five o’clock in “the evening, his said Majesty’s frigate, La Ma- “gicienne, commanded by the said Captain De “Boades, being ten leagues east of Cape de Mou- “lines, having discovered a snow steering south “south west, the wind south west, and having “come up with her, and stopt her, under Vene- “tian colours, after an hour’s chase, the said M.
“De Boades ordered the captain to bring on board
“his muster-roll, passport, and bills of loading;
“with which order the captain did not readily “comply, under a pretence that the sea was “rough, and that his long boat was leaky; but,
“being at last obliged to comply, upon threats
“being made of firing on him, and being come

“on

“ on board, he declared, that, in getting up the “ ship's side, the box containing his muster-roll,
“ his patents, and passport had fallen from his poc- “ ket into the sea, and only shewed his bills of “ loading; by which they found the said snow,
“ the Joanna, of 14 men, including officers,
“ commanded by Dominico Zanè of Venice, sailed
“ from Venice the 25th of September, with a cargo “ of 12 bales of silk, dried raisins, oil, &c.
“ and other effects mentioned in the bills of “ loading by him exhibited, for the account of “ sundry persons in Venice, consigned to sundry per- “ sons in London, whither he was bound. These “ goods going into an enemy's country, and the loss
“ of his papers, which had fallen into the sea, rais- “ ing suspicions; the said snow had been stopt,
“ and carried by his majesty's frigate La Magi- “ cienne, to Almeria, where she had been put into “ the hands of the consul, after the said Saint “ Owey, lieutenant, acting as steward, and the “ said Bouret, ensign on board the said frigate,
“ had put their seal on the said snow, where they “ found no papers; and taken on board the said “ ship ten of the said snow's crew, which were “ replaced by six men from on board the Ma- “ gicienne, and three from the Atalante, with “ a coasting pilot, who have brought the said
“ snow into the port of Almeria. The premises “ considered, We, by virtue of the power dele- “ gated to us as aforesaid, have declared, and “ declare, as good prize, the ship the Joanna,
“ her tackle, and apparel, together with the “ goods of her cargo, and do adjudge them to “ the captors; that, in consequence of this de- “ cree, the whole be sold (if not already done)
“ in the usual manner, and the produce divided “ according to the desire and ordinance of the “ king; made the 28th of March 1778. We “ order, by these presents, the vice consul of “ France, at Almeria, to look to the execution “ of this our ordinance; and hereby authorize

“ and command the first tipstaff, or serjeant, to “ proceed in all forms requisite thereto. Done
 “ at Paris the 13th of January 1779, Rigot.”
 The question stated for the opinion of the court was, whether the said sentence was not conclusive evidence against the plaintiff’s recovering in this action. In the course of the arguments, the third article of the regulations of the marine of France, bearing date the 26th of July, 1778 and also the procès verbal, made at the time of the capture, though not stated in the case, nor given in evidence at the trial, were so much referred to, and seemed of such weight to the court, that it will be necessary to insert them in this place.
Arret for the regulation of the marine, &c. 26th July 1778. Art. 3. “ All vessels taken, of what “ nation soever, either neutral or allied, from “ which it is known that any papers have been “ thrown into the sea, suppressed or abstracted, “ shall be declared good prize; together with “ their cargoes, upon the mere proof, that some “ papers have been thrown into the sea, without “ any necessity of examining what those papers “ were; by whom they were thrown; and even “ though a sufficient quantity should remain on “ board to justify that the ship and the cargo be“ longed to friends or allies.” The procès verbal need not be here repeated; for although it is not substantively set out in the case, yet it is copied almost verbatim in the sentence of the French Admiralty. It was admitted at the bar, that the sentence had been appealed from, and had been affirmed; but nothing new or special appeared in the proceedings on the appeal. This case was twice argued at the bar; and after the second argument, the court desired that it might stand over, in order to give time to apply to the defendant for his consent; that the above arret and the procès verbal should be added to the case. To this proposition the defendant would not consent.

Lord

Lord Mansfeld, upon the first argument said: The first principles are clear and admitted. All the world are parties to a sentence of a Court of Admiralty. Here there is a monition published at the Exchange; and in other countries, at some place of general resort; and any person interested may come in and appeal at any time, if there has been no laches. If there has, the time of appeal is limited. But the sentence, as to that which is within it, is conclusive against all persons, unless reversed by the regular court of appeal. It cannot be controverted, collaterally, in a civil suit. The difficulty here is, what the ground was, on which the French Admiralty went; whether the ground of enemy's property, or that of the papers having been thrown overboard. By the maritime laws of all countries, throwing papers overboard is considered as a strong presumption of enemy's property; and upon that principle the arret of 1778 is founded. But, in all my experience in England, I have never known a condemnation on that circumstance only. It is made use of as a strong ground of suspicion. The arret is very rigid. It is difficult to find out what the ground of this sentence was. I incline to think the court went upon the ground of enemy's property, and considered the want of the papers as a strong presumption of that fact; but they did not examine the captain upon interrogatories, as to the contents of the papers; and, upon the whole, enough does not appear on this obscure sentence, to ascertain precisely on what it was founded, and some other method ought to be taken to enquire what the ground of it was. As to whatever it meant to decide, we must take it to be conclusive.

Willes and Ashurst, Justices, concurred with his Lordship.

Mr. Justice Buller inclined to doubt, and said: To be sure, the sentence was obscure, but, taking it altogether, he did not think there was much difficulty in discovering the grounds of it.

The two circumstances, of the cargo being consigned to the enemy, and the falling of the papers into the sea, are stated as the grounds of suspicion. The latter circumstance,—papers falling into the sea,—could not be a ground of condemnation. The other could raise no other suspicion, nor a presumption of any thing else, but the property being enemy's property. It follows, therefore, that the condemnation went upon that ground. If it had gone upon a wilful throwing of papers overboard, that would have been stated, substantively, as the ground. In the first place, lay the arret out of the case; and then wilful throwing papers overboard is only presumptive evidence of enemy's property. Then take the arret, still wilful throwing overboard might have been used as evidence of enemy's property, or it might have been a substantive ground under the arret: here it is not stated as a substantive ground.

Lord Mansfield, after the second argument, said; that if the procès verbal should be agreed to be made part of the case, it would clearly explain the ambiguity of the sentence; as it set forth the ground for taking the ship to have been the arret of July, 1778. Without the procès verbal, he said, the sentence was equivocal; it took all in; and it was difficult to say what it went on. If the papers produced to the captor were fair, the property was neutral. But the procès verbal put the ground of the sentence out of all doubt.

Mr. Justice Buller also declared, that he thought the procès verbal must be taken as part of the proceedings, and, as that expressly referred to the arret, as the ground of the capture, and the sentence was consistent with it, the sentence must be taken to be founded on the arret. But he adhered to his former opinion, on the case as stated without the procès verbal, namely, that the interpretation of the sentence, taken by itself, must be, that the condemnation went on the ground of enemy's property, and was, therefore, conclusive against the plaintiff.

The final refusal of the defendant was signified by Mr. Lee, who assigned as a reason for it, that the procès verbal was not a proceeding in the French court of Admiralty, but merely an account of what passed on the capture, reduced into writing, at the time. He also observed, that, in the sentence, all the procès verbal, except the concluding part, which refers to the arret of July 1778, was recited, and this afforded a strong argument for inferring, that the court had purposely omitted that part of it, to shew that they did not condemn the ship on the ground of the arret.

Lord Mansfield disapproved much of the defendant's refusal, but he said, he thought the justice of the case might still be got at, on the ground of the ambiguity of the sentence, which did not mention a word about the property being enemy's property; that it was clear the French Admiralty meant to proceed on the ground of throwing the papers overboard: and he agreed with the counsel for the plaintiff, that the procès verbal ought to be considered as part of the proceedings, and that the sentence ought not to have been read without it.

Mr. Justice Buller thought there was weight in what had been observed by Mr. Lee, on the reason for omitting the concluding part of the procès verbal in the sentence. Indeed, it was not clear that what was now offered to be produced, was the same procès verbal, which the sentence recites; and if it could be supposed, that the captain had made another, omitting the reference to the arret as the ground of the capture that could only be accounted for, by his having found that the capture could not be supported on that ground.

Mr.

Mr. Justice Willes thought it most manifest, that the procès verbal made at the time of the capture was that, on which the sentence proceeded. The sentence began with mentioning it, and recited it exactly, as to date, and every thing else, as far as it went. The word purporting did not require a recital of the whole; and it was not necessary for the Admiralty Court to set forth the captain's reasons for detaining the ship. He had all along been of opinion that the sentence was so ambiguous, that it did not appear that the cause of condemnation was that the property was neutral, and therefore had thought evidence necessary to explain it.

Mr. Justice Ashburnst concurred, as to the ambiguity of the sentence, and that it was, therefore, not conclusive; and on that ground, Lord Mansfield, and Willes and Ashburnst, Justices, declared their opinion that the posse ought to be delivered to the plaintiff. Lee still urged the danger of opening the sentences of foreign courts of Admiralty, which are generally informal; upon which, Lord Mansfield said, all the supposed inconvenience would be obviated, if the foreign courts would say in their sentences, "Condemned as enemy's property."

In the case just reported, it is admitted by all the judges, that the sentence of a court of Admiralty abroad is binding upon all parties, as to what appears upon the face of it. And therefore if it appear evident, without a possibility of doubt or ambiguity, that the sentence proceeded upon the ground of the property not being neutral, that is conclusive evidence against the insured, that he has not complied with his warranty; and consequently the underwriter is no longer responsible. This was fully settled in the case of Barzillay v. Lewis.

Barzillay v. Lewis.
B. R. Trin.
Term, 22
Geo. 3.

It was an action on a policy of insurance on a ship from Liverpool to Amsterdam, warranted Dutch property; and it was brought to recover for for a total loss, the ship having been captured by the French, and condemned by the court of Admiralty there. The plaintiff (the insured) was nonsuited in this action from an idea, that the decree of the parliament of Paris was decisive against him, that he had not complied with his warranty. Upon a motion to set aside this nonsuit, the following facts appeared from the report of the judge, who tried the cause: The ship in question was originally a French privateer, called L'Amable Agathée, which was taken by an English privateer, and carried into Liverpool; where she got the name of The Three Graces. A merchant at Liverpool afterwards bought her for a house at Amsterdam, and a passport was sent for her from thence. She was then insured by a Dutch name, and warranted as in the policy; she went to sea, was captured by a French ship, and carried into St. Maloes, where she was released by the Vice Admiralty Court, as being Dutch. But upon an appeal to the parliament of Paris, the sentence was reversed, and she was condemned as lawful prize, by the name of The Three Graces of Liverpool. It appeared in evidence, that there were certain French ordinances, which ordain, that where more than one third of the crew of a neutral ship are enemies to the king of France, the ship shall be confiscated: that no ship shall be considered as transferred, till she has been within the port of the purchaser: and that a passport shall be deemed fraudulent, unless the ship has been in the port, from whence it has been obtained. The ship's crew in question consisted of sixteen, five of whom were French, four were Danes, two were Swedes, one was Dutch, one Portuguese, one Hamburgber, one Norwegian, and one Irishman. Some of the crew swore, that they were hired by Englishmen, and that both the ship and cargo were English. They also swore, that when the ship which took them came in sight, the captain sailed back towards the English coast: but but one of the crew, having informed him, that the ship in sight carried English colours, he resumed his course.

Lord Mansfield.—The sentence of the court of Appeal in France is conclusive. The question is, what that sentence means. She is condemned as not being a Dutch ship. The warranty is, that she is Dutch, which is false. The law of nations is founded on eternal principles of justice; and in every war the belligerent powers make particular regulations for themselves. But no nation is obliged to be bound by them, unless they are agreeable to the general laws of nations; but all third persons and mercantile people are. In this case, the plaintiffs warrant this ship to be Dutch; and they know they must conform to the marine regulations of France. The insurers took the risk upon this warranty; but her pass was not agreeable to the treaty. The parliament of Paris did not condemn her as the Dutch ship of Amsterdam by her Dutch name; but as “The Three Graces of Liverpool.” Indeed, she had none of the requisites of a Dutch ship; and the regulations require that she should have been into the port of the purchaser, in order to transfer the property; the knowledge of all which circumstances the insured, by his warranty, took upon himself. I am therefore of opinion, that the warranty was false.

Mr. Justice Willes, and Mr. Justice Asburst concurred.

Mr. Justice Buller.—The strongest ground seems to be, that she was warranted to be Dutch property; and yet had none of the documents necessary to protect a neutral ship, consistent with the regulations of the court of France. The rule to set aside the nonsuit was accordingly discharged.

It has also been determined, that where no special ground at all is stated; but the ship is condemned generally as good and lawful prize, the court

court here must consider it as conclusive evidence that the property was not neutral, and will not again open the proceedings of the court abroad in favour of the party, who has warranted his property to be neutral.

An action was brought upon a policy of insurance on goods warranted neutral on board the The- tis, a Tuscan ship, to recover the amount of the insurance from the underwriters. The ship had been taken in the course of her voyage by a Spanish vessel, carried into Spain, and her cargo was there condemned “as good and lawful prize.” There was an appeal to a superior court, which reversed the sentence: but upon a further appeal, the latter decision was overturned, and the former confirmed. At the trial of this cause before Lord Mansfield, his lordship being of opinion, that the sentence of the Spanish Court of Admiralty was conclusive evidence of the falshood of the plaintiff’s warranty, the plaintiff was nonsuited. A motion was made, and fully argued to set aside the nonsuit, which was unanimously refused by the whole court of King’s Bench.

Saloucci v.
Woodmafs,
B. R. Hil.
24 Geo. 3.

Lord Mansfield.—The policy here warrants that this cargo was neutral property. It appears from the policy itself, that the ship was neutral; because it is called a Tuscan ship; but the warranty is that the goods are neutral. It must be presumed from the condemnation, as no other cause appears, that it proceeded on the ground of the property belonging to an enemy. In the case of Bernardi v. Motteux, the decision of the court turned upon the particular ground of the confiscation appearing on the face of the sentence; and that it did not appear to be on the ground of being enemy’s property. This being so, the court gave the party an opportunity to shew by evidence, that the specifick ground was really the cause of the condemnation. In this case, at Guildhall, the counsel admitted the general rule; but they said, if a copy of the proceedings could be had, had, a special cause would appear. The proceedings are now come; and from them it appears, that the question turned entirely upon the property of the goods. For in the second court, to which they appealed from the sentence of the first, the question was, whether the goods were free: the decree was, that they were. But the third court overturned the decision of the second. It is sufficient, however, that no special ground is stated; and therefore the rule must be discharged.

Vide supra.

If the ground of decision appear to be a foreign ordinance manifestly unjust, and contrary to the laws of nations, and the insured has only infringed such a partial law, that shall not be deemed a breach of his warranty, so as to discharge the insurer.

Mayne v.
Walter.
B. R. East.
22 Geo. 3.

In a policy of insurance, the ship was warranted to be Portuguese; and having been taken in her voyage by a French privateer, she was carried into France. The Court of Admiralty condemned her because she had an English supercargo on board. It appeared that there was a French ordinance, prohibiting any Dutch ship from carrying a supercargo belonging to any nation at enmity with the court of France. In an action against the underwriter, these facts appeared; upon which, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court, upon this question, whether the circumstance of having an English supercargo was a breach of neutrality; and whether such a sentence was conclusive.

Lord Mansfield.—It is an arbitrary and oppressive regulation, contrary to the law of nations. If you were both ignorant of it, the underwriter must run all risks; and if the defendant knew of the edict, it was his duty to enquire, if there was such a supercargo on board. It must be a fraudulent concealment to vitiate a policy. But it is remarkable that neither party has said any

any thing of the treaties between France and Portugal. Judgment for the plaintiff.

One more rule is worthy of observation; which is, that though the vessel be condemned as prize, yet if the grounds of the sentence appear manifestly to contradict such a conclusion, the court here will not discharge the underwriters, by declaring that the insured has forfeited his neutrality.

An action was brought upon a policy of insurance on the ship Tbetis, a Tuscan ship, warranted neutral. At the trial a verdict was found for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the court upon a case stating, That the plaintiffs were Tuscan subjects resident at Leghorn: that the ship, having neutral goods on board consigned to London, was captured off the coast of Barbary by a Spanish vessel. That she was carried into Spain, and there condemned as prize; which sentence upon appeal to a superior court, was reversed: but upon a further appeal, the last sentence was reversed, and the first confirmed. That the grounds of condemnation [were two; 1st. That the ship Tbetis refused to be searched, and resisted with force, having fired at the ship of the Spaniard: 2d. That the Tbetis had no charter party on board. The captain answers these two grounds thus: 1st. That he resisted and fired, the Spaniard having hailed him under false colours: 2d. That he had taken the goods on board by the piece, and had not freighted her to any individual; in which case a manifesto was sufficient, without a charter party. The sentence of the last court admits the ship to be neutral; for it states it to be "the ship Tbetis, a Tuscan ship, &c."

Lord Mansfield was absent at the argument of this case.

Mr. Justice Willes.—This is clearly a neutral ship. Something was said in argument about barratry; but I do not think the act of the captain in this case amounts to that offence. The Saloucci v.

Johnson.
B. R. Trin.
25 Geo. 3.

second ground of condemnation is given up by the counsel ; and the remaining question is, whether the captain has been guilty of such a breach of neutrality, as should affect the owners. If a ship be neutral, and she be stopped, those, who stop her, must pay for the detention. But it is said, she must stop to be searched. I find no authority for such a position. Besides, the circumstances are very suspicious. The captain seems to have acted properly. Stoppage is always at the peril of the captors.

Mr. Justice Asbhurst.—I take the principle laid down at the bar to be true, that a ship, warranted neutral, must conduct herself so, as not to forfeit her neutrality. But the facts of this case do not admit of the application. I do not find, that a neutral ship must submit to be searched. It is rather an act of superior force, always resisted when the party is able ; and the right falls within this position, that the searcher does it at his peril. If he find any thing contraband, or the property of an enemy, he is justified : if not, he pays costs. Is there any thing to justify the search in this case ? Certainly not, for the cargo was neutral.

Vide supra.

Mr. Justice Buller.—It is not necessary to give an opinion as to barratry ; but I take it to mean a wilful act of the captain to the injury of the owners. This would have been barratry, if it had been an act, which forfeits the neutrality. I do not agree that the property must continue neutral during the whole voyage. If it be neutral at the time of sailing, it is sufficient ; and if a war break out next day, the underwriter is liable. The answer given to the claim of search is conclusive, that the party does it at his peril ; just like the case of Custom-house officers. The practice of the Admiralty confirms it ; for they give costs in cases of improper detention : which they would not do, if neutral ships were, at all events, liable to be stopt. Detention, by particular ordinances, which do not form a part of the law of nations, is a risk within the policy. At first I compared this case in my own mind to that of an illegal voyage; but they are no way similar; for a ship is only bound to take notice of the laws of the country she sails from, and of that to which she sails; but not the particular ordinances of other powers. Judgment was accordingly given for the plaintiff.
part

These are all the cases, which have been decided, relative to the judgments of foreign courts being conclusive, and the effects which they have upon the contract of insurance; and from all of them, it should seem, that this general doctrine may be collected: That wherever the ground of the sentence is manifest, and it appears to have proceeded expressly upon the point in issue between the parties; or wherever the sentence is general, and no special ground is stated, there it shall be conclusive and binding, and the courts here will not take upon themselves, in a collateral way, to review the proceedings of a forum, having competent jurisdiction of the subject matter. But if the sentence be so ambiguous and doubtful, that it is difficult to say on what ground the decision turned; or if there be colour to suppose, that the court abroad proceeded upon matter not relevant to the matter in issue; there evidence will be allowed in order to explain. And if the sentence upon the face of it be manifestly against law and justice, or be contradictory, the insured shall not be deprived of his indemnity; because, to use the words of Mr. Justice Buller, any detention, by particular ordinances or decrees, which contravene, or do not form a part of the law of nations, is a risk within a policy of insurance.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

Of Return of Premium.

HAVING in several chapters spoken fully of the various cases, in which policies of insurance are either absolutely void, or are rendered of no effect by the failure of the insured in the performance of some of those conditions, which he had taken upon himself: the next object of our enquiry will be, in what cases, and under what circumstances, there shall be a return of premium.

Loacenus de jure marit.
l. 2. c. 5. f. 8.

1 Mag. 90.
Farquharson
v. Raym at
Guildhall.

Dougl. 255.

1 Vezey 315.

Pothier
n. 179.

In all countries, in which insurances have been known, it has been a custom, coeval with the contract itself, that where property has been insured to a larger amount than the real value, the insurer shall return the overplus premium: or if it happen that goods are insured to come in certain ships from abroad, but are not in fact shipped, the premium shall be returned. If the ship be arrived, before the policy is made, the insured being ignorant of it, he is entitled to have his premium restored. The parties themselves frequently insert clauses in the policy, stating, that upon the happening of a certain event, there shall be a return of premium. These clauses have a binding operation upon the parties; and the construction of them is a matter for the court, and not for the jury, to determine. — In short, if the ship, or property insured, was never brought within the terms of the written contract, so that the insurer never has run any risk, the premium must be returned.

The principle, upon which the whole of this doctrine depends, is simple and plain, admitting of no doubt or ambiguity. The risk or peril is the consideration for which the premium is to be paid: if the risk be not run, the consideration for the premium fails; and equity implies a condition, dition, that the insurer shall not receive the price of running a risk, if, in fact, he runs none. It is just like the contract of bargain and sale; for if the thing sold be not delivered, the party who agreed to buy, is not liable to pay. Thus to whatever cause it be owing, that the risk is not run, as the money was put into the hands of the insurer, merely for the risk of indemnifying the insured, the purpose having failed, he cannot have a right to retain the sum so deposited for a special cause.

3 Burr. 1240.

Roccus,
Not. 88.

Cowp. 668.

Accordingly in an action of indebitatus assumpsit brought by the plaintiff for 5*l.* received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use, where the general issue was pleaded; it appeared in evidence, that one Barkdale had made a policy of insurance upon account for 5*l.* premium in the plaintiff's name, and that he had paid the said premium to the defendant, and that Barkdale had no goods then on board, and so the policy was void. To this action, two objections were taken: 1st. That it should have been brought in Barkdale's name, which was over-ruled. 2dly. That this ought to have been a special action on the custom of merchants. Lord Chief Justice Holt cited a case of money deposited upon a wager concerning a race, that the party winning might bring an action of indebitatus assumpsit, for money received to his use; for now by the subsequent matter it is become as such. And as to the case in question, the money is not only to be returned by the custom, but the policy is made originally void, the party, for whose use it was made, having no goods on board; so that by this discovery, the money was received without any reason, occasion, or consideration, and consequently it was received originally to the plaintiff's use. And so judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Martin v.
Sitwell.
1 Shower,
156.

I cite this case for two purposes; because it serves to shew in what form of action the plaintiff ought to demand a return of premium: and it also points out, that as early as the beginning of the reign of William and Mary, the true principle, on which the premium ought to be returned, was fully established. It was said in the introduction to this chapter, that clauses are frequently inserted in policies of insurance, containing conditions, on the performance or non-performance of which, the premium is returnable; and that to decide upon the construction of such conditions is the province of the court, and not of the jury. Such a case occurs, which may properly be mentioned here.

Simond and Another v. .
Boydell.
Doug. 255.

This action was brought against an underwriter, for a return of premium. The material part of the policy was in these words: "At and
" from any port or ports in Grenada to London,
" on any ship or ships that shall sail on or be" tween the first of May, and the first of August
" 1778, at 18 guineas per cent. to return £1. per " cent. if she sails from any of the West India
" islands, with convoy for the voyage, and arrives."
At the bottom there was a written declaration that the policy was on sugars (the muscavado valued at 20*l.* per hogshead) for account of L. Q. being on the first sugars which shall be shipped for that account. The ship the Hankey sailed with convoy, within the time limited, having on board 51 hogsheads of muscavado sugar, belonging to L. Q. She arrived safe in the Downs, where the convoy left her; convoy never coming farther, and indeed seldom beyond Portsmouth. After she had parted with the convoy, she struck on a bank called the Pau Sand, at Margate, and 11 of the 51 casks of sugar were washed overboard, and the rest damaged. The ship was afterwards got off the bank, and proceeding up the river, arrived safe in the port of London, and was reported at the custom-house. The sugars saved were taken out at Margate, and, after undergoing a sort of cure, by a person sent from town for that that purpose, they were carried to London in other vessels; and the 40 hogsheads being sold, produced 340*l.* instead of 800*l.* which was their valuation in the policy. The defendant had paid into court the value of the sugars lost, and a return of 8*l. per cent.* on 340*l.* The plaintiffs insisted, that they were entitled to have 8*l. per cent.* also returned on the valued price of the eleven hogsheads of sugar, which were lost, and on the difference between what the remaining forty hogsheads produced, and their valued price. At the trial, before Lord Mansfield, the plaintiffs had a verdict to the full amount of their demand. The chief question, upon the motion for a new trial, was to what the word "arrives" in the policy, was intended to apply.

Lord Mansfield. The ancient form of a policy of insurance, which is still retained, is, in itself, very inaccurate; but length of time, and a variety of discussions and decisions, have reduced it to certainty. It is amazing, when additional clauses are introduced, that the merchants do not take some advice in framing them, or bestow more consideration upon them themselves. I do not recollect an addition made, which has not created doubts on the construction of it. Here a word or two more would have rendered the whole perfectly clear. However, I have no doubt how we must construe this policy. Dangers of the sea are the same in time of peace and of war; but war introduces hazards of another sort, depending on a variety of circumstances, some known, others not, for which an additional premium must be paid. Those hazards are diminished by the protection of convoy, and if the insured will warrant a departure with convoy, there is a diminution of the additional premium. If the insured will not warrant a departure with convoy, he pays the full premium, and in that case, the underwriter says, "If it turn out that the ship departs with convoy, I will return part of the premium." But a

Vide ante
c. 18.

ship may sail with convoy, and be separated from it by a storm, or other accident, in a day or two, and lose its protection. On a warranty to sail with convoy, that would not be a breach of the condition; but, to guard against that risk, the insured adds, in policies of the present sort, “the ship must not only sail with convoy, but she must arrive, to entitle me to the return.” The words, and arrives, do not mean that the ship shall arrive in the company of the convoy, but only that she herself shall arrive. If she does, that shews, either that she had convoy the whole way, or did not want it. But, in the stipulation for the return of premium, no regard is had by the parties to the condition of the goods on the arrival of the ship. The construction, contended for by the defendant, is adding a comment longer than the text. If it had been meant that no return should be made, unless all the goods arrived safe, they would have said, “if the ship arrive with all the goods,” or “safely with all the goods.” The total or partial loss of the goods was the subject of the indemnity, and must be paid for by the underwriter. But, as to the return of the additional premium, whether the goods arrive safe or not, makes no part of the question. The single principle which must govern is, that, in the events which have happened, the war risk has been rated too high.

Mr. Justice Willes, and Mr. Justice Ashturst, were of the same opinion.

Mr. Justice Buller.—I am of the same opinion. The question is for the decision of the court, not of a jury, since it arises on the construction of a written instrument. What gives rise to an increase of the premium? The danger of capture. When that danger is diminished, the construction must be, that there shall be a proportional return of premium. The rule for a new trial was accordingly discharged.

By

By the law of England, it has been clearly settled, that whether the cause of the risk not being run, is attributable to the fault, will or pleasure of the insured, still the premium is to be returned. Foreign writers have in some measure differed in opinion upon this point; and it may not be improper to observe how far they vary or agree with our own. The Italian writers agree with us, that the contract in question is conditional, and that the risk is the very essence and main spring of the whole. But still they insist and contend, that it is not lawful for the assured, by their own act, to break the contract; and that in such a case, the insurer is not obliged to return the premium. They hold indeed, that if the voyage be put an end to by any accident, such as the ship being burnt, or by publick authority; or if more goods were bonâ fide insured, than were actually on board: in the former cases, the whole; and in the latter, a proportional part of the premium should be returned. But if a man say he has goods on board, and insure them, knowing that he has none, they ask this question: “An affecurator teneatur restituere pretium, eo quod in navi non fuerunt merces? Videbatur affecurator teneri ad restitutionem pretii recepti: sed in contrarium est veritas, quod non solum non teneatur pretium restituere, imo possit petere illud; et ratio est, quia licet emptio periculi non teneat in præjudicium promissoris, tamen in ejus favorem, et in præjudicium affecurati falsa assertio bene tenet.”

Cowp. 668.

Roccus, Not. 15. 82. 88.

Roccus, Not. 11.

Santerna. part 3. n. 22.

The French law-givers have, however, decided upon this point agreeably to our laws; and have accordingly, in the famous ordinances of Lewis the Fourteenth, inserted an article, declaring, that if the voyage is entirely broken up, before the departure of the ship, even by the act of the insured, the insurance shall be void, and the underwriter shall return the premium, reserving one half per cent. for his trouble. This article

2 Emerigon 153. Ord. of Lew. 14. tit. Assur. art. 37.

2 Val. 2.

Pothier Not.
179.

Molloy, l. 2.
c. 7. s. 12.

Ord. of Lew.
14. tit. Insur.
art. 41.

Vide ante
c. 10. p. 244.

19 Geo. 2.
c. 37.
Vide supra
c. 14.

Doug. 454.

affords scope to Valin, the very learned commentator upon these ordinances, to point out the advantages which the insured enjoys above the assurer, in being thus able to put an end to the contract, even after it is signed, which the underwriter can by no means effect. Indeed, when we consider that the premium is nothing more than the price of the perils, which the underwriters ought to run; and that the obligation to pay the premium contains this tacit condition, "I will pay if the insurers run the risk;" it is perfectly consistent with that principle, that when the risk is not run, whatever be the cause, the premium is not due to the insurers. Accordingly in England, it has always been the custom, when the policy is cancelled, to return the premium, deducting one half per cent.

The generality of the rule here established would seem to extend it even to cases of fraud on the part of the insured. But the laws of France, upon this subject, have declared, that the insured shall be obliged to restore to the insurer, whatever he has received from him, and also to pay him double the premium. This question relative to a return of premium, in cases of fraud, was very fully discussed in the chapter of fraud, and all the cases fully cited; to that chapter therefore I must now refer the reader.

When a policy is void, being made without interest, contrary to the statute of the 19 Geo. the Second, if the ship has arrived safe, the court will not allow the insured to recover back the premium; according to the old rule of law, in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis. But in the decision of the case, in which this doctrine was held, the court seemed to rely much upon the distinction of contracts executed and executory: that this was a contract executed, the ship having arrived before the demand was made; but that when a contract executory is to be rescinded, it can only be done upon the equitable terms of putting all parties ties in their original situation. Mr. Justice Willes in this case differed in opinion from the rest of the court, for reasons delivered by the learned judge, and which will appear in their proper place.

The plaintiffs had lent to Lawson, captain of the Lord Holland East Indiaman, 26,000*l.* for which he had given them a common bond, in the penal sum of 52,000*l.* While he was with his ship at Cbina, the plaintiffs got a policy of insurance, underwritten by the defendant and others, which was in the following terms: "At and from
 " Cbina to London, beginning the adventure, up" on the goods from the loading thereof on board
 " the said ship at Canton in Cbina, &c. and upon
 " the said ship, from and immediately following " her arrival at Canton, valued at 26,000*l.* be" ing the amount of Captain Patrick Lawson's
 " common bond, payable to the parties as shall " be described on the back of this policy; and it
 " bears date the 16th day of December 1775; and
 " in case of loss, no other proof of interest to be re" quired than the exhibition of the said bond: warrant" ed free from average, and without benefit of salvage
 " to the insurer." At the head of the subscrip" tions was written, "On a bond as above expressed."
 Captain Lawson sailed from Cbina, and arrived safe with his privilege (as it is called) or adventure, in London, on the first of July 1777, none of the events insured against having happened. The receipt of the premium was acknowledged on the back of the policy. The insured brought this action for a return of the premium, on the ground that the policy being without interest, the contract was void. The cause came on before Lord Mansfield, at Guildhall, when his Lordship was of opinion, that the policy was a gaming policy, prohibited by the statute of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. and both parties equally guilty of a breach of the law; that the rule, therefore, of melior est conditio possidentis, was applicable to the case, and the plaintiffs could not recover the premium.

Lowry and Another v.
 Bourdieu.
 Doug. 251.
 Vide ante
 p. 311.

A ver-

A verdict was accordingly found for the defendant, agreeably to his Lordship's directions; but, the next morning, he expressed a doubt as to the propriety of his opinion, because the money had been paid upon an executory agreement, which could never have been completed. A new trial was moved for and fully argued.

Lord Mansfield.—It is certainly true, in many instances, that first thoughts are best. I am now very much inclined to my first opinion. There are two sorts of policies of insurance: mercantile and gaming policies. The first sort are contracts of indemnity, and of indemnity only; and from that principle a great variety of decisions and consequences have followed. The second sort may be the same in form; but in them there is no contract of indemnity, because there is no interest on which a loss can accrue. They are mere games of hazard; like the cast of a die. In the present case, the nature of the insurance is known to both parties. The plaintiffs say, "We mean to game; but we give our reason for it; Captain Lawson owes us a sum of money, and we want to be secure, in case he should not be in a situation to pay us." It was a hedge. But they had no interest; for, if the ship had been lost, and the underwriters had paid, still the plaintiffs would have been entitled to recover the amount of the bond from Lawson. This then is a gaming policy, and against an act of parliament; and therefore it is clear that the court will not assist either party: according to the well known rule, that, in pari delicto, &c. Not that the defendant's right is better than that of the plaintiffs, but they must draw their remedy from pure fountains. I have returned to my old opinion; sometimes you miss the mark, by taking too long an aim.

Mr. Justice Willes.—I shall make no apology for differing from the rest of the court in a case where where such great abilities have entertained two different opinions. The premium has been paid, and yet no risk run; for the policy was void from the beginning, and the insured could not have recovered from the underwriters if the ship had been lost. But I cannot think it a gaming policy. It does not appear to me that the parties had any idea they were entering into an illegal contract. The whole was disclosed, and they thought there was an interest. This was a mistake; but it is a new point of law. The case cited from Precedents in Chancery, is not, perhaps, decisive, but it goes a great way; and it would be very hard that a party should lose that which he has paid under a mere mistake. I think, in conscience, the defendant ought to refund the premium. Vide ante ch. 10. p. 245.

Mr. Justice Ashurst.—I am clear that there ought not to be a new trial. A policy of insurance ought to be a mere contract of indemnity, and nothing more; but here the money might have been paid twice; which shews decisively, that this was a gaming policy.

Mr. Justice Buller.—It is very clear to me that the plaintiffs ought not to recover. There was no fraud on the part of the underwriters, nor any mistake in matter of fact. If the law was mistaken, the rule applies, that ignorantia juris non excusat. This was a mere gaming policy, without interest. There is a sound distinction between contracts executed and executory, and if an action is brought with a view to rescind a contract, you must do it while the contract continues executory, and then it can only be done on the terms of restoring the other party to his original situation. There was a case of Walker v. Chapman, some years ago in this court, where a sum of money had been paid in order to procure a place in the Customs. The place had not been procured, and the party who had paid the money, having brought his action to recover it back; it was held that he should should recover, because the contract remained executory. So, if the plaintiffs in the present case had brought their action, before the risk was over, and the voyage finished, they might have had a ground for their demand; but they waited till the risk, such as it was, (not, indeed, founded in law, but resting on the honour of the defendant) had been completely run. It makes no difference whether the premium was paid before the voyage or after it. The rule was discharged.

Lord Mansfield then said, he desired it might not be understood, that the court held, that, in all cases where money has been paid on an illegal consideration, it cannot be recovered back. That in cases of oppression, when paid, for instance, to a creditor to induce him to sign a bankrupt's certificate, or upon an usurious contract, it may be recovered, for, in such cases, the parties are not in pari delicto.

That the court, in the case just reported, proceeded upon the distinction between contracts executed and executory, is evident not only from Mr. Justice Buller's opinion, but is, in some measure, confirmed by what fell from Lord Mansfield upon a subsequent occasion, when this case was cited.

Wharton v.
De la Rive.
Mich. vac.
1782. at
Guildhall.

It was an action brought upon two wagers; one of 26*l.* 5*s.* to 100*l.* the other of 13*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* to 30*l.* that the colonies of North America would be admitted or acknowledged independent states, by some public official act or instrument, made or executed, on the part of the king or government of France, at some time on or between the 1st of February and the 1st of April 1778, both days inclusive. The defendant pleaded, non assumpsit. Upon the opening of this case, Lord Mansfield directed the plaintiff to be nonsuited. But the counsel for the plaintiff insisted, that he was entitled to a verdict for the premium on the general count in the declaration, for money had and received to his use, which his Lordship ship permitted, on the ground of the contract being void, and of the defendant having money in his hands, which he ought not to retain. For the defendant it was said, that he was entitled to keep the premium; and the case of Lowry v. Bourdieu was cited; but Lord Mansfield thought it did not apply as in that case the risk had been run. The point there decided was, that an insurance being made without interest, and the premium paid, the insured shall not recover back the premium, after the ship has arrived safe. And this upon the distinction, that the contract, though not a legal one, was executed before the relief was applied for, and no longer executory.

From the various cases upon the subject of return of premium, as well as from all that has already been said, it will appear, that in the English law there are two general rules established, which govern almost all cases. The first is, that where the risk has not been run, whether that circumstance was owing to the fault, the pleasure or will of the insured, or to any other cause, the premium shall be returned. This rule has already been pretty fully discussed. Another rule is, that if the risk has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. Hence in cases of deviation, though the underwriter is discharged from his engagement; yet the risk being once commenced, he is entitled to retain the premium. Though these rules are so plain and simple, that they seem to preclude all possibility of doubt or contention; yet there are few points in the law of insurance, which have given rise to a greater number of causes than those which relate to the subject of this chapter. Cowp. 668.

It ought, however, to be acknowledged, that less litigation has taken place in those instances where the whole of the premium is either to be retained or restored, than in those, where from the nature of the agreement between the parties, or the nature of the voyage, the contract becomes divisible,

divisible, and the court can say, "a part of the premium shall be retained for the risk run; and part shall be returned as the risk has never commenced." This seems to be a refinement upon the rules just established; but it must, at the same time, be admitted, that when it can be accomplished, it is a refinement perfectly consistent with equity and good conscience. The one rule has provided, that if the risk be once begun, there shall be no return: but the other rule has said, and equity has also said, that a man shall not be paid for a risk which he has never incurred; from whence the deduction is easy and natural, that if there are two distinct points of time, or, in effect, two voyages either in the contemplation of the parties or by the usage of trade, and only one of the two voyages was made, the premium shall be returned on the other, although both are contained in one policy.

The first time in which this doctrine was considered at any length, was in a case which came before the Court of King's Bench in the year 1761.

Stevenson v.
Snow.

3 Burr. 1237.
and 1 Black.
Rep. 318.
S. C.

It was a special case reserved at a trial at Nisi Prius, before Lord Mansfield, in London, upon an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, brought by the plaintiff, the insured, against the defendant, the insurer, for a return of part of the premium. It was an insurance upon a ship, at five guineas per cent. lost or not lost, at and from London to Halifax, in Nova Scotia, warranted to depart with convoy from Portsmouth, for the voyage, that is to say, the Halifax or Louisburgh convoy. Before the ship arrived at Portsmouth the convoy was gone. Notice of this was immediately given by the insured to the underwriter; and at the same time he was also desired either to make the long insurance, or to return part of the premium. The jury find that the usual settled premium from London to Portsmouth is one and a half per cent. They also find, that it is usual usual for the underwriter, in such like cases, to return part of the premium; but the quantum is uncertain: (And the quantum must in its nature be uncertain, because it depends upon uncertain circumstances.) It is stated, that the plaintiff made an offer to the defendant of allowing him to retain one and a half per cent. for the risk he had run on such part of the voyage as was performed under the policy, viz. from London to Portsmouth.

Lord Mansfield.—I had not at the trial, nor have now, the least doubt about this question, myself. These contracts are to be taken with great latitude: the strict letter of the contract is not to be so much regarded, as the object and intention of it. Equity implies a condition, “that the insurer shall not receive the price of “running a risk, if he run none.” This is a contract without any consideration, as to the voyage from Portsmouth to Halifax; for he intended to insure that part of the voyage, as well as the former part of it, and has not. Consequently the insured received no consideration for this proportion of his premium: and then this case is within the general principle of actions for money had and received to the plaintiff’s use. I do not go upon the usage: for the usage found is only that in like cases, it is usual to return a part of the premium, without ascertaining what part. If the risk is not run, though it is by the neglect, or even the fault of the party insuring, yet the insurer shall not retain the premium. It has been objected, that the voyage being begun, and part of the risk being already run, the premium cannot be apportioned. But I can see no force in this objection. This is not a contract so entire, that there can be no apportionment; for there are two parts in this contract: and the premium may be divided into two distinct parts, relative, as it were, to two distinct voyages. The practice shews, that it has been usual, in such like cases,

to

to return a part of the premium, though the quantum be not ascertained. And indeed, the quantum must vary, as circumstances vary: so that it never can have been fixed with any precise exactness. But though the quantum has not been ascertained; yet the principle is agreeable to the general sense of mankind.

Mr. Justice Denison.—It is most equitable that the defendant should only retain the premium for such part of the voyage, as he has run any risk: the insured has a right to have the other part restored to him. This is agreeable to the general principle of actions for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff: where the defendant has no right to retain, he must refund it.

Mr. Justice Foster.—There is no consideration for the remainder of the premium; for in the voyage from Portsmouth to Halifax, no risk was run by the insurer, who only insured the voyage with convoy: therefore he has no right to retain the premium for this.

Mr. Justice Wilmot declared his concurrence most clearly and strongly. These kinds of contracts, he observed, are, by the writers on this head, called contractus innominati; and the rule, which they lay down concerning them, is, that they are to be determined secundum bonum et æquum. The jury have here found an usage to return part of the premium in such cases; which is a strong proof of the equity of the thing: and nothing can be more just and reasonable. If the risk was once begun, the insured shall not deviate or return back, and then say, “I will go no further under this contract, but will have my premium returned.” But upon this policy there are two distinct points of time, in effect two voyages, which were clearly in the contemplation of the parties; and only one of the two voyages was made; the other not at all entered upon. It was a conditional contract: and the second voyage was not begun; therefore the premium must be be returned, for upon this second part of the voyage, the risk never took place at all. This is agreeable to what the writers upon the subject lay down; and is the right and justice of the case. The posse was delivered to the plaintiff.

Some years afterwards, the principle established in the foregoing case was attempted to be applied to one, which it did not at all resemble. For the following case was an insurance for twelve months at 9*l.* per cent.; and because the ship was captured within two months after the contract was made, a return of premium was demanded, upon the principle of Stevenson v. Snow. But the contract in this case was entire; the premium was a gross sum stipulated and paid for twelve months; and the parties, when they made the contract, had no intention or thought of a subsequent division, or apportionment.

The case was thus:

It was an action, in the usual form, for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, for a return of part of the premium. The cause was tried at Guildhall, before Lord Mansfield, when, by consent, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon the question, Whether, under the circumstances of the case, a proportionable part of the premium ought to be returned, or not. If the court should be of opinion that a proportionable part of the premium ought not to be returned, then a nonsuit was to be entered. It now came before the court upon a rule to shew cause, why a nonsuit should not be entered; and the case, as it appeared from the report, was shortly this. The policy was on the ship Isabella, at and from London, to any port or place, where or whatsoever, for twelve months, from the 19th of August 1776, to the 19th of August 1777, both days inclusive, at 9*l.* per cent. warranted free from captures and seizures by the Americans, and the consequences thereof. In all other respects, it was in the common form, against

F f

Tyrie v.
Fletcher.
Cowp. 666.

against all perils of the sea, &c. The ship sailed from the port of London, and was taken by an American privateer, about two months afterwards.

Lord Mansfield.—It was very proper to save this case for the opinion of the court, because in all mercantile transactions, certainty is of much more consequence, than which way the point is decided; and more especially so, in the case of policies of insurance: because, if the parties do not chuse to contract according to the established rule, they are at liberty as between themselves to vary it. This case is stripped of every authority. There is no case or practice in point; and therefore, we must argue from the general principles applicable to all policies of insurance. And I take it, there are two general rules established, applicable to this question: the first is, that where the risk has not been run, whether it's not having been run was owing to the fault, pleasure, or will of the insured, or to any other cause, the premium shall be returned; because a policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity. The underwriter receives a premium for running the risk of indemnifying the insured, and to whatever cause it be owing, if he do not run the risk, the consideration, for which the premium or money was put into his hands, fails, and therefore he ought to return it. Another rule is, that if the risk has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. For though the premium is estimated, and the risk depends upon the nature and length of the voyage; yet, if it has commenced, though it be only for 24 hours or less, the risk is run; the contract is for the whole entire risk, and no part of the consideration shall be returned: and yet, it is as easy to apportion for the length of the voyage, as it is for the time. If a ship had been insured to the East Indies agreeably to the terms of the policy in this case, and had been taken 24 hours after

after the risk was begun, by an American captor, there is not a colour to say, that there should have been a return of premium. So much then is clear; and indeed, perfectly agreeable to the ground of determination in the case of Stevenson v. Snow. For in that case, the intention of the parties, the nature of the contract, and the consequences of it, spoke manifestly two insurances, and a division between them. The first object of the insurance was from London to Halifax: but if the ship did not depart from Portsmouth, with convoy, (particularly naming the ship appointed to be convoy) then there was to be no contract from Portsmouth to Halifax: why then, the parties have said, "we make a contract from London to Halifax, but on a certain contingency it shall only be a contract from London to Portsmouth." That contingency not happening, reduced it in fact to a contract from London to Portsmouth only. The whole argument turned upon that distinction. Mr. Yates, who was counsel for the plaintiff, put it strongly upon that head; and all the judges, in delivering their opinions, lay the stress upon the contract comprising two distinct conditions, and considering the voyage as being in fact two voyages: and it was the equitable way of considering it; for, though it was at first consolidated by the parties, there was a defeazance afterwards, though not in words. I think Mr. Justice Wilmot put it particularly upon that ground; but it was the opinion of the whole court. There was an usage also found by the jury in that case, that it was customary to return a proportionable part of the premium in such like cases, but they could not say what part. The court rejected this as a usage for uncertainty; but they argue from it, that there being such a custom, plainly shewed the general sense of merchants, as to the propriety of returning a part of the premium in such cases: and there can be no doubt of the reasonableness of the thing. There has been an instance put of a policy where the measure is by time, which seems to me to be very strong, and apposite to the present case; and that is, an insurance upon a man's life for twelve months. There can be no doubt but the risk there, is constituted by the measure of time, and depends entirely upon it: for the underwriter would demand double the premium for two years, that he would take to insure the same life for one year only: in such policies there is a general exception against suicide. If the person puts an end to his own life the next day, or a month after, or at any other period within the twelve months, there never was an idea in any man's breast, that part of the premium should be returned. A case of general practice was put by Mr. Dunning, where the words of the policy are, "At and from, provided the ship shall sail on or before the 1st of August:" and Mr. Wallace considers in that case, that the whole policy would depend upon the ship sailing before the stated day. I do not think so. On the contrary, I think with Mr. Dunning, that cannot be. A loss in port before the day appointed for the ship's departure, can never be coupled with a contingency after the day: but if a question were to arise about it, as at present advised, I should incline to be of opinion, that it would fall within the reasoning of the determination of Stevenson v. Snow: and that there were two parts or contracts of insurance with distinct conditions. The first is, I insure the ship in port, provided she is lost in port before the 1st of August: and 2dly, if she be not lost in port, I insure her then during her voyage, from the 1st of August till she reaches the port specified in the policy. The loss in port must happen, before the risk upon the voyage could commence: and vice versa; the risk in port must cease, the moment the risk upon the voyage began. Let us see then, what the agreement of the parties is in the present case. They might have insured insured from two months to two months, or in any less or greater proportion, if they had thought proper so to do: but the fact is, that they have made no division of time at all; but the contract entered into is one entire contract from the 19th of August 1776, to the 19th of August 1777; which is the same as if it had been expressly said by the insured, "If you the underwriter will insure me for twelve months, I will give you an entire sum; but I will not have any apportionment." The ship sails, and the underwriter runs the risk for two months. No part of the premium then shall be returned. I cannot say, if there had been a recapture before the expiration of the twelve months, that the policy would not have revived.

Vide supra.

Mr. Justice Ashen.—This case depends upon the words of the policy: and I am of opinion, it is one entire contract at a certain gross sum of 9*l.* per cent. for a certain period of time, viz. twelve months; and that no division is to be implied. The determination in Stevenson v. Snow went expressly upon this consideration, that there were two distinct voyages, and no consideration received by the insured for the premium upon the second voyage: and there certainly was not; for there never was any point of time, when any risk was run from Portsmouth. In Bond v. Nutt, the losses insured against were distinct, and unconnected with each other. 1st. A loss of the ship in port, if any should happen there. 2dly, A loss in the passage home, provided she failed on a certain day. The risk in some policies may be distinct and divisible in it's nature. In the case of an insurance on a life, the sum is entire, and the time is entire for the whole year. So in this case, I think the contract is one entire contract; and therefore that there ought to be no return of premium.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Ashurst were of the same opinion.

F f 3

Per

Per Curiam. Let a nonsuit be entered.

In a subsequent case, the court of King's-Bench adopted the same rule of decision, where the ship was insured for 12 months, and the risk ceased at the end of two. A distinction was attempted to be made, because in this case, the whole premium 18 l. was acknowledged to be received from the insured at the rate of 15 s. per month: and this, it was insisted, evidently shewed, that the parties intended the risk to continue only from month to month. This objection was, however, over-ruled; the court being of opinion, that the case last reported decided this; and that the 15 s. per month was only a mode of computing the gross sum. The case was in substance as follows:

Loraine v.
Thomlinson.
Doug. 564.

It was an action tried before Lord Loughborough, at the last assizes for the county of Northumberland, in which the plaintiff declared,—That the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff, at his request, had under-written several policies of insurance as to certain sums of money therein subscribed against his name, on the ships, merchandizes, and other things therein respectively specified, without receiving the full premiums therein mentioned, undertook and promised to pay the plaintiff so much money, as the premiums therein mentioned to be paid to him amounted to, with an averment that they amounted to 40 l. There was another count for 40 l. for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit, as to all except the sum of 3 l. upon which plea issue was joined; and as to the 3 l. he pleaded a tender, and paid that sum into court. Upon the plea of tender, issue was also joined. The jury found a verdict for the defendant upon the tender, and for the plaintiff upon the other issue, for the sum of 15 l. subject to the opinion of the court, whether he was entitled to recover that sum of 15 l. or the the sum of 3*l.* only, upon a case, which stated, in effect, as follows: The plaintiff had underwritten 200*l.* on a policy effected at Newcastle (which was set forth verbatim in the case) whereby the ship the Cbollerford was insured, against capture by the enemy for twelve months, in the coasting trade between Leith and the Isle of Wight; beginning the 13th of March, 1779, and ending the 13th of the same month, 1780. In the body of the policy it was stated, “ That “ the assurers confessed themselves paid the con“ sideration due unto them by the assured, at

 “ and after the rate of 15*s.* per cent. per month.
 “ At the bottom, opposite to the plaintiff’s sub“ scription was written, premium received 16th “ of March, 1779;” and on the back was indorsed, “ Newcastle, 15th of March, 1779, Mr.
 “ John Gaul Thomlinson, on his ship the Cboller- “ ford, himself master, for twelve months, in the “ coasting trade, at and between Leith and the “ Isle of Wight, beginning the 13th of March, “ 1779, and ending the 12th of March, 1780.
 “ Enemy only. At 15*s.* per cent. per month,
 “ 18*l.*” The premium was not paid, though expressed in the policy to have been paid, it being the usage in Newcastle not to pay the premium at the time of making the insurance; but at various times after the policies are effected, and sometimes, not till twelve months after. The ship was lost in a storm, within the first two of the twelve months for which the insurance was made, and the defendant tendered to the plaintiff 3*l.* as the premium for two months. The case then states contradictory evidence given by witnesses on both sides, as to what had been done at Newcastle in similar cases; but which I forbear to set down; because the court of King’s-Bench was afterwards of opinion, that it ought not to have been received.

After the counsel for the defendant had been heard, the plaintiff's counsel was prevented by the court from proceeding.

OF RETURN OF PREMIUM.

Lord Mansfield.—This is a mere question of construction, on the face of the instrument, and therefore parole evidence should not have been admitted to explain it. It is an insurance for twelve months, for one gross sum of 18 l. They have calculated this sum to be at the rate of 15 s. per month. But what was to be paid down? Not 15 s. for the first month, and so from month to month; but 18 l. at once. Two cases have been mentioned. Stevenson v. Snow was decided on the ground of there being two voyages. Tyrie v. Fletcher is directly in point against the defendant. There are two principles in these cases; 1st. If the risk has never begun, the whole premium is to be returned, because there was no consideration: 2d. When the risk has begun, there shall never be a return, although the ship should be taken in 24 hours.

Mr. Justice Ashturst.—The 15 s. per month is only a mode of computing the gross sum.

Mr. Justice Willes, and Mr. Justice Buller concurring in opinion, the posse was delivered to the plaintiff.

The two last cases were insurances upon time; but from the principles laid down in them, and in the former case of Stevenson v. Snow, it seems perfectly clear, that when the contract is entire, whether it be for a specified time, or for a voyage, there shall be no apportionment or return, if the risk has once commenced. And therefore where the premium is entire in a policy on a voyage, where there is no contingency at any period, out or home, upon the happening or not happening of which, the risk is to end, nor any usage established upon such voyages; although there be several distinct ports, at which the ship is to stop, yet the voyage is one, and no part of the premium shall be recoverable.

A rule had been obtained to shew cause why there should not be a new trial in a case, which had come on before Lord Mansfield at Guildhall, when the jury found a verdict for the defendant. The case was this: It was an action on a policy of insurance, on the French ship Le Paëtole, and her cargo, and the voyage was described in the policy in the following words: "At and from Honfleur to the coast of Angola, during her stay and trade there, at and from thence to her port or ports of discharge in St. Domingo, and at and from St. Domingo back to Honfleur." The clause respecting the premium was as follows: "Slaves valued at 800 livres Tournois per head; the ship at 1450 l. sterling; other goods, &c. as interest may appear; at a premium of 11 per cent." The ship failed to Angola, and from thence after staying some time there, to the West Indies. On her way to Angola, she put in at Cayenne, on the coast of America, and from Cayenne went to Martinico, confessedly out of the way to St. Domingo. In this cause, the first question was a question of fact, not material to our present enquiry, viz. whether the course taken was a deviation, or not, from the voyage insured. After all the evidence had been heard, the jury thought it was, and accordingly found a verdict for the defendant. Upon their declaring this opinion, the counsel for the plaintiff insisted, that as there was a count in the declaration for money had and received, the voyage insured ought to be considered as composed of three distinct parts or voyages; namely, from Honfleur to Angola; 2dly, from Angola to St. Domingo; and 3dly, from St. Domingo to Honfleur; and that, as the voyage from St. Domingo to Honfleur had never commenced, the premium ought to be apportioned, and a return made of that part which was paid to insure the risk from St. Domingo to Honfleur. Lord Mansfield took the opinion

Bermon v.
Woodbridge.
Doug. 751.

opinion of the jury upon that point also; and they were clear there ought to be no return. Next day, however, his Lordship said, he had turned that question in his mind, and that he entertained some doubts upon it, and as it was a question of law, desired Mr. Lee to move for a new trial on that ground. It was, however, afterwards moved on both grounds; namely, on the question of fact, whether the deviation was wilful: and 2dly, On the question of law, whether, supposing it wilful, there ought to be a return of premium.—These questions were fully discussed by three advocates on each side; and the court also took time to deliberate upon them: after which the Lord Chief Justice delivered the unanimous opinion of the whole court.

Lord Mansfield, after stating, that upon the question of fact, they were perfectly satisfied with the verdict of the jury, proceeded thus: If, however, the plaintiff should succeed on the second point, the determination would virtually allow him a new trial on the whole of the cause, because no special case was reserved. But, on the fullest consideration, and after looking into all the cases, (though my opinion has fluctuated) we are now all clearly of opinion, that there ought not to be any return. The question depends upon this: Whether the policy contains one entire risk on one voyage, or whether it is to be split into six different risks; for, by splitting the words, and taking “at” and “from” separately, it will make six, viz. 1st, At Honfleur; 2d, From Honfleur to Angola; 3d, At Angola, &c. The principles are clear. Where the risk has never begun, there must be a return of premium; and, if the voyages, in this case, are distinct, the risk from St. Domingo to Honfleur never began. On the other hand, if the risk has once begun, you cannot sever it, and apportion the premium. In an insurance upon a life,

a life, with the common exceptions of suicide, and the hands of justice, if the party commit suicide, or is executed in twenty-four hours, there shall be no return. The case is the same, if a voyage insured is once begun. Is this one entire risk? The insured and insurers consider the premium as an entire sum for the whole, without division: it is estimated on the whole at 1 1/2 per cent. And, which is extremely material, there is no where any contingency, at any period, out or home, mentioned in the policy, which happening, or not happening, is to put an end to the insurance. The argument must be, that, if the ship had been taken between Honfleur and Angola, there must have been a return. By an implied warranty, every ship must be sea worthy when she first sails on the voyage insured, but she need not continue so throughout the voyage; so that, if this is one entire voyage, if the ship was sea worthy when she left Honfleur, the underwriters would have been liable, though she had not been so at Angola, &c.; but, according to the construction contended for on behalf of the plaintiff, she must have been sea worthy, not only at her departure from Honfleur, but also when she sailed from Angola, and when she sailed from St. Domingo. The cases of Stevenson v. Snow and Bond v. Nutt, were quite different from this. They depended upon this, that there was a contingency specified in the policy, upon the not happening of which the insurance would cease. In Stevenson v. Snow, it depended on the contingency of the ship sailing with convoy from Portsmouth, whether there should be an insurance from that place. This necessarily divided the risk, and made two voyages. In Bond v. Nutt, it was held, that there were two risks, upon the same principle. “At “Jamaica” was one; the other, viz. the risk “from Jamaica,” depended on the contingency of the ship having sailed on or before the first of August:

Vide ante
Ch. 12.

August: that was a condition precedent to the insurance on the voyage from Jamaica to London. The two cases of Tyrie v. Fletcher, and Lorraine v. Thomlinson, are very strong, for, if you could apportion the premium in any case, it would be in insurances upon time. Therefore, on very full consideration, we think this one entire risk; one voyage, and that there can be no return of premium. The rule was discharged.

Meyer v.
Gregson.
B. R. East.
24 Geo. 3.

Accordingly in another action for a return of premium, tried before Mr. Justice Willes, on the Northern circuit, where a verdict had been given for the plaintiff, upon a motion to set aside the verdict, and to enter a nonsuit, a decision, similar to that of Bermou v. Woodbridge, was made. The insurance was "At and from Jamaica to Liverpool warranted to sail on or before the first of August, premium twenty guineas per cent. to return eight, if she sailed with convoy." The ship did not sail till September and was lost. The jury apportioned the premium, and gave the plaintiff a verdict for eight guineas, the defendant having paid eight for the convoy into court, which was allowing four for the risk run by the defendant at Jamaica.

Lord Mansfield.—It would be endless to go into enquiries about the risk at Jamaica. It appears on the evidence to be different on different sides of the island. Besides the parties have divided the risk, with respect to convoy; for it is a premium of twenty guineas, to return eight, if she sail with convoy: but there is an absolute warranty as to the sailing, and nothing said of the premium.

Mr. Justice Willes thought the premium should be apportioned.

Mr. Justice Ashurst and Mr. Justice Buller agreed with Lord Mansfield, the latter observing, that as the parties have not considered it as two risks, nor estimated the risk at Jamaica, the court court cannot do it for them. In all the insurances from Jamaica, the policy runs "at and from;" and though in many instances the voyage has not begun, yet there never was an idea of the premium being returned, and that no usage was found by the jury. The rule for entering the judgment of nonsuit was made absolute.

I am aware that the decision in this case may seem to clash, with what fell from Lord Mansfield, in delivering his opinion in the case of Tyrie v. Fletcher; in which he put a supposed case of an insurance "at and from, provided the ship shall sail on or before the first of August." In such a case, his Lordship observed, as then advised, he should incline to think it a divisible risk. In this place, it would be sufficient to observe, in answer to such an objection, that the opinion then delivered by Lord Mansfield was a mere obiter dictum upon a point, arising only in the course of argument: in which case, the greatest abilities are liable to mistake. But his Lordship delivered that opinion, with a wise and prudent reservation, that, as at present advised, he thought so and so: and it is no disgrace to any man, however renowned for knowledge, to alter an opinion, upon mature deliberation. There is, however, one very obvious distinction, upon which the court relied much, between Meyer v. Gregson, and the case put in Tyrie v. Fletcher: for in the latter, the insured has used a most significant word (provided) to mark the difference between the two parts of the risk; "at and from, provided she sail, &c." In the former, the insured has expressly provided for a return of premium, in case the ship fails without convoy; why did he not use the same precaution, lest she should not sail by the day limited? Having done it in the one case, it is to be presumed he did not mean to do it, or that the insurer would not consent that it should be done, in the other: and as the parties had not divided the risk themselves, the court could not do it for them.

Gale v.
Machell.
B. R. East.
25 Geo. 3.

In another case upon an insurance “ at and “ from any port or ports in Jamaica, to London, “ following and commencing on her first arri“ val there, warranted to sail with convoy from “ the place of rendezvous to Great-Britain,” the same questions were again agitated. But as the counsel differed upon the evidence given at the trial, the main question was not fully discussed by the court, but was sent back to a new trial.

Long v. Allen
B. R. East.
Term.
25 Geo. 3.

The last case upon this subject was also an action for a return of the premium. The policy was “ at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to depart with convoy for the voyage, and to sail on or before the 1st of August, upon goods on board a ship called the Jamaica, at a premium of 12 guineas per cent.” The ship sailed from Jamaica to London on the 31st of July 1782, but without any convoy for the voyage. At the trial before Lord Mansfield, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court upon a case, stating the facts already mentioned. In addition to which, they expressly find, “ that it is the constant and invariable usage in an “ insurance, at and from Jamaica to London, war“ ranted to depart with convoy, or to sail on or “ before the 1st of August, when the ship does “ not depart with convoy, or sails after the 1st “ of August, to return the premium, deducting
“ one half per cent.”

Lord Mansfield.—An insurance being on goods warranted to depart with convoy, the ship sails without convoy; and an action is brought to recover the premium. The law is clear, that if the risk be commenced, there shall be no return.
Hence questions arise of distinct risks insured by one policy or instrument. My opinion has been to divide the risks. I am aware that there are great difficulties in the way of apportionments,
and

and therefore the court has sometimes leaned against them. But where an express usage is found by the jury, the difficulty is cured. They offered to prove the same usage as to the West Indies in general; but I stopt them, and confined the evidence to Jamaica.

Vide Meyer v. Gregson.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Ashurst, concurred with his Lordship.

Mr. Justice Buller.—The counsel for the defendant did right in his argument to make the chief question, Whether parole evidence of this usage ought to have been received. In mercantile cases from Lord Holt's time, and in policies of insurance in particular, a great latitude of construction as to usage has been admitted. By usage, places come within the policy, which are not expressed in words; usage explains and even controuls the policy. The usage here found by the jury is universal: and though in some cases one half per cent. may be a small premium for the risk at; yet the underwriters are aware that it is so. In Meyer v. Gregson, no usage was found. Besides in cases of this kind, where every thing is left to the whim and caprice of a jury I lean much against them. Here a general and certain usage is found; and no inconvenience can result from it. The postea was delivered to the plaintiff. From the tenor of all these cases it should seem, as my Lord Mansfield said in the case of Long v. Allen, that so many difficulties occur in apportioning the premium, that the courts are often obliged to decide against it, unless there be some usage upon the subject. Even in the case of Stevenson v. Snow, the jury found that it had been usual to divide the risk; and although the court rejected the usage for uncertainty, because it did not ascertain what proportion of the premium should be returned; yet they expressly say, that it serves to shew what the idea of the mercantile world is upon the subject. If, indeed, we look back to all the cases reported in this chapter, we never

never find an apportionment take place, except in Stevenson v. Snow, and Long v. Allen, on account of the difficulty, unless there be some usage, as in those cases, to guide and direct the judgment of the court.

Vide ante
c. 18.

Before this chapter is concluded, it will be proper to observe, that in the case of Bond v. Nutt, which was so often mentioned in the argument of the cases upon apportionment, the question never arose. In that case, the two material questions were, as may be seen by a reference to it in the two preceding chapters of this work, whether the ship had complied with a warranty of sailing by a particular day: and whether in going to the place of rendezvous for convoy, she was guilty of a wilful deviation. It was proper to mention this, to prevent misconstruction; and it was also taken notice of by Mr. Justice Buller, in the case of Long v. Allen.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

Of the Proceedings upon Policies of Insurance.

Vide the Introduction.

IN the present Chapter, it is intended to point out in what manner, and by what form of legal proceeding, a man, who has insured property, and has sustained a loss, is to recover against the underwriters upon the policy. We have formerly seen, that the Court of Policies of Insurance fell into disuse, and the reasons why it did so: since which period, all questions of this nature have been decided by the usual mode of trial, known to the laws and constitution of this country, namely, the trial by jury in the courts of common law.

Cases

Cases of this nature are not the subject of enquiry even in a court of Equity, because the demand is plainly a demand at law; and the loss and damage sustained are as much the object of proof by witnesses, as any other species of damage whatever. This was decided by a decree of Lord Chancellor King, whose opinion was afterwards confirmed by the House of Lords.

In the year 1720, some merchants at Ostend set up a trade to the East Indies; and amongst others, one James Maelcamp equipped a ship called the Flandria, for a voyage to China, wherein several persons were concerned. Maelcamp had the care and direction of the ship, and gave receipts to the several persons concerned, for the monies they paid, promising to be accountable to them for their respective proportions of the net profit of the voyage. These transactions being carried on mostly at Ostend or Antwerp, the several persons, who had a mind to be concerned in the undertaking, gave directions to their correspondents at those places, to pay Maelcamp what sums they thought fit, and to take his receipts for the same. The appellants gave directions to one Conninck to pay several large sums to Maelcamp, on account of the said undertaking; and accordingly Conninck paid him divers sums, amounting to 35,000 guilders, and took distinct receipts for the same, according to the proportion, for which the appellants were concerned therein: he also, by the order and direction of the appellants, and for their use or benefit, agreed with the respondents to insure on the said ship the Flandria 5000*l.* and by a policy, dated the 26th day of December 1720, this insurance was effected, at a premium of 12*l.* per cent. The ship sailed from Ostend, in order to proceed to China; but on her way, was seized at Bencoolen, in the East Indies, by the governor, being an English settlement, and the ship and cargo were confiscated. The appellants, upon notice of this event, applied to the

De Ghetoff
and Others
v. the Governor and Company of the London
Assurance.
3 Brown's
Parliament
Cases 525.

respondents for payment of the 5000*l.* insured, and produced to them the several receipts for their respective interests in the ship, and affidavits affirming the several sums therein mentioned, to have been really and bonâ fide paid. But the respondents refusing to pay, or make any satisfaction to the appellants, they brought their bill in the Court of Chancery against the respondents, and the said Cominck, praying, *that the respondents might be decreed to pay the appellants the said sum of 500*l.* with interest*, according to their several and respective shares and proportions thereof. To this bill, the respondents put in a demurrer and answer, and to such part of the bill, as sought to compel them to pay the appellants the 500*l.* or to make them any satisfaction for any loss, which had happened to the ship, they demurred; and for cause of demurrer shewed, that if the policy of insurance in the bill mentioned was forfeited, a proper action at law lay to recover the money due thereupon; and that the appellants, if they were entitled to such relief as they prayed by their bill, might have their complete and adequate remedy by an action at law, where such matters were properly cognizable, and where the appellants ought to prove their interest in, and the loss of the ship. The demurrer came on to be argued before Lord Chancellor King, when his lordship ordered it to stand over for two months till Conninck's answer should come in; and if the appellants did not procure such answer in two months, the demurrer was to be allowed. Conninck accordingly put in his answer within two months, and thereby admitted, that he made the assurance in his own name, in trust and for the benefit of the appellants; but said, he did not care to permit the appellants to bring any action against the respondents in his name; he being advised, that if any such action should be brought, and they should not prevail therein, he would be personally liable to pay all the costs and charges occasioned in consequence sequence thereof. In support of the demurrer it was urged, that the appellants' demand was plainly a demand at law, as they had nothing to prove but their interest, and the loss of the ship, which were facts proper to be tried by a jury. That there was no equity suggested by the bill, but a pretended difficulty to produce witnesses; and that their trustee refused to permit them to bring an action in his name: that the former objection might with equal reason be suggested in almost every case of a policy of insurance; and the latter appeared manifestly to be thrown into the bill, merely to change the jurisdiction, and it was in a great measure falsified by the trustee's answer, for he did not say that he ever refused, but only that he did not care to permit his name to be made use of. If bills of this kind were encouraged, it would be easy to bring all sorts of property to be tried in a court of Equity.

Upon these reasons, Lord King allowed the demurrer; and upon an appeal to the House of Lords, after hearing counsel upon it, it was ordered and adjudged, that the same should be dismissed; and the order complained of, affirmed.

There may, it is true, be cases, where an application to a court of Equity on the part of the insured, is strictly proper, and will be entertained. For instance, if the trustee in a policy of insurance do actually refuse his name to the cestui que trust in an action at law, there may be some pretence for going into a court of Equity, as Lord 1 Atk. 547. Hardwicke has once observed. Or, if from a con- 2 Atk. 359. currence of circumstances, the persons, whose testimony is requisite to the decision of some disputed facts, reside abroad, the Court of Chancery will grant a commission to examine those witnesses. But it is not upon a mere general trust, or the loose suggestions of any of these facts, that this extraordinary interposition will take place.

Chitty v.
Selwin and Martin.
2 Atk. 359.

Vide, c. 10.

Kill v. Hollister.
1 Will. 129.

There are also cases, in which the insurers may go into equity, to obtain injunctions to stay the proceedings against them at law: as in the last case mentioned, where the evidence of persons abroad is requisite for their defence; in which situation, they shall have a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and an injunction to stay proceedings at law in the mean time. Another ground for an application to a court of Equity, is a suspicion of fraud on the part of the insured, and of which I fear the chapter on Fraud produces too many instances: in such cases the court will compel the party charged to make a full disclosure upon oath of all the circumstances that are within his knowledge; and to deliver up all papers and documents, that are at all material to the question. But except in these instances, all issues upon policies of insurance must be tried in the courts of common law. Even if the parties, by a clause in the policy, agree that in case of a dispute, it shall be referred to arbitration, that will not be a sufficient bar to an action at law; provided no reference has been in fact made, nor is depending.

Thus in an action upon a policy of insurance it appeared, that a clause was inserted, that in case of any loss or dispute about the policy, it should be referred to arbitration: and the plaintiff averred in his declaration, that there had been no reference. Upon the trial at Guildhall, the point was reserved for the consideration of the court, whether this action would lie before a reference had been made; and it was held by the whole court, that if there had been a reference depending, or made and determined, it might have been a bar; but the agreement of the parties cannot oust this court; and as no reference has been, nor any is depending, the action is well brought, and the plaintiff must have judgment.

Having

Having thus seen in what courts the party injured in the contract of insurance is to seek for redress, let us now consider, by what form of action that redress is to be obtained. The act of 6 Geo. 1. parliament, by which the two Insurance Companies were erected, ordered, that they should have a common seal, by affixing which, all corporate bodies ratify and confirm their contracts. Hence a policy of insurance made by the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, or the London Assurance Company, is a contract under seal; and if the contract is broken, the proceedings against these Companies must be by action of debt or covenant. From this circumstance a great inconvenience arose; for under the plea of the general issue to an action of debt or covenant, the true merits of the case could seldom come in question: but in order to bring them forward, it became necessary to plead specially. This was attended with such a heavy expence, such great delays, and frequent applications to courts of equity for relief, that the legislature at last interposed, and enacted, “that in all actions of debt 11 Geo. 1. c. 30. s. 43.
 “to be sued or commenced against either of the “said corporations, upon any policies of insurance under the common seal of such corporation, for the assuring of any ship or ships, goods or merchandizes at sea, or going to sea, it should and might be lawful to and for the said corporations, in such action or suit, to plead generally, that they owed nothing to the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such suit or action; and that in all actions of covenant, which should be sued or commenced against either of the said corporations upon any such policy of assurance under the common seal of such corporation for the assuring of any ship or ships, goods or merchandizes, at sea or going to sea, it should and might be lawful for the said respective corporations, in such action or suit, to plead generally, that they had not broke the covenant, in “ such policy contained, or any of them ; and if “ thereupon issue should be joined, it should “ and might be lawful for the jury, if they “ should see cause, upon the trial of such issue,

 “ to find a verdict for the plaintiff or plaintiffs “ in such suit or action, and to give so much, or “ such part only of the sum demanded, if it be “ an action of debt, or so much in damages, if “ it be an action of covenant, as it should ap“ pear to them, upon the evidence given upon “ such trial, such plaintiff or plaintiffs ought in “ justice to have.” Thus it stands with respect to the corporations.

3 Black 7.
 Com. 157.

1 Salk. 22.
 Skinner 412.

Wherever the contract of insurance is entered into with a private underwriter, it is done by the insurer merely subscribing his name to the instrument, which is no more than what is called by the lawyers a simple contract; the remedy for a breach of which is by an action of assumpsit, or an action upon the case founded upon the promise and undertaking of the insurer. There are, however, it is to be observed, two kinds of actions of assumpsit: the one, what is denominated, a general indebitatus assumpsit, in which the plaintiff states generally that the defendant, being indebted to him in so much money for goods sold, &c. or for money lent to the defendant, or for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff, in consideration thereof, undertook and promised to pay the amount; the other is called a special assumpsit, which must always be founded on some particular or special agreement. The former can never be used as the means to recover upon a policy of insurance. The only cases, in which it can be at all used with respect to this contract are, where money has been paid by mistake to the insured by the insurer, upon the supposition of a loss, when in fact there was none; a rule which holds, whether the money was paid through the fraud or mistake of the receiver; or where the insured wishes to recover back the premium premium which he has paid to the insurer. In these cases, the proper mode is to bring an action of indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received to the plaintiff's use: and therefore in almost all actions upon policies of insurance, it is usual after the count for the special assumpsit, to add one or two general counts; that if the policy should be set aside, and the contract declared void, the insured may at least be enabled to recover the premium.

It being thus evident, that the proper form of action, in order to recover upon a policy of insurance, is a special assumpsit, founded upon the express contract of the person who signs it; it will follow as an immediate consequence, that the first thing which is necessary for the plaintiff to insert in his declaration, or state of the case; will be the policy itself, because that is the foundation of the whole. He should also state, that it was signed by the defendant. The next averment will be, that in consideration of the premium being paid, the defendant had undertaken to indemnify against the losses specified in the policy. We saw in the first chapter of this book, that the premium was the consideration upon which the whole contract rested; and that by the custom, the receipt of the premium was acknowledged in the body of the policy. It is then necessary for the plaintiff to allege that goods and merchandizes were laden on board to the amount of the sum insured, and that the plaintiff was interested therein; or if the insurance be upon the ship, the insured's interest must, in the same manner, be averred. The next material averment is, that the property insured was lost, and by what means that loss happened; in stating which, the plaintiff must bring it within one of the perils insured against by the policy: but he must always state it according to the truth. Thus he ought to shew, that it was by perils of the sea, by capture, by fire, by detention, by

Vile ante,
c. 1. p. 28.

barratry, or any of the other perils mentioned in the policy.

Knight v.
Cambridge,
2 Lord Raym.
1349.
1 Stra. 581.

Where the loss had been by barratry, the breach was thus assigned, the proceedings being at that time in Latin, per fraudem et negligentiam magistri navis depressa et submersa fuit, et totaliter perdita et amissa fuit; and it was insisted, that this was not within the meaning of the word barratry, but the breach should have been express, that the ship was lost by the barratry of the master.

The court were unanimously of opinion, that there was no occasion to aver the fact in the very words of the policy; but if the fact alleged came within the meaning of the words in the policy, it was sufficient. Barratry imports fraud, and he that commits fraud, may properly be said to be guilty of a neglect, namely, a breach of duty.

It is true, that the practice at present, as I have reason to believe from precedents which I have seen settled by the ablest special pleaders, is to aver such a loss to have happened “by the “barratry of the master or mariners.”

If the plaintiff in his declaration allege, that a total loss has happened, and lay the damages as for a total loss, it shall be no bar to his recovery, though he can only prove a partial loss; for in an action for damages merely, a man may always recover less, but never more than the sum he has laid in his declaration. A contrary doctrine was once attempted to be maintained; but was unanimously over-ruled.

Gardiner v.
Crofedale.
2 Bur. 904.
1 Black. Rep.
198.

The case in which it was so determined, came before the court, upon a question reserved by Lord Mansfield, at Nisi Prius, at Guildhall, upon an action on the case, on a policy of insurance. The insurance was made upon one fourth part of the ship Encouragement, and of its cargo, from Greenland to London, free from average under a certain value, from the ice. The plaintiff declared upon a total

a total loss of the ship; the declaration expressly stated a total loss of it; and the damages were laid for a total loss. But the evidence only proved an average or partial loss: it was not attempted to prove a total one; and it was only shewn that the ship had received some damage, which little more than 50*l.* would have repaired. The defendant's counsel objected at the trial, "that this evidence did not support the plaintiff's declaration." They also represented the practice to have been on their side; namely, that proof of a partial loss was not sufficient to maintain a declaration for a total loss. A verdict was taken for 20*l.* as for an average loss: but it was agreed on both sides that the verdict should be subject to the opinion of the court, "Whether it was maintainable in point of law." If the court should be of opinion that it was, the verdict was to stand; but if the court should be of a contrary opinion, the plaintiff was to have a judgment of nonsuit against him.

Lord Mansfield.—At the trial it appeared to me, and so the jury thought, that the present case could not be considered as a total loss. The defendant's counsel objected, as they do now, that the jury could not take a partial loss into their consideration, upon an express declaration for a total loss: and I understood from them, that the practice supported their objection. Mr. Norton, who was counsel for the plaintiff at the trial, then argued to the contrary upon principles: and he also cited the case of Walker v. the Royal Exchange Assurance Company. But that case does not prove much; for that was a total loss. I was satisfied upon the principles, provided the practice did not interfere with them, which I was then told it did. I chose to put it in such a shape, that the opinion of the court might be had without delay or expence. No hardship was done to the defendant upon the quantum of the damages found: for the plaintiff took a great deal less than it clearly appeared on the evidence that the loss amounted

ed

ed to. I cannot hear of any such determination as can support the objection that has been made by the defendant's counsel. Therefore it stands singly upon principles. And upon principles it is extremely clear, that the plaintiff may, upon this declaration, recover damages for a partial loss. This is an action upon the case, which is a liberal action; and a plaintiff may recover less than the grounds of his declaration support, though not more. This is agreeable to justice, and consistent with his demand. Here are two grounds of the plaintiff's declaration; namely, the policy, and the damage to the ship. As to its being a total or a partial loss, that is a question more applicable to the quantum of the damages, than to the ground of the action. The ground of the action is the same, whether the loss be partial or total: both are perils within the policy. As to the defendant's not coming prepared to defend a partial loss: this indeed would be an objection if it were true. But the defendant does, in truth, come prepared to shew, that either no damages had happened at all; or, at least, that damages have not happened to such a degree as the plaintiff has alleged in his declaration; or, that he did not sign the policy. As to the effects of a judgment by default, the defendant could not have been hurt by a judgment by default. For the plaintiff could not have recovered, even upon a writ of enquiry, any greater damages than he could prove to the jury sworn to assess them, that he had actually suffered. If the present objection were to prevail, it would introduce the addition of unnecessary counts in declarations, and an enormous swelling of the records of the court. It is more convenient to lay the case short, than prolix. There is no proof of any practice contrary to the principles. It was the apprehension of such contrary practice, that was the only occasion of my having any doubt at the trial. I am now fully satisfied, that the plaintiff may recover either

either the whole or less than he has laid; and therefore this verdict ought, in my opinion, to stand. In an ejectment for more, the plaintiff may recover less: it is every day's practice.

Mr. Justice Denison concurred, and thought it a very plain case. It is an action for damages for the loss of the ship. Now, in an action for damages, the plaintiff is to recover his damages according to his proof, pro tanto; but he is not, in an action for damages, obliged to prove all that he has alleged. If it had been an action of covenant for pulling down a house, would not the plaintiff be entitled to recover damages for pulling down half the house, provided he had proved that the defendant did it? This is no variance of the evidence from the declaration; the evidence tends, in a certain degree, to the proof of what is alleged in the declaration; it is not necessary to lay two counts in such a declaration as this.

Mr. Justice Foster was of the same opinion.

Mr. Justice Wilmot.—In actions for damages, the plaintiff may recover all, or for any part: the damages are severable, and may be given pro tanto. Here damages are laid for a total loss, which is only the measure of the damages: and the plaintiff proves a partial loss; which only affects the measure of the damages, but is no variance from the allegations contained in the declaration. If this had been a judgment by default, yet the plaintiff could not, even in that case, have recovered damages for any more loss than he was able to prove under the writ of enquiry of damages. And as to the defendant's not having sufficient notice that he should come prepared to defend against a partial loss, I think he had sufficient notice to come thus prepared: for he ought to come prepared to prove, "that no damage at all happened." If any at all happened, he will be liable pro tanto, if it be proved.

The posse was delivered to the plaintiff.

An

An attempt was also once made to nonsuit a plaintiff, because the declaration alleged that he had a smaller interest than he appeared in proof to have. But this attempt also failed.

Page v. Rogers Sitt. at Guildhall, Hil. Vac. 1785.

It was an action on a policy of insurance, in which the declaration stated, that the plaintiff was possessed of one third of the ship on which the insurance was made. It was proved that the plaintiff had purchased the whole ship at one period; and as there was no evidence to shew that he had since parted with any share of it, the counsel for the defendant insisted, that the plaintiff had not proved his declaration, which alleged him to have but one third.

Lord Mansfield over-ruled the objection, saying, that this was prima facie sufficient evidence; for omne majus continet in se minus.

3 Black. Com. 168.

25 Geo. 3. c. 44. Vide ante c. 1. p. 16.

1 Bur. 490. Vide ante c. 15.

We have seen that policies of insurance are seldom effected by the party himself really interested, but generally by the intervention of a broker employed by the insured, who transacts the business with the underwriters as attorney for his principal, from whom he receives his instructions, and from which, if he deviate, he is answerable to his employer in an action on the case; like any other person who undertakes any office, employment, trust, or duty, and who thereby impliedly undertakes to perform it with integrity, diligence and skill. It is also common for the broker to open the policy in his own name, at the same time declaring for whose use, benefit, or interest, the same is made; which latter declaration, by a late statute, is rendered absolutely necessary. As the policy may be made in the name of the broker, so also may the action be brought in his name, as was done in the case of Godin and the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, and a variety of other cases.

As this contract depends so much upon the purest good faith, and the most liberal communication of circumstances relative to each particular case;

case; when gaming insurances, without interest, were abolished by the legislature, in order effectually to answer the purpose intended, it became necessary to order that a disclosure of all insurances, effected on the same property, should be made even after an action brought.

Thus it was declared, “ That in all actions or “ suits brought or commenced by the assured, 19 Geo. 2.
c. 37. s. 6.
 “ upon any policy of assurance, the plaintiff in “ such action, or suit, or his attorney or agent, “ should, within fifteen days after he or they “ should be required so to do in writing by the “ defendant, or his attorney or agent, declare “ what sum or sums he had assured, or caused to “ be assured in the whole, and what sums he “ had borrowed at respondentia or bottomry, “ for the voyage in question in such suit or “ action.”

In addition to this very wise provision, it having appeared to the legislature, that some vexatious persons, notwithstanding the perfect willingness of the insurers to pay losses, to which they were liable, still persevered in bringing actions, by which the defendants were put to great and heavy charges, and had no means of paying the money into Court; it was therefore enacted,

“ That it should and might be lawful for any 19 Geo. 2.
c. 37. s. 7.
 “ person or persons, body or bodies corporate,
 “ sued in any action or actions of debt, covenant, “ or any other action or actions, on any policy or “ policies of insurance, to bring into court any sum
 “ or sums of money; and that if any such plaintiff “ or plaintiffs should refuse to accept such sum “ or sums of money so brought into court as a“ foresaid, with costs to be taxed, in full dis“ charge of such action or actions, and should “ afterwards proceed to trial in such action or “ actions; and the jury should not assess dama“ ges to such plaintiff or plaintiffs, exceeding the “ sum or sums of money so brought into court, “ such plaintiff or plaintiffs, in every such case
 “ and

“ and costs, shall pay to such defendant or defendants, in every such action or actions, costs to be taxed; any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.”

Vide supra.

These preliminary steps being taken, the defendant is to put in his plea to the charge or declaration of the plaintiff; which by the act of parliament, is prescribed to the Assurance Companies, when they are defendants; namely, that they owe nothing, if the action be debt: or if it be covenant, that they have not broken the covenants, which they had undertaken to keep. But in the case of a private insurer, as the action is merely an assumpsit; so the answer to it is, non assumpsit; that is, the defendant has not promised as the plaintiff has alleged. Under this plea, the defendant will have a right to take advantage of all those circumstances, which as we have seen, will either render the policy void, or make it of no effect: such as, fraud, want of interest, not being sea-worthy, deviation, non-performance of warranties, and all the other grounds stated in former chapters.

Issue being thus joined between the parties, the next object for our consideration is the proof, which it will be necessary for the plaintiff to produce, in order to support his case. This enquiry will be rendered very easy, by reflecting upon those allegations, which, as we have before shewn, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to insert in his declaration. We have seen, that the policy must be set out in the declaration; and consequently the first evidence to be given is, that the defendant's hand writing is subscribed to the policy. This, in the liberality of modern practice, is seldom required to be done; as the subscription is usually admitted; but in strictness, it may be insisted on: and in a work of this nature, it is my business to point out every thing, which either party is expected, or compellable to perform. When the signature is once proved, the court and jury are in possession of the extent of the contract, (except as it may be further extended by usage) the conditions to be performed on either side; and all the other circumstances relative to the risk insured. And although in the course of our enquiries, we have seen frequent instances, where the usage and practice of a particular trade controul and extend the written words of a policy; yet in no case shall evidence of any agreement be allowed, which directly tends to contradict the policy: for to suffer them to be defeated by agreements by parole, not appearing, would be greatly to diminish their credit, and to render them of no value.
and

Vide ante,
c. 2.

Thus in an action upon a policy of insurance “from Archangel to Leghorn,” the defendant said, that the agreement before the subscription was, that the adventure should begin, but from the Downs; but this agreement was not put into writing. Lord Chief Justice Pemberton said, that policies were sacred things; and that a merchant should no more be allowed to go from what he had subscribed in them, than he that subscribes a bill of exchange, payable at such a day, shall be allowed to go from it, and say, it was agreed to be on a condition, when it may be that the bill had been negotiated: for though neither of them are specialties, yet they are of great credit, and much for the support, conveniency, and advantage of trade. The jury, notwithstanding this direction, found for the defendant: but afterwards there was a trial at bar, and a verdict was given for the plaintiff, according to the opinion of the court.

Kaines v. Knightly. Skinner, 54.

The policy not only proves the extent and nature of the contract; but it also establishes another allegation in the plaintiff's declaration, namely, that the premium was paid: for it was formerly shewn, that every policy contains the following clause: “confessing ourselves paid the “ consideration”

Vide c. 1.

“ consideration due unto us for this assurance by the “ assured, at and after the rate of per cent.”

The plaintiff having averred in his declaration, that he is interested to the amount of the property insured, it is absolutely necessary that this allegation should be proved. This he must do, by a production of all the usual documents, such as, the bills of sale, bills of parcels, and the costs of the outfit; the bills of lading (a), signed by the master, specifying the goods received on board, and for whom he is to carry them, custom-house clearances, and every other paper, which may be thought necessary to substantiate his right to the property.

Russell v.
 Boheme, & Strange
 1127.

A man having purchased goods beyond sea, in order to prove his property in the cargo, in an action upon a policy of insurance, produced a bill of parcels of one Gardiner at Petersburgh, with his receipt to it, and proved his hand. The defendant objected, that this was no evidence against

(a) The first great cause, in which the law relative to bills of lading came much under discussion, was in a very modern case of Caldwell and others v. Ball, reported very much at length, and with great accuracy in the Term Reports, page 205, for Easter Term 26 Geo. 3. That case was fully argued at the bar, and very much debated on the bench. Amongst other things the court held, that a bill of lading is an acknowledgement under the hand of the captain, that he has received such goods, which he undertakes to deliver to the person named in the bill of lading: that it is assignable in its nature; and by indorsement the property is vested in the assignee. That where several bills of lading of different imports have been signed, no reference is to be had to time, when they were first signed by the captain: but the person, who first gets one of them by a legal title from the owner or shipper, has a right to the consignment. And where such bills of lading, though different upon the face of them, are constructively the same, and the captain has acted bona fide, a delivery according to such legal title will discharge him from them all.

the

the insurers; but the Lord Chief Justice allowed it. Sir Wm. Lee.

It is, in the last place, incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that a loss has happened, and that, by the very means, stated in the policy. It is absolutely necessary, that this rule should be strictly adhered to; for otherwise the insurers would come into court prepared to defend themselves against one charge, and one species of loss; and they would then be obliged to resist a demand upon a quite different ground. This appeared clearly in a modern case.

It was an action on a policy of insurance, which came on to be tried before Mr. Justice Buller, who nonsuited the plaintiff. Upon a motion to set aside that nonsuit, the following report was made by the learned judge. The insurance was upon goods on board the ship Emanuel, at and from Falmouth to Marseilles, warranted a Danish ship; and on the policy was this memorandum: "The following insurance is

Kulen Kemp
and Others,
v. Vigne.
Term Reports, p. 304,
for Trin.
26 Geo. 3.

"declared to be on money expended for re-
"claiming the ship and cargo valued at the sum,
"which shall be declared hereafter. The loss
"to be paid, in case the ship does not arrive at "Marseilles, and without further proof of inte"rest than this policy; warranted free from all
"average, and without the benefit of salvage."

It appeared that the plaintiffs were proprietors of the cargo, but not of the ship. That the ship originally sailed with the cargo on board from Riga to Marseilles, and that an insurance had been effected at Bremen upon the cargo for that voyage; in the course of which she was taken, and brought into Falmouth, by an English privateer. That a sentence of condemnation had been there obtained, which was afterwards reversed upon the prize having been proved to be a neutral ship, but the expences of procuring that reversal were ordered by the Admiralty Court to be a charge upon the cargo. The plain-tiff's

H h

tiff's agents accordingly paid the sum of 1031 l. 14 s. for the expences of reclaiming the ship and cargo; and immediately procured the policy in question to be effected in January 1781, according to the purport of the memorandum. In the February following, the ship set sail from Falmouth with the original cargo on board, in the prosecution of her voyage to Marseilles: but on the 26th of the same month, before her arrival there, was captured by a Spanish ship, and carried into Ceuta in Spain, where she was again condemned. An appeal was brought in the superior court of Madrid, which promising to be of long continuance, the cargo, which was of a perishable nature, was ordered to be sold, and the proceeds to be brought into court, to wait the event of the suit. In May 1783, the vessel was restored by sentence of the court, and the surplus of the proceeds, which arose from the sale of the cargo, was paid to the owners, deducting the expences incurred in Spain in prosecuting the appeal. After all the charges paid, there only remained twenty-six rix dollars. As soon as the ship was liberated, she sailed from Ceuta to Malaga, in order to refit, and having there made the necessary repairs, set sail for Bremen, and in that voyage was lost. The insurance made upon the cargo at Bremen has been paid. The declaration averred, that "whilst the ship was proceeding in her said voyage from Falmouth to Marseilles, and before she could arrive at Marseilles, she was captured by the Spaniards, and thereby the said ship, and also the goods and merchandizes on board her, were totally lost to the plaintiffs." At the trial, it was objected on the part of the defendant, 1st, That this was not an insurable interest; and 2dly, That the plaintiffs could not recover upon the policy in this form of declaring, for they stated the loss to have happened by capture; whereas, though the vessel was captured, yet, having been afterwards restored, she might have reached her destined port, notwithstanding the capture, in which case the underwriters would have been discharged by the terms of the memorandum. I was of that opinion, and upon the last ground, I nonsuited the plaintiffs.

This case was very fully argued both upon the merits, and the formal objection, after which all the Judges spoke upon the question.

Lord Mansfield.—The interest, on which the plaintiffs effected this policy, was money laid out in reclaiming the cargo. The event, insured by the policy, was the arrival of the ship at Marseilles. If she did not arrive, then the money was to be paid; if she did, then there was an end of the insurance. A loss accrued upon the cargo in the voyage: the underwriter is sued, and the loss is averred in the declaration to be by capture. The fact of the case is, that the ship was taken by a Spanish privateer, but was afterwards restored, and in a condition to pursue the voyage, and was afterwards lost in another voyage.

Mr. Justice Willes.—Upon this case, it is clear, that the plaintiffs cannot recover. In the first place, there was certainly a deviation, for the ship set sail for Malaga, instead of proceeding to Marseilles. Secondly, the plaintiff has declared for a loss by capture: but, after the capture, the policy might still have been complied with by the ship's going to Marseilles; and therefore the loss cannot be said to have happened by that circumstance.

Mr. Justice Askeburst and Mr. Justice Buller also delivered their opinions, agreeing with Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Willes upon the formal objection; and both went much at large into the merits, upon which I forbear to follow them or the Chief Justice, as what passed upon that subject is not material to our present enquiry.

But where a loss is averred to be by perils of the sea, and some of the goods insured are spoiled, and others saved, it is allowable to give the expence of the salvage in evidence upon such an averment, because it is a consequence of the accident laid in the declaration.

Cary v. King.
Cas. Temp.
Hardwicke,
B. R. 304.

In an action on a policy of insurance, for insuring goods on board the ship A. the plaintiff declares, that the ship sprung a leak, and sunk in the river, whereby the goods were spoiled. The evidence was, that many of the goods were spoiled, but some were saved; and the question was, Whether the plaintiff might give in evidence the expence of salvage, that not being particularly laid as a breach of the policy in the declaration.

Lord Hardwicke Chief Just.—I think they may give it in evidence; for the insurance is against all accidents. The accident laid in this declaration is, that the ship sunk in the river; it goes on and says, that by reason thereof the goods were spoiled, that is the only special damage laid: yet it is but the common case of a declaration that lays special damage, where the plaintiff may give evidence of any damage that is within his cause of action as laid. And though it was objected, that such a breach of the policy should be laid, as the insurer may have notice to defend it; it is so in this case, for they have laid the accident, which is sufficient notice, because it must necessarily follow, that some damage did happen.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

Of Bottomry and Respondentia.

2 Black.
Comm. 457.

THE contract of bottomry is in the nature of a mortgage of a ship, when the owner of it borrows money to enable him to carry on the

the voyage, and pledges the keel or bottom of the ship, as a security for the repayment: and it is understood, that if the ship be lost, the lender also loses his whole money; but if it return in safety, then he shall receive back his principal, and also the premium or interest stipulated to be paid, however it may exceed the usual, or legal rate of interest. When the ship and tackle are brought home, they are liable, as well as the person of the borrower, for the money lent.— But when the loan is not made upon the vessel, but upon the goods and merchandizes laden thereon, which, from their nature, must be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, then the borrower only is personally bound to answer the contract; who therefore in this case is said to take up money at respondentia. In this consists the difference between bottomry and respondentia; that the one is a loan upon the ship, the other upon the goods: in the former the ship and tackle are liable, as well as the person of the borrower; in the latter, for the most part, recourse must be had to the person only of the borrower. Another observation is, that in a loan upon bottomry, the lender runs no risk though the goods should be lost; and upon respondentia, the lender must be paid his principal and interest, though the ship perish, provided the goods are safe. But in all other respects, the contract of bottomry and that of respondentia are upon the same footing; the rules and decisions applicable to one, are applicable to both; and therefore in the course of our enquiries, they shall be treated as one and the same thing, it being sufficient to have once marked the distinction between them.

These terms are also applied to another species of contract, which does not exactly fall within the description of either, namely, to a contract for the repayment of money, not upon the ship and goods only, but upon the mere hazard of

² Blackf. Com. 458.

² Valin Com. p. 4.

² Blackf. Com. 458.

¹ Siderfin 27.

Molloy, lib.
2. c. 11.
f. 8.

19 Geo. 2.
c. 37.
f. 5.

the voyage itself: as if a man lend 1000*l.* to a merchant to be employed in a beneficial trade, with a condition to be repaid with extraordinary interest, in case a specific voyage named in the condition shall be safely performed: which agreement is sometimes called fenus nauticum or usura maritima. But as this species of bottomry opened a door to gaming and usurious contracts, especially in long voyages, the legislature, at the time it suppressed insurances upon wagering policies, introduced a clause, by which it was enacted, “ That all sums of money lent on “ bottomry, or at respondentia upon any ship or “ ships belonging to his Majesty’s subjects, “ bound to or from the East Indies, should be lent “ only on the ship, or on the merchandize or “ effects, laden or to be laden, on board of “ such ship, and should be so expressed in the “ condition of the said bond; and the benefit of “ salvage should be allowed to the lender, his “ agents or assigns, who alone should have a “ right to make assurance on the money so lent;
“ and in case it should appear that the value of “ his share in the ship, or in the merchandizes “ or effects laden on board of such ship, did not “ amount to the full sum or sums he had borrowed as aforesaid, such borrower should be “ responsible to the lender for so much of the “ money borrowed, as he had not laid out on “ the ship or merchandizes laden thereon, with “ lawful interest for the same, in the proportion “ the money not laid out should bear to the “ whole money lent, notwithstanding the ship
“ and merchandizes should be totally lost.”

This statute has entirely put an end to that species of contract which was last mentioned, namely, a loan upon the mere voyage itself, as far, at least, as relates to India voyages; but as none other are mentioned, and as expressio unius est exclusio alterius, these loans may be made in all other cases, as at the Common Law.

This

This species of loan upon the voyage is entirely prohibited by the laws of France; for in the marine ordinances of that country, there is a general regulation similar to that made here with respect to India ships: “Faisons defenses de “prendre deniers a la grosse sur le corps et “quille du navire, ou sur les marchandises de “son chargement, au delà de leur valeur, au peine “d’être contraint, en cas de fraude, au paiement
 “des sommes entieres, non obstant la perte ou
 “prise du vaisseau.” And in another place it is said, that where a greater sum is borrowed, than the ship or goods are worth, where there is no fraud, the contract is void, except as to the amount of the real value of the ship or goods. If then the contract be only binding as far as there is property to answer the loan, it follows that by the laws of France, this contract cannot exist upon the hazard of the voyage merely, unless there be a security also upon the ship or goods.

Ord. of Lou.
14. tit. des Contrats à grosse Avant.
art. 3.

Loc. cit.
art. 15.

The contract of bottomry and respondentia seems to deduce its origin from the custom of permitting the master of a ship, when in a foreign country, to hypothecate the ship in order to raise money to refit. Such a permission is absolutely necessary, and is impliedly given him in the very act of constituting him master, not indeed by the Common Law, but by the Marine Law, which in this respect is reasonable; for if a ship happen to be at sea, and spring a leak, or the voyage is likely to be defeated for want of necessaries, it is better that the master should have it in his power to pledge the ship and goods (a), or either of them, than that the ship should be lost, or the voyage defeated. But he cannot do either for any debt of his own;

2 Blackst.
Com. 457.

Barnard v.
Bridgeman,
Moor 918. fully reported in Hobart,
p. 11.

Molloy, b. 2.
c. 2. f. 14.
Leg. Oler.
art. 1. & 22.

(a) That the master may hypothecate the goods, as well as the ship, see Salk. 34. pl. 7.

Laws of the Hanse Towns,
art. 6c.

Hobart 11.
Noy 95.

Molloy, l. 2.
c. 11. s. 11.

Molloy, loc.
cit.

Ord. of Lou.
14. tit. Av.
à la grosse.
art. 8. & 9.

but merely in cases of necessity, and for completing the voyage. Although the master of the vessel has this power while abroad, because it is absolutely necessary for the purposes of commerce and navigation; yet the very same authority which gave that power in those cases, has denied it when he happens to be in the same place where the owners reside. Thus the laws of Oleron, in the place above cited, speak of the captain being in a foreign country, and first writing home to his owners for money, before he takes money on bottomry: and the laws of the Hanse Towns, which were founded on those of Oleron, speak the same language; for they say, “a master being in a strange country, if necessity drive him to it, may take up money on bottomry, if he cannot get it without, and the owners shall bear the charge.” In addition to this, all the cases, which have been determined at the Common Law, upon the subject, seem to require that the ship should be abroad, as well as in a state of necessity, to justify the captain or master, in taking up money on bottomry. Molloy in express terms declares, that a master has no power to take up money on bottomry, in places where his owners dwell; otherwise he and his estate must be liable thereto.—If, indeed, the owners do not agree in sending the ship to sea, the majority shall carry it, and then money may be taken up by the master on bottomry for their proportion who refuse, although they reside upon the spot, and it shall bind them all. The two last rules are the same with the marine ordinances of France upon that point: for they also declare, that those who lend money to the master, in the place where the owners reside, without their consent, shall have no security or hypothecation, but on such part of the ship only as belongs to the master himself, even though the money was advanced for repairs, or for purchasing provisions. But that the shares of those owners, who refuse to send send out the ship, shall be affected by the loan of money to the master for necessaries. The justice and propriety of such a regulation, are evident from considering that such a contract was only intended for the benefit of all parties in those places, where the owners had neither a residence, nor any correspondents. 2 Valin, Com. 10.

The contract of which we treat is of a different nature from almost all others: but that, which it most nearly resembles, is the contract of insurance; for the lender on bottomry or at respondentia, runs almost all the same risks, with respect to the property, on which the loan is made, that the insurer does with respect to the effects insured. There are, however, some considerable distinctions; for instance, the lender supplies the borrower with money to purchase those effects, upon which he is to run the risk: not so with the insurer. There are also various other distinctions. Pothier, Tr. du pret, à la grosse Avant. not. 6.

But however similar they may be in other respects, they differ very much in point of antiquity. We have formerly endeavoured to shew, that the contract of insurance was certainly unknown to the traders of the ancient world: but it is equally clear that with the contract of bottomry and respondentia, or what was equivalent to it, they were perfectly acquainted. In those fragments of the famous sea laws of the Rhodians, which have been preserved and transmitted to our times, I think there are very evident traces of this species of contract. In one section it is said, “that when masters of ships, who are proprietors of one third of the lading, take up money for the voyage, whether for the outward or homeward bound, or both; all transactions shall pass according to the writings drawn up between the master and lender, and the latter shall put a man on board the ship to take care of his loan.” But in another place, these laws speak more explicitly, and with a direct Vide the Introduction, Leg. Rhod. l. 1. art. 21.

Leg Rhod.
f. 2. art. 16.

Digest. lib.
22. tit. 2.
Cod. lib. 4.
tit. 33.

2 Valin
Com. 1.

Art. 1. and 22.

Laws of Wilsb. art. 45.

rect reference to the distinction between naval interest, and that which is given for a land risk. " If masters or merchants borrow money for their " ~~voyages~~, the goods, freight, ships, and money " being free, they shall not make use of surety- " ship, except there be some apparent danger " either of the sea, or of pirates. And for the " money so lent, the borrowers shall pay naval " interest." From these two quotations, little doubt can be entertained, but that the Rhodians used to borrow and lend, upon the hazard of the voyage, for an increased premium. It was formerly seen, that the Rhodian laws in general were adopted by the Romans; and consequently that branch of them, which relates to bottomry amongst the rest; for you can hardly open a book upon the Roman law, but you meet with chapters, de nautico fœnore, de nauticis usuris, which plainly shew that this contract was well known to the jurists of that distinguished nation. It was also called by them pecunia trajectitia: because it was given to the borrower to be employed by him in commerce upon, and beyond the sea. It appears from Valin, that some writers of the French nation had supposed, that this contract was wholly unknown to the ancients, and that it was peculiar to France alone. Valin very clearly exposes the absurdity of such an idea; and it seems to be sufficiently answered, if deserving of an answer, by what has been already said. In addition to this we may add, that so far from being peculiar to France, it has obtained a place in the codes of all the maritime states, whose laws have been promulgated, or have been at all famous in the modern world. In this chapter we have already had occasion to cite two passages from the judgments, or laws of Oleron upon the subject, as well as the 60th article of the laws of the Hanse towns: and by a reference to the 45th article of the laws of Wilsby, it will be found, that the nature of bottomry, as well as it's name, was perfectly perfectly known to the makers of those ordinances.

In the Guidon, indeed, it is supposed that the contract of bottomry now in use, is not at all the same, as that which was known to the ancients. This authority is respectable: but facts must speak for themselves; in addition to which, the celebrated Emerigon has observed that the assertion of the author of the Guidon is only true with respect to the form, which the modern regulations have given to this contract, the true origin of which is lost in it's antiquity.

Le Guid.
c. 18. art. 2.

2 Emerigon,
P. 384.

In our definition of bottomry it was said, that if the ship arrive safe, the lender shall be paid his principal, and the stipulated interest due upon it; however much it exceed the legal rate. The true principle, upon which this is allowed, is not merely the great profit and convenience of trade, as has frequently been urged; but the risk which the lender runs of losing both principal and interest: for he runs the contingency of winds, seas, and enemies. It is therefore of the essence of a contract of bottomry, that the lender run the risk of the voyage; and that both principal and interest be at hazard: for if the risk go only to the interest or premium, and not to the principal also, though a real and substantial risk be inferred, it is a contract against the statute of usury, and therefore void. This has been frequently so determined in our courts of law; and it is consonant to the ideas of foreign writers.

Molloy, lib.
2. c. 11. f. 8.
13.

2 Vezey,
148.

2 Vezey,
154.

12 Anne,
stat. 2. c. 16.

Pothier's Ib.
Not, 16.

An action of debt was brought upon an obligation. The defendant pleaded the statute of usury, and shewed, that a ship went to fish in Newfoundland, (which voyage might be performed in eight months) and that the plaintiff delivered 50*l.* to the defendant, to pay 60*l.* upon the return of the ship off Dartmouth: and if the said ship, by occasion of leakage or tempest, should not return from Newfoundland to Dartmouth, then the defendant should pay the 50*l.* only;

Sharpley v.
Hurrell.
Cro. Jac.
208.

only; and if the ship never returned, he should pay nothing. And it was held, by all the court, not to be usury within the statute. For if the ship had stayed at Newfoundland two or three years, he should have paid at the return of the ship but 60*l.*: and if the ship never returned, then nothing; so that the plaintiff ran hazard of having less than the interest, which the law allows; and possibly, neither principal nor interest.

Roberts v.
Trenayne.
Cro. Jac.
508.

: This case was, upon another occasion, mentioned in argument by one of the judges on the Bench; the principle, on which it was decided, was recognized, and the case itself allowed to be law.

Joy v. Kent.
Hard. Rep.
418.

So also in another case of debt upon an obligation, conditioned to pay so much money, if such a ship returned within six months from Ostend in Flanders to London, which was more by the third part than the legal interest of money; and if she do not return, then the obligation to be void: the defendant pleaded, that there was a corrupt agreement betwixt himself and the plaintiff, and that at the time of making the obligation, it was agreed betwixt them, that he should have no more for interest than the law permits, in case the ship should ever return; and avers that the obligation was entered into by covin, to evade the statute of usury, and the penalty thereof: upon this averment the plaintiff took issue, and the defendant demurred.

Lord Chief Baron Hale.—Clearly this bond is not within the statute, for this is the common way of insurance; and if this were void by the statute of usury, trade would be destroyed. It is not like to the case, where the condition of the bond is to give so much money, if such or such a person be then alive; for there is a certainty of that at the time. But it is uncertain and a casualty whether such a ship will ever return or not.

In

In another case of debt upon an obligation for 300 l. the condition was, that if such a ship went to Surat in the East Indies, and returned safe; or if the owner, or the goods laden on board the ship returned safe, then the defendant was to pay the principal to the plaintiff, and 40 l. for each 100 l.; but that if the ship should perish by unavoidable casualties of sea, fire, or enemies, to be proved by sufficient testimony, then the plaintiff should have nothing. The doubt was, whether this was an usurious contract: and it was said to be so, because the payment depended upon so many things, one of which in all probability would happen. But the whole court held it not to be within the statute.

Soome v. Gleen,
1 Siderfin,
27.
1 Levinz, 54
S. C.

Lord Chief Justice Bridgman took a distinction between a bargain of this kind, and a loan; for where there is a bargain, as here, and the principal is hazarded, that cannot be within the statute of usury: but it is otherwise of a loan, where the principal is not in danger. Here there are apparent risks of the sea, fire, and enemies, and the length of the voyage; all of which endanger the loss of the principal. These bottomry contracts are for the advancement of trade, and therefore judgment must be for the plaintiff.

These cases are all uniform in the principle which they go to establish, that on account of the risk, the interest shall be larger than the common rate: but notwithstanding this, a case is to be found in the Equity Reports, which directly tends to destroy the rule of decision in all these cases.

A part owner of a ship borrowed money of the plaintiff upon a bottomry bond, payable on the return of the ship from the voyage, she was then going in the service of the East India Company, who broke up the ship in the East Indies; and the owners brought their action against the Company, and recovered damages, which did not, however, amount to a full satisfaction. The plaintiff brought his bill to have his proportionable

Dandy v. Turner.
1 Equity Cases Abr.
372.

able satisfaction out of the money recovered ; but his bill was dismissed, and he was left to recover as well as he could at law ; for a court of equity will never assist a bottomry bond, which carries unreasonable interest.

This case conveys a very unmerited censure upon bottomry bonds, not at all warranted by the long chain of uniform decisions in their favour. Indeed, from the very nature of the contract, they are to carry the naval interest, which is always greater than land interest, in proportion as the risks run by the lender on bottomry are much greater than those which a lender upon common bonds incurs.

4 Com. Dig.
193.
2 Vezey. 146.

To be sure if a contract were made, by colour of bottomry, in order to evade the statute, it would be usurious and void, and highly deserving of all the censure and discouragement which the courts, either of law or equity, could possibly throw upon it.

Introd. de Assicur.
Not. 26.

In England then it is clear, from these cases, that there is nothing unlawful in the contract of bottomry : but some writers in foreign countries have endeavoured to hold it up to the world, as an illicit and an usurious bargain. Straccha, who has written upon insurances, has introduced a long dissertation to prove the truth of this position ; and several other writers have either preceded or followed him in support of the same doctrines. If, indeed, the money so lent, were given merely by way of a loan, and such excessive interest were demanded for the use of the money only, there might be force in the objection. But when it is considered as the price of the great risks incurred, it has not the least semblance of usury ; it is a fair and conscientious contract, highly beneficial to the commerce and general interests of society.

Pothier Avantage à la grosse.
Not. 2.
2 Emer. 390.

These authors have met with very able opposers in Pothier and Emerigon, who have clearly shewn the fallacy of their doctrine ; and they have proved to demonstration, that even the fathers of the

the church have acknowledged, that this contract has nothing in it offensive to religion or good morals. Almost all the writers of eminence agree with the two last named, as to the legality of loans on bottomry and at respondentia: and it is now universally admitted and practised in all the maritime and trading countries in Europe.

Loccenius,
lib. 2. c. 6.
Not. 3.
Roccus de Navibus et Naulo. not.
50. 2 Black.
Com. 457.

But as the hazard to be run is the very basis and foundation of this contract; it follows, that if the risk is not run, the lender cannot be entitled to the extraordinary premium; for that would be to open a door to means by which the statutes of usury might be evaded. This was so decided in the Court of Chancery.

The case was upon a bottomry bond, whereby the plaintiff was bound in consideration of 400*l.* as well to perform the voyage within six months, as at the six months end to pay the 400*l.* and 40*l.* premium, in case the vessel arrived safe, and was not lost in the voyage. It happened that the plaintiff never went the voyage, whereby the bond became forfeited, and he now preferred his bill to be relieved. Upon the former hearing, as the ship lay all the time in the port of London, and there was no hazard of losing the principal, the Lord Keeper thought fit to decree, that the defendant should lose the premium of 40*l.* and be contented with his principal and ordinary interest. And now, upon a rehearing, he confirmed his former decree.

Deguilder v.
Depeister.
1 Vern. 263.

With this decree, which is equitable and just, the French writers agree. They say, that in such a case, “ L’emprunteur sera bien obligé de rendre “ la somme qui lui a été prêtée, mais il ne fera “ pas obligé de payer en outre la somme qu’il a “ promis de payer pour le profit maritime; car
“ le profit maritime étant le prix des risques que “ le prêteur devoit courir des effets sur lesquels
“ le prêt a été fait, il ne peut lui être dû de profit “ maritime quand il n’a couru aucuns risques, “ ne

Pothier
Traité a la
Grosse Avan-
ture. Not. 38.
2 Valin 16.

“ ne pouvant pas y avoir un prix des risques, s'il “ n'y a pas eu de risques.”

Vide the Appendix. No.
 2.

Beawes Lex
 Merc. Red.
 4th edit.
 p. 127.

Bottomry bonds generally express from what time the risk shall commence, as that the ship shall sail from London to such a port abroad, &c. In such cases, the contingency does not commence till the departure: and therefore if the ship receive injury by storm, fire, &c. before the beginning of the voyage, the person borrowing alone runs the hazard. But if the condition be, “ that “ if the ship shall not arrive at such a place by “ such a time, then &c.” in these instances, the contract commences from the time of sailing, and a different rule, as to the loss, will necessarily prevail.

2 Magens. 28.
 166.

19 Geo. 2.
 c. 37. s. 5.

Vide the Appendix. No.
 2.

Roccus de
 Navibus.
 Not. 51.

2 Valin. 14.

Roccus loc.
 cit.

We have shewn at the beginning of this chapter, that the amount of the loan on bottomry or respondentia, in this country, is not restrained by any regulation whatever; although it is in many maritime states by express ordinances: that the only restriction in the law of England is, with respect to money lent on ships and goods going to the East Indies, which, by statute, must not exceed the value of the property on which the loan is made. It remains then to see what those risks are, to which the lender undertakes to expose himself. These are for the most part mentioned in the condition of the bond, and are nearly the same, against which the underwriter, in a policy of insurance, undertakes to indemnify. “ Limita hoc “ singulariter, ut creditor subeat periculum naviga“ tionis, in casibus fortuitis tantum.” These accidents are, tempests, pirates, fire, capture, and every other misfortune, except such as arise either from the defects of the thing itself, on which the loan is made, or from the misconduct of the borrower: for, says the Italian lawyer, last quoted, in continuation of the above sentence, “ *Secus est
 “ si infortunium, vel naufragium ex culpâ debitoris “ processerit, quia tunc creditor non tenetur de peri“ culo, et damno, in quod incurritur ex culpâ velen“ tis,*

*“tis, prout in simili deciditur in materia assicura-“tionis, ut quantumcumque assicuratio sit generalis, “non contineat periculum, aut damnum, quod factio
 “assurati contingit.”*

It seems to have been a doubt, late in the last century, whether a loss by the attacks of pirates was a risk which the lender on bottomry had by his contract undertaken to bear; for it was argued in the King's Bench, in the reign of James the Second. But the court were of opinion, that piracy was one of the dangers of the seas; and the defendant had judgment.

Barton v.
Wolliford.
Comb. 56.

The lender is answerable likewise for losses by capture; or to speak more accurately, if a loss by capture happen, he cannot recover against the borrower: but in bottomry and respondentia bonds, capture does not mean a mere temporary taking, but it must be such a capture as to occasion a total loss. And therefore if a ship be taken and detained for a short time, and yet arrive at the port of destination within the time limited, (if time be mentioned in the condition) the bond is not forfeited, and the obligee may recover.

This doctrine was laid down by the whole Court of King's Bench, in a case upon a bond of this nature; the proceedings on which were fully stated, when the unanimous opinion of the court was delivered by Lord Mansfield. This comes before the court upon a motion on the part of the defendant, for a new trial. It was an action of debt upon a bottomry bond; the condition of which was, that upon the ship's safe arrival at New York, a certain sum of money should be paid to the plaintiff; but that in case the ship should miscarry, be lost, cast away, or taken by the enemy, the plaintiff should have nothing. The defendant pleaded three pleas: 1st, Non est factum; 2dly, That the ship did not arrive at New York, the port of destination; 3dly, That the ship was captured. Upon the two first pleas issue was joined; and to the last, there was a replication of recapture.

Joyce v. Williamson, B.R.
Mich. Term
23 Geo. 3.

recapture. The facts, which appeared in evidence on the trial, are these: the ship was taken before her arrival at New York; by two American privateers, which detained her for one month, and plundered her of her stores; at which time she was retaken by an English privateer, and carried into Halifax. The Admiralty Court adjudged her to be a good prize to the English privateer, and decreed that she should be restored to the original owners, on paying one eighth for salvage: that she proceeded with the remainder of her cargo to New York, and earned her freight: that the value of the ship was not sufficient to satisfy the bond. These are the facts. Now it is clear, that, by the law of England, there is neither average nor salvage upon a bottomry bond. It was indeed contended at the bar; on the part of the defendant, that this case was within the saving of the bond; for it is provided, that in case of loss by capture, &c. the bond should be void: and that here there was a capture, and a detention for one month. But upon consideration, we think that a capture, within this condition, does not mean a temporary capture; but it must be a total loss: now here it was not such a capture as to occasion a total loss. The voyage was not lost, for the defendant pursued it and earned his freight. Freight depends upon the safety of the ship; and as the freight was earned, the ship must have arrived safe at the port of destination. In whatever way we determine this case, there must be a hardship: but we are all of opinion, that the verdict is right, and that the rule for a new trial must be discharged.

From this case we not only learn what shall be deemed a capture, within the meaning of that word in a bottomry bond, but we derive from it a piece of very essential information, namely, that a lender on bottomry, or at respondentia, is neither intitled to the benefit of salvage, nor liable to contribute in case of a general average. This was expressly said by Lord Mansfield in delivering the the judgment of the court. His Lordship's opinion is confirmed by the statute of the 19th of George the Second, c. 37. which allows the benefit of salvage to lenders upon ships or goods going to the East Indies; clearly shewing that there was no such thing at the Common Law, otherwise there was no occasion to make such a provision. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. s. 5.

In this respect our law differs from that of France, for the ordinances, and indeed it seems always to have been the case in that country, expressly declare, that the lenders on bottomry shall be subject to general or gross averages, in the same manner as insurers are upon policies of insurance; for that as these contracts depend upon the same principles, they are subject to the same regulations. Le Guidon . c. 19. Art. 5. 2 Valin 19. 2 Emer. 504.

It has been said, that if the accident happen by the default of the borrower, or of the captain, the lender is not liable, and has a right to demand the payment of the bond. If, therefore, the ship be lost by a wilful deviation from the tract of the voyage, the event has not happened, upon which the borrower was to be discharged from his obligation. This has been decided in several cases.

An action of debt was brought upon an obligation for performance of covenants in an indenture, wherein it was recited, that such a ship was in the service of the East India Company, and that it was to obey such orders as they or their factors should give; and that she was designed for a voyage from London to Bantam, and from thence to Cbina or Formosa. The plaintiff lent 500*l.* upon the hull of the ship, and the defendant covenanted to pay, if the ship went from London to Bantam, and returned from thence directly to London 550*l.*: if from London to Bantam, and from thence to Cbina or Formosa, and returned to London within 24 months 650*l.* If she returned not within 24 months, then to pay 5*l.* per month above 650*l.* till 36 months; and if she returned not within 36 months, then to pay 10*l.* per month above 650*l.* till 48 months. Western v. Wildy. Skin. 152.

within 36 months, then to pay 710*l.* unless it can be proved by Wildy, that the ship returned not, but was lost within 36 months. The ship, in fact, went from London to Bantam, and from thence to Surat, and other parts, and so returned to Bantam; and in her voyage from Bantam to London, was lost within 36 months: upon which the present action was brought.

The court inclined to be of opinion, that this ship having deviated from the voyage described, in going to Surat, the plaintiff was not to bear the loss, and was consequently entitled to recover. They, however, took time to deliberate; and after consideration, gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Williams v.
Steadman.
Holt's Reports 126.
Skin. 345.
S. C.

In another case of debt upon a bottomry bond, the defendant pleaded, that the ship went from London to Barbadoes sine deviatione, and afterwards she returned from Barbadoes towards London, and in her return was lost in voyagio prædicto; the plaintiff replied, that the ship in her return went from Barbadoes to Jamaica; and that after a stay there, she returned from Jamaica towards London, and was lost, and so shews a deviation. The defendant rejoined, that she was pressed into the king's service, and so was compelled to go to Jamaica, which is the deviation pleaded by the plaintiff; without this that she deviated after she was pressed. The plaintiff demurred, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. The plea of the defendant is not good; for he pleads that the ship went from London to Barbadoes without deviation, and that in the return she was lost in the voyage aforesaid; but does not shew without deviation. Now the condition is so in express words, and he ought to shew expressly that he has performed the words of the condition.

The same rule of decision has been adopted in the Courts of Equity.

1 Equity Cases Abr.
372. 2 Chan.
Cases 150.

The plaintiff entered into a penal bond to pay 40*s.* per month for 50*l.*: the ship was to go from Holland

Holland to the Spanish islands, and to return to England: but if she perished, the defendant was to lose his 50*l.* The ship went accordingly to the Spanish islands, took in Moors at Africa, then went to Barbadoes, and perished at sea. The plaintiff, being sued at law upon the bond, came into equity, suggesting that the deviation was through necessity. But his bill was dismissed, except as to the penalty.

There is no restriction by the law of England as to the persons, to whom money may be lent on bottomry, or at respondentia. In a former part of this work, we gave the history of a statute introduced into our code of laws, to prevent insurances from being made on the ships or goods of Frenchmen, during the then existing war with France. The same statute also prohibited his Majesty's subjects from lending money on bottomry or at respondentia on any ships or goods belonging to France, or to any of the French dominions or plantations, or the subjects thereof: and in case they should, such contracts were declared void; and the parties thereto, or the agent or broker interfering therein, were to forfeit 500*l.* That act was not of long continuance, on account of the peace, which almost immediately followed it: and probably for the reasons, which were urged by the eminent speakers of those days, and which we formerly took an opportunity of inserting, these restraints upon this species of contract were never again revived by any subsequent law.

C. 1. p. 16.

21 Geo. 2.
c. 4.

Lex Merc.
Red. 4th ed.
p. 128.

It frequently happened, as appears by the preamble to the statute, that the borrowers on bottomry, or at respondentia, became bankrupts after the loan of the money, and before the event happened, which entitled the lender to repayment: by which means the debt could not be proved under the commission, and the lenders were left to such redress as they could obtain from the bankrupt, who had previously

19 Geo. 2.
c. 32. s. 2.

given up every thing to his other creditors. This being likely to prove a discouragement to trade, parliament was obliged to interpose; and it accordingly enacted, “ That the obligee in any “ bottomry or respondentia bond, made, and entered into upon a good and valuable consideration, bona fide, should be admitted to claim, and after the contingency should have happened, to prove his, or her debt or demands in respect of such bond, in like manner as if the contingency had happened before the time of the issuing of the commission of bankruptcy against such obligor, and should be entitled unto, and should have and receive a proportionable part, share, and dividend of such bankrupt’s estate, in proportion to the other creditors of such bankrupt, in like manner as if such contingency had happened before such commission issued: and that all and every person or persons, against whom any commission of bankruptcy should be awarded, should be discharged of and from the debt or debts owing by him, her, or them, on every such bond as aforesaid, and should have the benefit of the several statutes now in force against bankrupts, in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as if such contingency had happened, and the money due in respect thereof had become payable, before the time of the issuing of such commission.”

16 Cha. 2.
c. 6. s. 12.

By the statute-book it appears, that the masters and mariners of ships, having taken upon bottomry greater sums of money than the value of their adventure, had been accustomed wilfully to cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ships under their charge, to the great loss of the merchants and owners: it was therefore enacted, “ That if any captain, master, mariner, or other officer belonging to any ship, should wilfully cast away, burn, or otherwise destroy the ship unto which he belonged, or procure the same

“ to

“ to be done, he should suffer death as a felon.” The duration of this act having been limited to three years, it became extinct: but the necessity of such a provision was so great, that a similar law was made a few years afterwards, and is still in force. 22 & 23 Cha. 2. c. 11. s. 12.

As the commerce of the country increased to an amazing degree, so the custom of lending money on bottomry became also very prevalent: and as the lenders had subjected themselves to great risks, they began to think it necessary to protect their property, by insuring to the amount of the money lent. In a former chapter, much was said of the mode by which insurances on such property were to be effected; and we then saw from the case of Glover v. Black, that it was necessary to insert in the policy that the interest insured was bottomry or respondentia, and that such was the law and practice of merchants. Vide ante. c. 1. From this case too it is evident, that when a person has insured a bottomry or respondentia interest, and he recovers upon the bond, he cannot also recover upon the policy: because he has not sustained a loss within the meaning of his contract; and to suffer any man to receive a double satisfaction, would be contrary to the first principles of insurance law. As it is merely a contract of indemnity, a man shall never receive less; nor can he be entitled to recover more than the amount of the damage he has, in fact, sustained. 3 Burr. 1394

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

Of Insurances upon Lives.

AN Insurance upon Life is a contract, by which the underwriter for a certain sum, proportioned to the age, health, profession, and other Postlethw. Dict. of Tr. p. 150.

Vide the Appendix,
No. 3.

2 Blackst.
Com. 459.

1 Postlethw.
450.

other circumstances of the person, whose life is the object of insurance, engages that that person shall not die within the time limited in the policy: or if he do, that he will pay a sum of money to him in whose favour the policy was granted. Thus if A. lend 100*l.* to B. who can give nothing but his personal security for repayment: in order to secure him, in case of his death, B. applies to C. an insurer, to insure his life in favour of A. by which means, if B. die within the time limited in the policy, A. will have a demand upon C. for the amount of his insurance.

The advantages resulting from such insurances are many and obvious: and most of them may be reduced under the following classes. To persons possessed of places or employments for life; to masters of families, and others, whose income is subject to be determined, or lessened, at their respective deaths; who, by insuring their lives, may secure a sum of money for the use of their families. To married persons, where a jointure, pension, or annuity, depends on both or either of their lives, by insuring the life of the persons entitled to such annuity, pension, or jointure. To dependents upon any other person, during whose life they are entitled to a salary or benefaction, and whose life being insured, will enable such dependents, at the death of their benefactor, to claim from the insurers a sum equal to the premium paid. To persons wanting to borrow money, who, by insuring their lives, are enabled to give a security for the money borrowed. These, and many other advantages, being so obvious, the Bishop of Oxford, Sir Thomas Allen, and some other gentlemen, were induced to apply to Queen Anne, to obtain her charter for incorporating them and their successors, whereby they might provide for their families, in an easy and beneficial manner. Accordingly, in the year 1706, her Majesty granted her her royal charter, incorporating them by the name of "The Amicable Society for a perpetual Assurance Office," giving them a power to purchase lands, an ability to sue and be sued in their corporate capacity, and a common seal for the more easy and expeditious management of the affairs of the Company.

The benefits, which accrued to the public from this species of contract, were found to be so extensive, that another office was established by deed enrolled in the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, for the insurance of lives only. The name of this office is the "society for equitable assurances on lives and survivorships." Besides this, the two Companies of the Royal Exchange, and London Assurance, obtained his Majesty's charter, to enable them also to make insurances on lives. The charter points out the advantages of such institutions; for it states as the ground, on which such a permission is to be granted, "That it has been found by experience to be of benefit and advantage, for persons having offices, employments, estates, or other incomes, determinable on the life or lives of themselves or others, to make assurances on the life or lives, upon which such offices, employments, estates, or incomes are determinable." Private underwriters also may enter into policies of this nature, as well as any other, provided the party, making the insurance, chuses to trust their single security.

The antiquity of this practice cannot be very easily ascertained; however we find traces of it in some very old authors. In the French book entitled Le Guidon, we find it mentioned, as a contract perfectly well known, at that time, in other countries. The author of that book, however, tells us in the same passage, that it was a species of contract wholly forbidden in France, as being repugnant to good morals, and as opening a door to a variety of frauds and abuses. Such, indeed,

Le Guidon,
c. 16. art. 5.
published in 1661.

2 Valin, 54.

2 Magens,
70.
Le Guid.
loc. cit.

Roccus de
Assic.
Not. 74.

1 Mag. 33.

14 Geo. 3.
c. 48. s. 1.

Señ. 2.

the law of France continues at this day : and insurances upon lives are prohibited in other countries of Europe by positive regulation. The same French author has, however, gone a little too far in asserting, that the other countries, in which they had been till that time encouraged, were also obliged to forbid them. This had not certainly taken place at that time, as may be inferred from the 66th article of the laws of Wisby : and in England they never have been prohibited. The learned Roccus also takes notice of them as legal contracts, and quotes various authors in support of his opinion.

These insurances being thus sanctioned in England by royal authority, and the funds of the different societies having very much encreased, and being fixed on a stable and permanent foundation, contracts of this nature became so much a mode of gambling (for people took the liberty of insuring any one's life, without hesitation, whether connected with him, or not, and the insurers seldom asked any question about the reasons, for which such insurances were made,) that it at last became a subject of parliamentary discussion. The result of that discussion was, that a statute passed, by which it was enacted, " That no insurance should be made by " any person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, on the life or lives of any person or persons, or on any other event or events whatsoever, wherein the person or persons, for whose use, benefit, or on whose account, such policies should be made, should have no interest, or by way of gaming or wagering ; and every insurance made, contrary to the true intent and meaning thereof, should be null and void to all intents and purposes." And in order more effectually to guard against any imposition or fraud, and to be the better able to ascertain, what the interest of the person, entitled to the benefit of the insurance, really was, it was further enacted, by the same same statute, “that it should not be lawful to “ make any policy or policies on the life or lives “ of any person or persons, or other event or “ events, without inserting in such policy or po“ licies, the person’s name interested therein, or “ for whose use, benefit, or on whose account,

 “ such policy was so made or underwrote. And Sect. 3.
 “ that in all cases where the insured had an in“ terest in such life or lives, event or events, no “ greater sum should be recovered, or received “ from the insurer or insurers than the amount “ or value of the interest of the insured in such “ life or lives, or other event or events.” (a)

The remaining observations and rules upon this subject are very few and short: because those general rules and maxims, upon which so much has been said with regard to insurances in general, are also applicable to this species of them: the same mode of construction is to be adopted; fraud will equally affect the one as the other; the same attention must be paid to a rigid compliance with warranties; and the same rules of proceeding are to be followed.

With respect to the risk, which the underwriter is to run, this is usually inserted in the policy; and he undertakes to answer for all those accidents to which the life of man is exposed, unless the

Vide the Appendix,
 No. 3.

(a) I have not, as yet, seen any judicial exposition of this statute, as far as relates to insurances: but there is a case of Roebuck v. Hammerton, in which a policy made, in order to decide upon the sex of a particular person, was held to fall within the prohibition of the statute. In another case, a policy having been made, on the event of there being an open trade between Great Britain and the province of Maryland, on or before the 6th July 1778, Lord Mansfield said, that it was clear the plaintiff could not recover. 1st. Is this an interest within the act? It was made to prevent gambling policies. Every man in the kingdom has an interest in the events of war and peace: but I doubt whether that be an interest within the act. But 2dly, The policy is void, by not having the name inserted according to the 2d section of the statute.

Cowper 737.

Mollison v.
Staples.
 Sittings at.
 Guildhall.
 Mich. Vac.
 1778.

cestuy

cestuy que vie put himself to death, or he die by the hand of justice. The policy, as to the risk, generally runs in these words: "the said insurers, in consideration of the sum paid, do assure, assume, and promise, that the said A. B. shall, by the permission of Almighty God, live, and continue in this natural life, for and during the said term, or in case he the said A. B. shall, during the said time, or before the full end and expiration thereof, happen to die by any ways or means whatsoever, suicide or the hands of justice excepted, then, &c. We see, that this contract expressly says, the death must happen within the time limited, otherwise the insurers are discharged. But suppose a mortal wound is received during the existence of the policy, and the person languishes till after the term limited in the contract, what says the law? Agreeably to the decision of this point, in cases of marine insurances, not only the cause of the loss, but the loss itself, must actually happen, during the time named in the policy, otherwise the insurers are not responsible. This very case was put by Mr. Justice Willes, in his argument, when delivering the opinion of the court, in the case of Lockyer v. Offley. Suppose, said the learned judge, an insurance upon a man's life for a year, and some short time before the expiration of the term, he receive a mortal wound, of which he dies after the year, the insurer would not be liable.

But when an insurance is made upon a man's life, who goes to sea, and the ship in which he sailed was never afterwards heard of, the question, whether he did or did not die within the term insured, is a fact for the jury to ascertain from the circumstances, which shall be produced in evidence.

Thus in an action on a policy of insurance on the life of L. Maclean, Esq; from the 30th of January 1772, to the 30th of January 1778, it appeared in evidence, that about the 28th of November

Vide ante,
c. 2. p. 34.

Vide ante,
p. 34.

Patterson v.
Black.
Sittings at Guildhall.
Hil. Vac.
1780.

ember 1777, Maclean sailed from the Cape of Good Hope in the Swallow sloop of war, which ship, not being afterwards heard of, was supposed to have been lost in a storm, off the Western Islands. The question was, whether Maclean died before the 30th of January 1778. In order to establish the affirmative of that question, the plaintiff called witnesses to prove the ship's departure from the Cape with Maclean; and several captains swore, that they sailed the same day; that the Swallow must have been as forward in her course as they were on the 13th or 14th of January, the period of a most violent storm, in which she probably was lost. That the Swallow was much smaller than their vessels, which, with difficulty, weathered the storm.

Lord Mansfield left it to the jury, whether, under all the circumstances, they thought the evidence sufficient to convince them, that Maclean died before the time limited in the policy; adding, that if they thought it so doubtful as not to be able to form an opinion, the defendant ought to have their verdict. The jury found for the plaintiff.

These insurances, when a loss happens upon them, must be paid according to the tenor of the agreement, in the full sum insured; as this sort of policy, from the nature of it, being on the life or death of man, does not admit of the distinction between total and partial losses. Lex Merc. Red. 4th edit. p. 294,

We have seen that private persons, as well as the publick companies, may be underwriters upon policies on lives; and as they frequently became bankrupts after the policy was underwritten, but before a loss happened, it became a question, whether the persons interested in such insurances could claim the money, and prove the debt, under the commission, as if the loss had happened before it issued. In the chapter immediately preceding this, and in one prior to that, we took occasion to observe, that in order Vide ch. 21. and chap. 14-

der

19 Geo. 2.
ch. 37. s. 2.

der to remedy an inconvenience of this nature with respect to marine insurances and bottomry bonds, a statute had passed, allowing creditors, either on such policies, or bottomry and respondentia bonds, to prove their debts under the commission, as if the loss or contingency had happened prior to that event. But as the words of the preamble to that section of the statute were special, referring only to insurances on ships and goods, or contracts of bottomry, it was doubtful whether it extended to insurances on lives, although the words of the enacting part were very general, namely, "the assured in any policy of assurance, &c." In support of this doubt it was urged, that great inconveniences would follow from extending the statute to these policies, because the risk may remain unsettled for a long and indefinite number of years. The court, however, held, that the general words of the enacting part were not restrained by the preamble.

Cox v.
Liotard.
B. R. Hil.
24 Geo. 3.
Dougl. Rep.
2d edit. p.
160.

This doctrine was laid down in an action on a policy of insurance on the life of J. H. Boyd, lately gone to the East Indies, on the event of his dying between the 5th of April 1780, and the 5th of April 1783. The defendant pleaded; 1st, bankruptcy generally; and that the cause of action accrued before the bankruptcy: 2dly, That the policy was made prior to the time of his becoming a bankrupt, then the trading, petitioning creditor's debt, commission, proceedings, and certificate were specially set out, and that he was thereby discharged from the said policy, and all debts due at the time of the bankruptcy, without saying, that the cause of action accrued before the bankruptcy. To this last plea, there was a general demurrer.

Lord Mansfield.—The only question is, whether the enacting words of this statute, which are general, shall be restrained by the preamble, which is particular. I think they should not be restrained.

strained. The enacting clause comprehends all insurances, and consequently insurances upon lives. This is exactly the case of Pattison v. Banks (a); for there the preamble was particular, but the enacting clause was general.

Mr. Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Asbburst concurred.

Mr. Justice Buller.—In the case of Mace v. Cadell, it was held, that the enacting words of the statute of 21st of Ja. 1. c. 19, were not restrained by the preamble (b). The inconveniences, that have been urged, are not so great as are apprehended; for the creditors need not be delayed in their dividend. When a creditor has an insurance of this kind, he has nothing to do but to lay it before the commissioners, who will make a calculation, and lay aside as much as will give him a dividend equal to that of the other creditors. There must be judgment for the defendant.

(a) The question in Pattison v. Banks (Cowper Rep. 540) arose upon the 7 Geo. 1. ch. 31. which allowed persons, who had given credit on bills, bonds, notes and other securities, payable at a future day, and which were not payable at the bankruptcy of the debtor, to prove them under the commission. The preamble to the statute speaks of securities only for the sale of goods and merchandizes; but as the enacting words were general, the court held, that they extended to a bond for the payment of an annuity for a term of years.

(b) The statute of James enacts, “that if any person, at such time as he shall become bankrupt, shall, by the consent of the true owner, &c. have in his possession, &c. any goods, &c. whereof he shall be reputed owner, the commissioners shall have power to sell the same in like manner as any other parts of the bankrupt’s estate.” The preamble says, “whereas it often happens that many persons before they become bankrupts, do convey their goods to other men, upon good consideration, and yet retain the possession, and are reputed owners thereof, &c.” The court in Mace v. Cadell (Cowp. 232) held, that the statute extended to the goods of a third person, which he allowed the bankrupt to keep possession of, as well as to those which originally belonged to the bankrupt, although the preamble speaks only of the bankrupt’s original property.

It

Sir Robert Howard's
Case.

2 Salkeld.
625.

1 Ld. Raymond 480.
S. C.

It became a doubt in the reign of King William, when a policy on a life was to run from the day of the date thereof, till that day twelve-month, and the person died on the day named, whether the insurer was liable. The court held that he was. The case was this: A policy of insurance was made to insure the life of Sir Robert Howard for one year, from the day of the date thereof; the policy was dated on the 3d day of September 1697. Sir Robert died on the 3d of September 1698, about one o'clock in the morning. Lord Holt held, that from the day of the date excludes the day, but from the date includes it (a); so that the day of the date must be excluded here, and the underwriter is liable.

Vide the Appendix, No.
3.

V. ante p.
245.

Although from a perusal of the note below, it will appear that no difficulty could occur on such a point at the present day; yet it is usual, in order to prevent disputes, to insert in the modern policies "the first and last days included."

Policies on lives are equally vitiated by fraud or falsehood, as those on marine insurances; because they are equally contracts of good faith, in which the underwriter, from necessity, must rely upon the integrity of the insured for the statement of circumstances. Indeed, the case of (a) In the law books, not perhaps much to the honour of the profession, this distinction taken by my Lord Holt, was at one time held to be law, at others not; sometimes, these expressions were held to mean the same thing; at others to be quite different. In the year 1777, however, this glaring absurdity was entirely done away; and the Court of King's Bench unanimously held, after much deliberation, that they mean the same thing; that they shall either be exclusive or inclusive, according to the context and subject matter, and shall be so construed as most effectually to support the deeds of the parties, and not to destroy them. See Lord Mansfield's very elaborate argument upon this occasion, in which all the cases are fully stated and considered. Page v. the Duke of Leeds. Cowper's Reports 714.

Wittingham

Wittingham v. Thornborough, which we took occasion to cite in support of the doctrine laid down in the chapter upon Fraud in Marine Insurances, was a policy upon a life insurance.— In another case, the principles of fraud were considered as far as it affects this contract.

It was an action on a policy of insurance for 150*l.* at four guineas per cent. in case Drury Sheppey should die at any time between the 1st of April 1777, and the 1st of April 1778, both days included, and during the life time of John Sheppey, the father of Drury: but in case the said John should die before the said Drury, the policy to be void; the question was, as to the representation of the life at the time of the insurance. The interest in the insurance was 900*l.* due from Drury Sheppey to the plaintiff. It was admitted, that the life expired within the time limited in the policy. Drury Sheppey had a place in the Custom-house of Ireland, and was in bad circumstances. He went to the South of France for the benefit of his health, or to avoid his creditors, and there died. The broker, who effected the policy, told the underwriters that the gentleman, for whom he acted, would not warrant, but from the account he (the broker) had received, he believed it to be a good life.

Lord Mansfield.—As to the interest, this policy may be considered as a collateral security for the debt due to the plaintiff. Where there is no warranty, the underwriter runs the risk of its being a good life or not. If there be a concealment of the knowledge of the state of the life, it is a fraud. It is a rule that every subsequent underwriter gives credit to the representation made to the first; and it is allowed that any subsequent underwriter may give in evidence a misrepresentation to the first. The broker here does not pretend to any knowledge of his own, but speaks from information. There is no fraud in him. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

K k

Even

Stackpole v. Simon.
Sittings at
Guildhall.
Hilary Vac.
1779.

Even where there is an express warranty, that the person is in good health, it is sufficient that he is in a reasonable, good state of health; for it never can mean, that the cestui que vie is perfectly free from the seeds of disorder. Nay, even if the person, whose life was insured, laboured under a particular infirmity, if it can be proved by medical men, that it did not at all, in their judgment, contribute to his death, the warranty of health has been fully complied with; and the insurer is liable.

Ross v.
Bradshaw.
1 Blackst.
Rep. 312.

Thus in an action on a policy made on the life of Sir James Ross for one year from October 1759 to October 1760, warranted in good health at the time of making the policy; the fact was, that Sir James had received a wound at the battle of La Feldt in the year 1747, in his loins, which had occasioned a partial relaxation or palsy, so that he could not retain his urine or feces, and which was not mentioned to the insurer. Sir James died of a malignant fever within the time of the insurance. All the physicians and surgeons, who were examined for the plaintiff, swore, that the wound had no sort of connexion with the fever; and that the want of retention was not a disorder, which shortened life, but he might, notwithstanding that, have lived to the common age of man: and the surgeons, who opened him, said, that his intestines were all found. There was one physician examined for the defendant, who said, the want of retention was paralytick; but being asked to explain, he said, it was only a local palsy, arising from the wound, but did not affect life: but on the whole he did not look upon him as a good life.

Lord Mansfield.—The question of fraud cannot exist in this case. When a man makes insurance upon a life generally, without any representation of the state of the life insured, the insurers take all the risk, unless there was some fraud in the person person insuring, either by his suppressing some circumstances, which he knew, or by alledging what was false. But if the person insuring knew no more than the insurer, the latter takes the risk. In this case there is a warranty, and wherever that is the case, it must at all events be proved, that the party was a good life, which makes the question on a warranty much larger than that on fraud. Here it is proved that there was no representation at all, as to the state of life, nor any question asked about it: nor was it necessary. Where an insurance is upon a representation, every material circumstance should be mentioned, such as age, way of life, &c. But where there is a warranty, then nothing need be told; but it must in general be proved, if litigated, that the life was, in fact, a good one, and so it may be, though he have a particular infirmity. The only question is, whether he was in a reasonable, good state of health, and such a life as ought to be insured on common terms. The jury, upon this direction, without going out of court, found a verdict for the plaintiff.

In a subsequent case, the same rule of decision was recommended and enforced. It was an action on a policy on the life of Sir Simeon Stuart, Bart. from the 1st of April 1779 to the 1st of April 1780, and during the life of Eliza Edgley Ewer. This policy contained a warranty that Sir Simeon was about 57 years of age, and in good health on the 11th of May 1779, and that Mrs. Ewer was about 78 years of age. The defendant at the trial admitted, that Sir Simeon and Mrs. Ewer were of the respective ages mentioned in the warranty; that he died before the 1st of April 1780, and that she was living. Two questions were intended to have been made; 1st, As to the plaintiff's interest: 2d, On the warranty of health. The former was disposed of, by the plaintiff having proved a judgment debt. As to the latter, it appeared in evidence, Willis v.

Poole.
Sittings at Guildhall.
Easter Vac.
1780.

that, although Sir Simeon was troubled with spasms and cramps from violent fits of the gout, he was in as good health, when the policy was underwritten, as he had been for a long time before. It was also proved by the broker, who effected the policy, that the underwriters were told, that Sir Simeon was subject to the gout. Dr. Heberden and other gentlemen of the faculty were examined, who proved that spasms and convulsions were symptoms incident to the gout.

Lord Mansfield. The imperfection of language is such, that we have not words for every different idea ; and the real intention of parties must be found out by the subject matter. By the present policy, the life is warranted, to some of the underwriters in health, to others in good health ; and yet there was no difference intended in point of fact. Such a warranty can never mean that a man has not the seeds of a disorder. We are all born with the seeds of mortality in us. A man, subject to the gout, is a life capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

Vide ante.
ch. 19.

In a former chapter we saw, that when the risk is entire, and it is once begun, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium, though it should cease the very next day after it commenced. The same rule is applicable in every respect to the premium upon life insurances ; for the contract is entire, and if the person whose life is insured, should put an end to it the next day, after the risk commences, though the underwriter is discharged, there would be no return of premium. This has never been decided in any judicial determination expressly on the point : but it has frequently been declared to be the law upon the subject by the learned judges in the course of argument, when return of premium on marine insurances was the point under discussion. This

was

was particularly done in the case of Tyrie, v. Cowper, 669. Fletcher, by Lord Mansfield, when delivering the judgment of the court. “ There has been an “ instance put,” said his Lordship, “ of a po“ licy where the measure is by time, which seems “ to me to be very strong and apposite to the “ present case ; and that is, an insurance upon a “ man’s life for twelve months. There can be “ no doubt but the risk there is constituted by “ the measure of time, and depends entirely upon “ it : for the underwriter would demand double “ the premium for two years, that he would “ take to insure the same life for one year only.
 “ In such policies, there is a general exception “ against suicide. If the person puts an end to “ his own life the next day, or a month after,
 “ or at any other period within the twelve-“ months, there never was an idea in any man’s “ breast, that part of the premium should be “ returned.”

Afterwards in the case of Berron v. Wood-bridge, Lord Mansfield laid down the same doctrine. “ In an insurance upon a life, with the “ common exception of suicide, and the hands “ of justice, if the party is executed, or com“ mit suicide, in twenty-four hours, there shall “ be no return.” Douglas.
758.

From these opinions which have been frequently repeated in other cases, the law upon the subject of return of premium, as applicable to life insurances, seems perfectly ascertained ; because except in the case of suicide or a publick execution, the question can never arise.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD,

Of Insurance against Fire.

AN insurance of this sort is a contract, by which the insurer, in consideration of the premium, which he receives, undertakes to indemnify the insured, against all losses, which he may sustain in his house, or goods, by means of fire, within the time limited in the policy. To enter upon a detail of the various advantages, which mankind have derived from this species of contract, would be a waste of time; because they are obvious to every understanding. As little does it fall within the compass of my plan, to enumerate the various offices that have been instituted for the purpose of insuring property against fire; or the rules and regulations, by which they are severally governed. Some of them have been instituted by royal charter; others by deed inrolled; and others give security upon land for the payment of losses. The rules, by which these societies are governed, are established by their own managers, and a copy given to every person at the time he insures; so that, by his acquiescence, he submits to their proposals, and is fully apprized of those rules, upon the compliance or non-compliance with which, he will, or will not be entitled to an indemnity.

The construction to be put upon those regulations, has but seldom become the subject of judicial enquiry; two instances only having occurred in our researches upon this occasion. In the proposals of the London Assurance Company, and some of the other offices, there is a clause by which it is provided, that they do not hold themselves liable for any loss or damage by fire, happening

pening by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever. It became a question, what species of insurrection should be deemed a military or usurped power within the meaning of this proviso. It was held by the court of Common Pleas, against the opinion of Mr. Justice Gould, that it could only mean to extend to houses set on fire by means of an invasion from abroad, or of an internal rebellion, when armies are employed to support it.

The case in which this question arose, was an action of covenant against the defendants upon a Policy of Insurance of a malting office of the plaintiff's at Norwich from fire, in which policy there was a proviso that the corporation should not be liable in case the same should be burnt by any invasion by foreign enemies, or any military or usurped power whatsoever, and that the defendants had not kept their covenants, to the plaintiff's damage. The defendants plead first the general issue, that they have not broke their covenants, and thereupon issue is joined. 2dly. They plead, that it was burnt by an usurped power; the plaintiff replies, that it was not burnt by an usurped power, and thereupon issue is also joined. This cause was tried at Norwich assizes; a verdict was given for the plaintiff, and 469*l.* damages, subject to the opinion of the court, upon the following case, viz. That upon Saturday, the 27th of November, a mob arose at Norwich upon account of the high price of provisions, and spoiled and destroyed divers quantities of flour; thereupon the proclamation was read, and the mob dispersed for that time. Afterwards another mob arose, and burnt down the malting office in the policy mentioned. The question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action. This case was twice argued at the bar, and the court took time to deliberate; after which, as the judges differed in opinion, they delivered their opinions seriatim.

Drinkwater
v. the Corporation of the London Assurance.

2 Wilson 363.

Mr. Justice Gould was of opinion, that the malting office being burnt by the mob, who rose to reduce the price of provisions, the same was burnt by an usurped power, within the true intent and meaning of the proviso in the policy: to shew that it was an usurped power for any persons to assemble themselves, to alter the laws, to set a price upon victuals; &c. he cited Popham 122, where it is agreed by the justices that to attempt such a thing by force is felony, if not treason; and therefore judgment ought to be for the defendant.

Mr. Justice Batburst. The words "usurped power," in the proviso, according to the true import thereof, and the meaning of the parties, can only mean an invasion of the kingdom by foreign enemies to give laws and usurp the government thereof, or an internal armed force in rebellion, assuming the power of government by making laws, and punishing, for not obeying those laws. The plea alleges that the malting office was burnt by an usurped power unlawfully exercised, but does not charge that usurped power as a rebellion, that a mob rose at Norwich on account of the price of victuals, and as soon as the proclamation was read, they dispersed; therefore, judgment ought to be for the plaintiff.

Mr. Justice Clive. The words must mean such an usurped power as amounts to high-treason, which is settled by the 25th of Edward Third. The offence of the mob in the present case was a felonious riot, for which the offenders might have suffered; but it cannot be said to be an usurped power; therefore I am of opinion that judgment should be given for the plaintiff.

Lord Chief Justice Wilmot. Upon the best consideration I am able to give this case, I am of opinion, that the burning of the malting office, was not a burning by an usurped power within the meaning of the proviso. Policies of Insurance, like all other contracts, must be construed according gording to the true intention of the parties. Although the counsel on one side said, that policies ought to be construed liberally; on the other side, that they ought to be construed strictly; in a doubtful case I think the turn of the scale ought to be given against the speaker, because he has not fully and clearly explained himself. The imperfection of language to express our ideas is the occasion that words have equivocal meanings; and it is often very uncertain what the parties to a contract in writing mean. When the ideas are simple, words express them clearly; but when they are complex, difficulties often arise; and men differ much about the ideas intended to be conveyed by words. In the present case, what is the true idea conveyed to the mind by the words usurped power? The rule to find it out is to consider the words of the context, and to attend to the popular use of the words, according to Horace. Arbitrium est, et jus, et norma loquendi. My idea of the words, burnt by an usurped power, from the context is, that they mean burnt, or set on fire by occasion of an invasion from abroad, or of an internal rebellion, when armies are employed to support it, when the laws are dormant and silent, and firing of towns is unavoidable; these are the outlines of the picture drawn by the idea, which these words convey to my mind. The time of the incorporation of this society of the London Assurance Company, was soon after a rebellion in this kingdom, and it was not so romantic a thing to guard against fire by rebellion, as it might be now; the time therefore, is an argument with me that this is the meaning of these words. Rebellious mobs may be also meant to be guarded against by the proviso, because this corporation commenced soon after the riot act; and if common mobs had been in their minds, they would have made use of the word mob. The words "usurped power," may have a great variety of meanings according to the subject matter where where they are used, and it would be pedantic to define the words in their various meanings; but in the present case, they cannot mean the power used by a common mob. It has not been said, that if one, or fifty persons had wickedly set this house on fire, that it would be within the meaning of the words usurped power. It has been objected that here was an usurped power to reduce the price of victuals, but this is part of the power of the crown; and therefore it was an usurped power: but the king has no power to reduce the price of victuals. The difference between a rebellious mob, and a common mob is, that the first is high treason; the latter a riot, or a felony. Whether was this a common, or a rebellious mob? The first time the mob rises, the magistrates read the proclamation, and the mob disperse, they hear the law and immediately obey it. The next day another mob rises on the same account, and damages the houses of two bakers; thirty people in fifteen minutes put this army to flight, they were dispersed and heard of no more. Where are the species belli which Lord Hale describes? This mob wants an universality of purpose to destroy, to make it a rebellious mob, or high treason. Hale's P. C. 135. There must be an universality, a purpose to destroy all houses, all inclosures, all bawdy houses, &c. Here they fell upon two bakers and a miller, and the mob chastised these particular persons to abate the price of provisions in a particular place: this does not amount to a rebellious mob. When the laws are executed with spirit, mobs are easily quelled; sometimes a courageous act done by a single person, will quell and disperse a mob. And sometimes the wisdom of an individual will do the same, as is thus beautifully described by Virgil,

*Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est
Seditio, sevitque animis ignobile vulgus, Jamque faces et saxa volant: furor arma ministrat.*

Tum

Tum pietate gravem, ac meritis, si forte virum quem

*Conspexere, silent, arrestisque auribus adstant:
Ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet.*

But amongst armies, great guns and bombs, the laws are silenced, and the wisdom, or courage of an individual will signify nothing. Upon the whole, I am of opinion, that there must be judgment for the plaintiff; and accordingly the postea was ordered to be delivered to the plaintiff, by three judges against one.

The Sun Fire Office has used words of a larger and more extensive import than those, which were the subject of discussion in the last case; for the proprietors of that company declare; that they will not pay any loss or damage by fire, happening by any invasion, foreign enemy, civil commotion, or any military or usurped power whatever. A case has unfortunately arisen, in which the meaning of these words, civil commotion, has been the subject of judicial enquiry.

An action was brought on a policy of insurance to recover from the Sun Fire Office a satisfaction for damage done to the plaintiff's houses and goods by the rioters, who, it is very well known, and history will inform posterity, in June 1780, to the terror and dismay of the inhabitants of London, traversed that city for several days, burning and destroying Roman Catholic chapels, publick prisons, and the houses of various individuals; the ostensible purpose of their assembling being to procure the repeal of a wise and humane law (which had passed for some indulgences to Roman Catholics) and who were at last only dispersed by military force. As the circumstances of these riots were very recent, they were not minutely gone into at the trial. It was, however, sufficiently proved, that the plaintiff, on account of his religion, (being a Catholic) had been, amongst others, selected Langdale v.

Mason and Others.
Sittings at Guildhall.
Mich. Vac.
1780.

as an object of the rage of the times, and that his houses and effects were set on fire. The office defended this action, considering that they were protected by the article just recited, namely, "That they would not answer for any loss, occasioned by any invasion, foreign enemy, civil commotion, or any military or usurped power whatever." This point was argued much at length by the counsel on both sides.

Lord Mansfield.—Gentlemen of the jury, this is an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants upon the policy of insurance mentioned in the pleadings for the value of property, which has been consumed by fire. Most undoubtedly every man's leaning must be to the side of the plaintiff, in order to divide the loss in so great a calamity. But that leaning must be governed by rules of law and justice: and the only question, that arises for your determination and that of the court, is singly upon the construction of two words in the policy. It will be necessary, in order to investigate this matter, to go into the history, which has been opened and explained to you, of other insurance policies. In the year 1720, the London Assurance Company put into their policies all the words here used, except civil commotion. Whatever fire happens by a foreign enemy is clearly provided against: when they burn houses, or set fire to a town, that is also provided for. What is meant by military or usurped power? They are ambiguous; and they seem to have been the subject of a question and determination. They must mean rebellion, where the fire is made by authority: as in the year 1745, the rebels came to Derby, and if they had ordered any part of the town, or a single house to be set on fire, that would have been by authority of a rebellion. That is the only distinction in the case—it must be by rebellion got to such a head, as to be under authority. In the year 1726, some years after

Vide supra.

after the London Assurance Company had done it, the Sun Fire Office put in the exception; and in 1727, they put in other words: they do not keep to the form of the London Assurance: they do not say, by invasion from foreign enemies merely: they clearly provide against rebellion, determined rebellion, with generals, who could give orders. Though this be so guarded, the Sun Fire Office did not think it answered their purpose; and therefore they took in the words civil commotion. Not only using those words, applicable to guard against a foreign enemy, against a rebellion, where there are officers and leaders, that can give authority and power; but they add other words as general and untechnical as can possibly be used: civil commotion; not civil commotion, that amounts to high treason. They avoid saying civil commotions, that amount to felony: they avoid saying civil commotions that amount to misdemeanors: but they use a general expression “if the mischief happens from a civil commotion,” taking the largest and most general sense of the words that the language will allow: they do not even say a riot. It may be a question in point of law, whether an assembly or multitude be a riot. In that case, they do not say committing a felony, but speak of fire occasioned by civil commotion. The single question is, whether this has been a civil commotion. If there be a case, to which these words can be applicable, it is to a case of this sort. I cannot see any of the other words, to which it can be applied. Usurped power takes in rebellion, acting by usurped powers amongst themselves. From a foreign enemy the office is secured. But what is a civil commotion? It is something else. The present was an insurrection of the people resisting all law, setting the protection of the government at nought, taking from every man, who was the object of their resentment, that protection, tion, as appears from the evidence given by the witnesses upon the facts, and which you all know as well as if no witnesses had been produced. What was the object and end of this violent insurrection? It took place in many parts of the town at the same time, and the very same night; the mob were in Broad-street, St. Catharine's in Colman-street, at Blackfriar's Bridge, and at the plaintiff's. What is the object? General destruction, general confusion. It certainly was meant to aim at the very vitals of the constitution. It was not a private matter, under the colour of popery only, to destroy all Papists under a pretence or a cry of No popery. But the general object was destruction and confusion. The Fleet Prison was burnt down: Newgate was burnt down the night before. The King's Bench Prison is burnt, and all the prisoners set at liberty. The new Bridewell is burnt; the Bank attacked: consider the consequences, if they had succeeded in destroying the Bank of England. The Excise and Pay Offices in Broad-street were threatened. Military resistance, and an extraordinary stretch were made and justified by necessity. There was a great deal of firing, many men were killed; and the houses of a vast number of Papists were burnt and destroyed. What is this but a civil commotion? No definition has been attempted to be given of what it is. It is said, that this is a civil commotion, distinct from usurped power and rebellion. It is admitted, that this kind of insurrection may amount to high treason: and, to be sure, it may. But the office do not put their expectation upon trying, whether they were guilty of high treason or not. There is no manner of doubt, that this was an insurrection for a grand purpose, to take from a set of men the protection of the law. That is levying war against the king: there is not any doubt of it. It is not put upon that, but on the ground of a civil commotion.

commotion. It is not an occasional riot, that would be another question. I do not give any opinion what that might be. You will give your opinions, whether the facts of this case bring it within the idea of a civil commotion. I think a civil commotion is this; an insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to a rebellion, where there is an usurped power. If you think it was such an insurrection of the people for the purposes of general mischief, though not amounting to a rebellion, but within the exception of the policy, you will find for the defendants. If not, you will find for the plaintiff. The jury, agreeably to the Chief Justice's direction, found for the defendants.

When a fire happens, and the party sustains a loss in consequence of it, he is bound by the printed proposals of most of the societies, to give immediate notice thereof to the office in which he is insured; and as soon as possible afterwards, or within a limited time according to the regulations of some, to deliver in as particular an account of his loss, or damage, as the nature of the case will admit; and make proof of the same by his oath or affirmation, by books of accounts, or such other vouchers as shall be required, or as shall be in existence. It is also necessary that the insured should procure a certificate under the hands of the minister and churchwardens, together with some other reputable inhabitants of the parish, not concerned in such loss, importing, that they are well acquainted with the character and circumstances of the sufferer or sufferers; and do know, or verily believe, that he, she, or they, have really, and by misfortune, sustained by such fire the loss and damage therein mentioned. When any loss is settled and adjusted, the sufferers are to receive immediate satisfaction, without any deduction.

See the printed proposals of the different Fire Offices.

In the Lex Mercatoria it is said, that policies on houses and lives admit of no average. That this Beawes 4th edit, p. 294.

is

Vide p. 493.

Royal Exchange Assurance Company.
Sun Fire Office, &c.

is true of the latter, cannot be denied, as we have already shewn in the preceding chapter; because the payment of the whole sum depends upon one single event, which must wholly happen, or not at all. But that it cannot be true of insurances against fire, either of houses or goods is equally clear; for houses may be partially damaged, and goods may be partially destroyed. In which case, as insurance is a contract of indemnity, the end of the contract is answered by putting the party in the same situation in which he was before the accident happened. But if he were to recover the whole sum insured, he would be in a better situation, which the law will not allow. Indeed, from the above quotation from the printed proposals it is evident, that the offices consider themselves liable for partial losses. Nay, some of them, if not all, expressly undertake to allow all reasonable charges, attending the removal of goods, in cases of fire, and to pay the sufferer's loss, whether the goods are destroyed, lost, or damaged by such removal.

These policies of insurance are not, in their nature, assignable, for they are only contracts to make good the loss, which the contracting party himself shall sustain; nor can the interest in them be transferred from one person to another without the consent of the office. There is a case in which, by the proposals, these policies are allowed to be transferred, and that is, when any person dies, the policy and interest therein shall continue to the heir, executor, or administrator, respectively, to whom the property insured shall belong; provided, before any new payment be made, such heir, executor, or administrator, do procure his or her right, to be indorsed on the policy at the said office, or the premium be paid in the name of the said heir, executor, or administrator. But in all other cases there can be no assignment; and the party claiming an indemnity must have an interest in the thing insured at the

the time of the loss. These points were decided in two causes, one before Lord Chancellor King, and the other before Lord Hardwicke.

On the 28th of July 1721, one Richard Ireland took out from the Sun Fire Office, a policy of insurance, whereby it was witnessed, that whereas the said Ireland had agreed to pay, or cause to be paid to the said office, the sum of five shillings within fifteen days after every quarter day, for the insurance of his house, being the Angel Inn at Gravesend, with his goods and merchandize as therein after expressed only, and not elsewhere, viz. the dwelling house not exceeding 400 l. and for the goods in the same only, not exceeding 500 l.; and for the stable only, not exceeding 100 l. all then occupied by James Peck, from loss and damage by fire: and so long as the said Richard Ireland should duly pay or cause to be paid five shillings a quarter, as therein mentioned, the said Society did bind themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay and satisfy the said Ireland, his executors, administrators and assigns, within fifteen days after every quarter day, in which he should suffer by fire, his loss not exceeding 1000 l. according to the exact tenor of their printed proposals. The policy was subscribed the 28th of July 1721, by three of the trustees of the society. Some considerable time afterwards, Richard Ireland died, having made his will, and Anthony his son sole executor; who brought the policy to the office, and had an indorsement made thereon, that the same then belonged to him: and afterwards, namely, at or about Christmas 1726, he, the said Anthony, paid the office a premium of twenty shillings for one year's insurance, from Christmas 1726, to Christmas 1727, as by an article in the proposals, he was at liberty to do. On the 24th of August 1727, a fire happened at Gravesend, which, among others, destroyed the house mentioned in the policy; and some time afterwards the appellants applied

Lynch and Another v.
Dalzell and Others.
3 Brown's
Parl. Cases,
497.

to the office, and alledged, that they had purchased the house and goods of Anthony Ireland; that the same were their property at the time of the fire, and that they had an assignment of the policy made to them, at the same time, that the house and goods were assigned; and they produced an affidavit made by the appellant, Roger Lynch, in which he swore, that his loss and damage by burning the said house, amounted, at a moderate computation, to 500*l.* and upwards; and upon this affidavit, was indorsed a certificate of the minister, churchwardens, and other inhabitants of Gravesend, that they verily believed, according to the best of their information, the appellants had sustained a loss of 500*l.* and upwards. But neither in the affidavit or certificate, was any mention made of any loss being sustained by the appellants by the burning of any goods in the said house; nor was any affidavit made by Anthony Ireland, in whom the property of the policy was, that he had suffered any loss. The appellants, however, insisted that the office should pay them 1000*l.* for their loss sustained by the burning of the house and goods: and they accordingly filed a bill in Chancery, setting forth, that Anthony Ireland agreed to sell and assign to the appellants the house, stables and goods, and also, at the same time agreed to assign the policy; and that by indenture of the 24th of June 1727, for 250*l.* Ireland did assign to the appellants a lease he had of the house and stables for the residue of a term of 70 years, which commenced at Midsummer, 16 Car. 2.; but the goods, for which the appellants, as they alledged, were to pay 500*l.* being intended for one Thomas Church, who was to hold the inn under the appellants, Ireland, by deed poll of the same date, sold the same to Church for his own use. The bill also stated, that by another writing of equal date, Ireland assigned the policy, and all money and benefit thereof to the appellants. That although the bill bill of sale of the household goods was made to Cchurch; yet, as the appellants paid the purchase money for the same, Cchurch assigned his bill of sale to them, for securing the money they had paid for the goods; and afterwards, by another writing, released to the appellants his benefit and interest in the policy. The bill prayed satisfaction.

The respondents put in their answer, in which they set forth the nature and method of the insurances made by the office, and admitted the policy in question, and the appellants application for the 1000*l.* loss: but said, that the affidavit produced, was not agreeable to the proposals; and that they had been informed and believed, that no assignment of the policy was made to the appellants, nor any assignment of goods made to them by Cchurch, till after the fire. They insisted, that the policies, issued by the office, were not, in their nature, assignable, the same being only contracts to make good the loss, which the contracting party himself should sustain: and the policy in question was first made to Richard Ireland, to pay his loss, and was afterwards declared by indorsement to belong to Anthony Ireland; and that no other person was entitled to the benefit of it. The cause proceeded to issue, and witnesses were examined on both sides; and upon the appellants own evidence it appeared, that the first discourse between the appellants and Mr. Ireland about the policy, was after the execution of the assignment of the house; and that the agreement (if there was any) about the policy was not, at the time when the appellants agreed to purchase Ireland's term in the house. It appeared further, that the assignment of the policy, though bearing date before, was not made and executed till some time after the fire; so that the agreement for assigning the policy was a voluntary concession of Ireland without any consideration, and independent of the bargain for the house, and never made till after

Ireland's interest in the policy, as to the house, was determined, by his selling his interest in the thing insured, and not carried into execution till the thing was lost. As to the appellants property in the goods, they proved an assignment from Church to them, as a security for 300 l. but omitted, in their interrogatories, the material question, when this assignment was made: though the respondents by their answer, put the time plainly in issue, by insisting, that it was after the fire; and it did not appear that the appellants ever had any property in the goods. The respondents on their part proved, that the office did not insure any persons longer than they continued their property in the thing insured: and that persons dealing with them might not be mistaken, such notice was usually given.

Lord Chancellor King.—These policies are not insurances of the specifick things mentioned to be insured; nor do such insurances attach on the realty, or in any manner go with the same as incident thereto, by any conveyance or assignment; but they are only special agreements with the persons insuring, against such loss or damage as they may sustain. The party insuring must have a property at the time of the loss, or he can sustain no loss; and consequently can be entitled to no satisfaction. There was no contract ever made between the office and the appellants for any insurance on the premises in question. Not only the express words, but the end and design of the contract with Ireland do, in case of any loss, limit and restrain the satisfaction to such loss as should be sustained by Richard Ireland only; and the indorsement on the policy declared that right to his executor Anthony Ireland only. These policies are not, in their nature, assignable; nor is the interest in them ever intended to be transferable from one to another, without the express consent of the office. The transactions in the present case, by changing the property backwards and forwards, and rendering it uncertain whose the true property is, raise a suspicion, and fully justify the caution of the office, in preventing the assignment without consent of the managers, which method is pursued by all the insurance offices. Besides, the appellant's claim is at best founded only upon an assignment never agreed for till the person insured had determined his interest in the policy, by parting with his whole property, and never executed till the loss had actually happened. His lordship therefore dismissed the bill.
and

Upon this decree there was an appeal to the House of Lords; and after hearing counsel on both sides, it was ORDERED AND ADJUDGED, that the same should be dismissed and the decree therein complained of affirmed.

A few years afterwards this case was cited with approbation by Lord Hardwicke, and relied upon by him as the ground of his opinion.

Anne Strode, having six years and a half to come in a lease of a house from the plaintiffs, on the 27th of April 1734, became a proprietor of the Hand-in-hand Office, by insuring the sum of 400*l.* on the house, for seven years, and on paying twelve shillings down, and three pounds some time after, the Company agreed, “to raise and “ pay, out of the effects of the contribution stock,
“ the said sum of 400*l.* to her, and her executors, administrators, and assigns, so often as
“ the house should be burnt down within the said “ term, unless the directors should build the said “ house, and put it in as good plight as before “ the fire; and on the back of the policy it was “ indorsed, that if this policy should be assigned,
“ the assignment must be entered within twenty-
“ one days after the making thereof.” Mrs. Strode's lease expired at Midsummer 1740, the house was not burnt down till the January after 1740, and she made an assignment of the policy to the plaintiffs the 23d of February after 1740. The question is, whether the plaintiffs, the assignees

The Sadler's Company v.
Badcock and Others.
2 Atkyn's,
554.

of Mrs. Strode, are entitled to the 400*l.* or to have the house built again; or whether the house being burnt down after Mrs. Strode's property ceased in it, the Company are obliged to make good the loss to her assignee of the policy. The Company made an order, subsequent in time to Mrs. Strode's policy in 1738, "That, whereas policies
 " expire upon the property of the insured's ceas" ing, if there is no application of the insured to " assign, or to have the loss made up, then the " person having the property may insure the said
 " house in the said office, notwithstanding the " term for which the house was originally insured
 " is expired." There was evidence read for the plaintiffs to shew that they tendered the assignment to the defendants, to enter in their books, but they refused to accept of it.

Lord Chancellor Hardwicke. — During the progress of this cause, while the defendants seemed to depend chiefly upon the subsequent order, I was of opinion against them. But, upon hearing what was further offered, I think the plaintiffs are not entitled to be relieved. There may be three questions made in this cause. First, whether this accident, which has happened, is such a loss, as obliges the defendants to make satisfaction to the plaintiffs. Secondly, Whether, upon the terms of the original policy, the office is obliged to do it. Thirdly, which is rather consequential of the former, whether the plaintiffs are properly assignees of Mrs. Strode under this policy. If this matter rested singly upon the policy itself, I should not think it such a loss, as would oblige the defendants to make satisfaction. Under this policy, the state of the case is, Mrs. Strode was only a lessee, her time expired at Michaelsummer 1740, the house was burnt down in January after, within the seven years; the plaintiffs, the Sadlers Company, were ground landlords, and entitled to the reversion of the term: upon the 23d of February, seven months after the expiration ration of the term, and one month after the fire, the assignment was made, and in consideration of five shillings only; so that it must be taken as a voluntary assignment, as it stands before me. It has been insisted, on the part of the defendants, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover, as standing in the place of Mrs. Strode, because she had no loss or damage, her interest ceasing before the fire happened. And this introduces the second and third questions. I am of opinion, it is necessary the party insured should have an interest or property at the time of insuring, and at the time the fire happens. It has been said for the plaintiffs, that it is in nature of a wager laid by the insurance company, and that it does not signify to whom they pay, if lost. Now these insurances from fire have been introduced in later times, and therefore differ from insurance of ships, because there interest or no interest is almost constantly inserted, and if not inserted (a), you cannot recover, unless you prove a property. By the first clause in the deed of contribution in 1696, the year this society, called the Hand in Hand Office, incorporated themselves, the society are to make satisfaction in case of any loss by fire. To whom, or for what loss, are they to make satisfaction? Why, to the person insured, and for the loss he may have sustained; for it cannot properly be called insuring the thing, for there is no possibility of doing it, and therefore must mean insuring the person from damage. By the terms of the policy, the defendants might begin to build and repair within six days after the fire happens. It has been truly said, this gives the society an option to pay or rebuild, and shews most manifestly they meant to insure upon the property of the insured,

(a) This case was decided in the year 1743, previous to the passing of the statute of 19 Geo. 2. ch. 37.

because nobody else can give them leave to lay even a brick; for another person might fancy a house of a different kind. Thus it stands upon the original agreement. The next question will be, whether the subsequent order, made by the defendants in 1738, has made any alteration. I am of opinion it has not, for it was made only to explain a particular case in the policy: for it might have been a question, whether Mrs. Strode could have come before the expiration of the term, to examine the books of the office, and therefore this order was made to give her such a power. It has been strongly objected, that the society could not make such an order. I am very tender of saying, whether they can or not. Because, on one hand, it might be hard to say, that as a society they cannot make any order for the good of the society: on the other hand, it would be a dangerous thing to give them a power to make an alteration, that may materially vary the interest of the insured. The assignment is not at all within the terms of this order, because it is plain, it meant an assignment before the loss happened. Now, with regard to the loss happening before the assignment made, Mrs. Strode was entitled to nothing but what was to be paid back upon the deposit. It is plain she thought so, for if she had imagined she had been entitled to 400*l*. would any friend have advised her to make a present of it to the plaintiff? The case of Lynch v. Dalzell, in the House of Lords, shews how strict this court and that house are, in the construction of policies, to avoid frauds. The bill here must be dismissed.

Vide supra.

In the body of the policy, the company acknowledge the receipt of the premium at the time of making the insurance; and by the printed proposals of the different societies, it is expressly stipulated, that no insurance shall take place, till the premium be actually paid by the insured, his, her, or their agent or agents. This premium or consideration money is in all the offices at the rate of two shillings per cent. for any sum not exceeding 1000 l. and two shillings and six-pence from 1000 l. upwards. But this must be understood to mean, the premium upon common insurances only: for upon hazardous trades, and wooden buildings, &c. the premium is proportioned to the risk. Besides this, by a late act of parliament a duty of one shilling and six-pence per annum is laid upon every hundred pounds of property insured from fire. This duty, however, is not to extend to insurances upon publick hospitals.
 ! premium

22 Geo. 3.
ch. 48. s. 1.
Sect. 2.

We have formerly seen, that whenever the risk to be run was entire, there never was a return of premium, though the contract should cease and determine the next day after its commencement. This rule applies to insurances against fire, which generally are made for one entire and connected portion of time, which cannot be severed: and therefore if the property insured should be destroyed by fire, arising from the act of a foreign enemy, the very day after the commencement of the policy, though the underwriter would be discharged; yet there can be no apportionment or return of premium.

Ante ch. 19.

In the first chapter of this work, we enumerated the various stamps necessary in order to render a policy upon fire effectual; to enforce which regulation, it has been declared by positive statute, "That if any person shall sign, seal, execute, or subscribe any policy of insurance from fire, not being duly stamped, he shall forfeit 10 l. and in addition to the stamp duties imposed by the various acts of parliament, shall pay to his majesty the sum of 5 l. before any such policy of insurance shall be available in law or equity, or be given or received in evidence in any court of justice."

Vide ante
p. 32.

17 Geo. 3.
ch. 50. s. 24.

As

Vide ante
ch. 9.

As the purest equity and good faith are essentially requisite, as has been already shewn, to render the contract effectual when it relates to marine insurances; so it need hardly be observed, that it is no less essential to the validity of the policy against fire: because in the latter, as well as in the former, the insurer, from the nature of the thing, is obliged, in a great measure, to rely upon the integrity and honesty of the insured, as to the representation of the value and quantity of the property, which is the object of the insurance.

A P P E N D I X, No. I.

Policy of Insurance on Ship or Goods.

In the Name of G O D, Amen.

as well in own Name, as for and in the Name and Names of all and every other Person or Persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall appertain, in Part or in All doth make Assurance, and cause and them, and every of them to be insured, lost or not lost, at and from

Upon any Kind of Goods and Merchandizes, and also upon the Body, Tackle, Apparel, Ordnance, Munition, Artillery, Boat, and other Furniture, of and in the good Ship or Vessel called the whereof is Master, under God, for this present Voyage, or whosoever else shall go for Master in the said Ship, or by whatsoever other Name or Names the same Ship, or the Master thereof, is or shall be named or called; beginning the Adventure upon the said Goods and Merchandizes from the loading thereof aboard the said Ship, upon the said Ship, &c.

and so shall continue and endure, during her Abode there, upon the said Ship, &c. And farther, until the said Ship, with all her Ordnance, Tackle, Apparel, &c. and Goods and Merchandizes whatsoever shall be arrived at upon the said Ship, &c. until she hath moored at anchor, Twenty-four Hours in good Safety; and upon the Goods and Merchandizes, until the same be there discharged and safely landed. And it shall be lawful for the said Ship, &c. in this Voyage, to proceed and sail to and touch and stay at any Ports and Places whatsoever without Prejudice to this Insurance, the said Ship, &c. Goods and Merchandizes, &c.

&c. for so much as concerns the Assureds, by Agreements between the Assureds and Assurers in this Policy are and shall be valued at touching the Adventures and Perils which we the Assurers are contented to bear, and do take upon us in this Voyage, they are of the Seas, Men of War, Fire, Enemies, Pirates, Rovers, Thieves, Jettisons, Letters of Mart and Counter-mart, Surprizals, Takings at Sea, Arrests, Restraints and Detainments of all Kings, Princes and People, of what Nation, Condition, or Quality soever; Barratry of the Master and Mariners, and of all other Perils, Losses and Misfortunes, that have or shall come to the Hurt, Detriment or Damage of the said Goods and Merchandizes and Ship, &c. or any Part thereof. And in case of any Loss or Misfortune, it shall be lawful to the Assureds, their Factors, Servants and Assigns, to sue, labour and travel for, in and about the Defence, Safeguard and Recovery of the said Goods and Merchandize and Ship, &c. or any Part thereof, without Prejudice to this Insurance; that this Writing or Policy of Assurance shall be of as much Force and Effect as the surest Writing or Policy of Assurance heretofore made in Lombard-street, or in the Royal Exchange, or elsewhere in London. And so we the Assurers are contented, and do hereby promise and bind ourselves, each one for his own Part, our Heirs, Executors, and Goods, to the Assureds, their Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, for the true Performance of the Premises, confessing ourselves paid the Consideration due unto us for this Assurance by the Assured at and after the Rate of per Cent.

In Witness whereof we the Assurers have subscribed our Names and Sums assured in London.

N. B. Corn, Fish, Salt, Fruit, Flour, and Seed, are warranted free from Average, unless general, or the Ship be stranded; Sugar, Tobacco, Flax, Hemp, Hides, and Skins, are warranted free from Average, under Five Pounds per Cent. And all other Goods, also the Ship and Freight are warranted free from Average under Three per Cent. unless General, or the Ship be stranded.

APPENDIX No. II.

Form of a Respondentia Bond.

KNOW all Men by these Presents, That held and firmly bound to in the Sum, or Penalty of of good and lawful Money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said or to certain Attorney, Executors, Administrators, or Assigns; to which Payment, well and truly to be made Heirs, Executors, and Administrators, firmly by these Presents, sealed with Seal. Dated this

Day of in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, and in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven Hundred and

The Condition of the above-written Obligation is such that whereas the above-named hath, on the Day of the Date above-written, lent unto the above bound the Sum of

upon the Merchandizes and Effects, to that Value lad-ed, or to be laden on board the good Ship or Vessel, called the of the Burthen of Tons, or thereabouts, now in the River Thames, whereof is Commander. If the said Ship or Vessel do, and shall, with all convenient Speed, proceed and sail from, and out of the said River of Thames, on a Voyage to any Ports or Places in the East Indies, China, Persia, or elsewhere beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and from thence, do, and shall sail, and return unto the said River of Thames, at, or before the End and Expiration of Thirty-six Calendar Months, to be accounted from the Day of the Date above written, and that without Deviation (the Dangers and Casualties of the Seas excepted). And if the above-bound

Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, do, and shall, within Days next after the said Ship, or Vessel, shall

shall be arrived in the said River of Thames, from the said Voyage, or at the End and Expiration of the said Thirty-six Calendar Months, to be accounted as aforesaid (which of the said Times shall first and next happen) well, and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the above-named Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, the Sum of _____ of lawful Money of Great Britain, together with _____ of like Money, by the Calendar Month, and so proportionably for a greater or lesser Time than a Calendar Month, for all such Time, and so many Calendar Months, as shall be elapsed, and run out of the said Thirty-six Calendar Months, over and above twenty Calendar Months, to be accounted from the Day of the Date above-written; or if, in the said Voyage, and within the said Thirty-six Calendar Months, to be accounted as aforesaid, an utter Loss of the said Ship, or Vessel, by Fire, Enemies, Men of War, or any other Casualties shall unavoidably happen; and the above bound Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, do, and shall, within six months next after the Loss, pay and satisfy to the said Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, a just and proportionable Average on all Goods and Effects which the said _____ carried from England on board the said Ship or Vessel, and on all other the Goods and Effects of the said _____ which shall acquire during the said Voyage, and which shall not be unavoidably lost: then the above-written Obligation to be void, and of no Effect; or else to stand in full force and Virtue.

Sealed and delivered (being } first duly stampd) in the } Presence of

J. S.

A P P E N D I X, No. III.

Form of a Policy of Insurance upon a Life.

In the Name of G O D, Amen,
do make Assurance,
and cause to be assured upon natural Life aged for and during the Term and Space of Calendar Months, to commence this Day of in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and fully to be complete and ended. And it is declared, that this Assurance is made to and for the Use, Benefit, and Security of the said Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, in case of the Death of the said within the Time aforesaid, which the above Governor and Company do allow to be good and sufficient Ground and Inducement for the making this Assurance, and do agree that the Life of the said is and shall be rated and valued at the Sum assured : The said Governor and Company therefore, for and in Consideration of per Cent. to them paid, do assure, assume, and promise, that the said shall, by the Permission of Almighty God, live, and continue in this natural Life, for and during the said Term and Space of Calendar Months, to commence as aforesaid ; or in Default thereof, that is to say, in case the said shall in or during the said Time, and before the full End and Expiration thereof, happen to die, or decease out of this World by any Way or Means whatsoever, that then the abovesaid Governor and Company will well and truly satisfy, content, and pay unto the said Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, the Sum or Sums of Money by them assured, and here under-written, hereby promising and binding themselves and their Successors to the assured, Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, for the true Performance of the Premises, confessing themselves paid the Consideration due unto them for this Assurance by the assured. Provided always, and it is hereby declared to be the true Intent and Meaning of this Assurance,

Assurance, and this Policy is accepted by the said upon Condition that the same shall be utterly void and of no Effect, in case the said shall exceed the Age of or shall voluntarily go to Sea, or into the Wars, by Sea or land, without Licence in Writing first had or obtained for so doing, any Thing in these Presents to the contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding. In witness whereof the said Governor and Company have caused their common Seal to be hereunto affixed, and the Sum or Sums by them assured to be here under-written, at their Office in London, this Day of in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign
 Lord by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and The said Governor and Company are content with this Assurance for £.

A P P E N D I X, No. IV.

Form of a Policy of Insurance against Fire.

BY the Corporation of the Royal Exchange Assurance of Houses and Goods from Fire

This present Instrument or Policy of Assurance witnesseth, That whereas agreed to pay into the Treasury of the Corporation of the Royal Exchange Assurance, at their Office on the Royal Exchange, London, for the Assurance of from Loss or Damage by Fire. Now know all Men by these Presents, That the capital Stock, Estate, and Securities of the said Corporation shall be subject and liable to pay, make good, and satisfy unto the said Assured Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, any Loss or Damage which shall or may happen by Fire to the said Goods aforesaid (except such Goods as Hemp, Flax, Tallow, Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, Glass,

Glass, China, and Earthen Wares, Writings, Books of Accounts, Notes, Bills, Bonds, Tallies, ready Money, Jewels, Plate, Pictures, Gun-powder, Hay, Straw, and Corn unthreshed, within the Space of twelve Calendar Months, from the Day of the Date of this Instrument or Policy of Assurance, not exceeding the Sum of and shall so continue, remain, and be subject and liable, as aforesaid, from Year to Year, to be computed from the Day of in every Year, for so long Time as the said Assured shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid the Sum of

into the Treasury of the said Corporation, on or before the Day of which shall be in each succeeding Year, and the said Corporation shall agree thereto by accepting and receiving the same, which said Loss or Damage shall be paid in Money immediately after the same shall be settled and adjusted, or otherwise, if the said Loss or Damage shall not be adjusted, settled, and paid within sixty Days after Notice thereof shall be given to the said Corporation by the said Assured, that then the said Corporation, their Officers, Workmen, or Assigns, shall, at the Charge of the said Corporation, at the End and Expiration of the said sixty Days, provide and supply the said Assured with the like Quantity of Goods of the same Sort and Kind, and of equal Value and Goodness with those burnt or damaged by Fire. Provided always nevertheless, and it is hereby declared to be the true Intent and Meaning of this Deed or Policy, that the said Stock, Estate, and Securities of the said Corporation shall not be subject or liable to pay, or make good to the Assured any Loss or Damage by Fire, which shall happen by any Invasion, Foreign Enemy, or any Military or usurped Power whatsoever. Provided also, That this Deed or Policy shall not take place or be binding to the said Corporation until the Premium for one Year is paid, or in case the said Assured shall have already made, or shall hereafter make any other Assurance upon the Goods aforesaid, unless the same shall be allowed of and specified upon the Back of this Policy: Or if the said at the Time when any such Fire shall happen, shall be in the Possession of, or let to any Person who shall use or exercise therein the Trade of a Sugar-baker, Apothecary, cary, Chymist, Colour-man; Distiller, Bread or Biscuit-baker, Ship or Tallow-chandler, Stable-keeper, Inn-holder, or Malster, or shall be made use of for the stowing or keeping of Hemp, Flax, Tallow, Pitch, Tar, or Turpentine, but that in all or any of the said Cases these Presents, and every Clause, Article and Thing herein contained shall cease, determine, and be utterly void and of none Effect, or otherwise shall remain in full Force and Virtue. In Witness whereof the said Corporation have caused their common Seal to be hereunto affixed, the Day of in the

affixed, the Day of in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign
Lord by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and eighty

N. B. This Policy to be of no Force, if assigned, unless such Assignment be allowed by an Entry thereof in the Books of the Company.

TABLE

T A B L E

O F

The Principal Matters.

Abandonment.

1. BEFORE a person insured can demand from the underwriter a recompense for a total loss, he must abandon to him whatever claims he may have to the property insured. Page 92.

161

2. The time, within which such an abandonment must be made, is not fixed in England by any positive regulation. 92. 193

3. Abandonment is as ancient as the contract of insurance itself.

161

4. When an abandonment is made, it must be total, and not partial.

162

5. The insured may in all cases chuse not to abandon: but he cannot at his pleasure abandon, and thereby turn a partial into a total loss. ibid.

6. The insured may abandon to the underwriter, and call upon him for a total loss, if the damage exceed half the value; if the voyage be absolutely lost or not worth pursuing; if further expence be necessary; or if the insurer will not engage at all events to bear that expence, tho' it should exceed the value, or fail of success. 164. 171. 180

7. But he cannot abandon, unless at some period or other of the voyage, there has been a total loss: and if neither the thing insured, nor the voyage be lost, and the damage does not amount to a moiety of the value he shall not be allowed to abandon. P. 165. 187

8. A ship was taken by a Spanish privateer, retaken by an English privateer and carried into Boston in New England, where, as no person appeared to give security for the salvage, she was sold; the recaptors had their moiety, and the overplus remaining in the hands of the officers of the Court of Admiralty, the owners were entitled to abandon and to recover for a total loss. 165 to 167

9. A ship was taken by the French, remained with them eight days, and was then retaken: the master, mates, and sailors, except a landman and an apprentice, had been taken out and carried to France. Before the capture, the ship had been separated from her convoy, and was so far disabled by storm, as to be incapable of proceeding in her voyage without going into port to refit. Part of the cargo was thrown overboard in the storm, and the rest spoiled while the ship lay at Milford Ha- ven.

M m 2

Table of the Principal Matters.

ven. In actions upon two policies, one on the ship, and the other on the cargo, it was held that this was a total loss, so as to entitle the owner to abandon.

Page 167 to 172

10. A ship, bound from Mountserrat to London, was captured, and the captain, crew, rigging, and part of the cargo, which was sugar, were taken away. She was retaken and carried into New York, where the captain also arrived. Upon taking possession he found, that part of the cargo, that was left, had been washed overboard; that 57 hogsheads of what remained were damaged, and that the ship was in such a state that she could not be repaired, without unloading her entirely. The owners had no storehouses at New York; nor were any sailors to be had. The salvage came to forty hogsheads of sugar; and if the ship had been repaired, it would have exceeded the freight by 100%. There was an embargo laid on all ships till December, and this ship was to have arrived in London in July preceding. The captain, upon the advice of his friends, sold the cargo, and was paid for it: he agreed also to sell the ship; but the person who contracted for it ran away, upon which the captain left her in a creek, and came to England. The owners of the ship had a right to abandon to the insurers on the ship and freight. 172 to 176

11. The right to abandon must depend upon the nature of the case at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the offer to abandon: and therefore if at the time advice is received of the loss, it appears that the peril is over and the thing in safety, the in-insured has no right to abandon.

Page 165. 178

12. Thus in a case where there was a capture and recapture, and it was stated that at the time of the offer to abandon, the ship was safe in port, and had sustained no damage, the court held that the insured had no right to abandon.

178 to 186

13. But if the underwriter pay for a total loss, and it afterwards turn out to be but partial, the insured shall not be obliged to refund; but the insurer shall stand in his place for the benefit of salvage.

186

14. A ship was insured from Wyburg to Lynn, at which place she arrived: the jury found that the ship was not worth repairing; but the damage sustained in the voyage insured did not exceed 48% per cent. By the court, the jury have precluded us from saying this is a total loss; and where neither the thing insured nor the voyage is lost, the insured cannot abandon. 187 to 189

Action.

1. An action on the case lies against an agent for not having insured, agreeably to the orders of his principal. 347 note (a)

2. The only difference between this action, and that on the policy against the underwriters, consists in form: for the plaintiff is entitled in this action, to recover the precise sum he ordered to be insured; and the defendant has every benefit of which the underwriter could have taken advantage, such as fraud, deviation, non-compliance with warranty, &c. 347 note (a)

3. Aa

Table of the Principal Matters.

3. An action of indebitatus assumpsit, for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, is the proper form of action, in order to recover the premium P. 419. 455
4. In order to recover upon a policy against either of the insurance companies, the action must be debt or covenant. 453
5. When money has been paid by mistake to the insured, it may be recovered back in an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. 454
6. In order to recover against a private underwriter upon the policy, the form of action is a special indebitatus assumpsit, founded upon the express contract. 455
7. The action may be brought in the name of the broker effecting the policy. 460
8. Within 15 days after action brought, plaintiff, after request in writing, must declare the amount of all insurances on the same ship. 461

See title Declaration.

Adjustment.

1. When the quantity of damage sustained in the course of the voyage is known, and the amount, which each insurer is to pay, is settled, it is usual for the underwriter to endorse on the policy, "adjusted this loss at so much per cent." This is an adjustment. 132
2. After an adjustment has been signed by the underwriter, if he refuse to pay, the owner has no occasion to go into the proof of his loss, or any of the circumstances. It is to be considered as a note of hand. 132, 133
3. After judgment by default upon a valued policy, the plaintiff's

- title to recover is confessed, and the amount of the damage is fixed by the policy. Page 134
4. If a loss be total at the time of the adjustment, and the insurer pay for a total loss, the insured is not obliged to refund, if it should afterwards turn out to be but partial; but the insurer will stand in the place of the insured. ibid
5. A box of bullion was wholly lost, the loss adjusted and paid, and an agreement was entered into, at the time of adjustment, that the insured would refund to the insurer whatever he should recover in such proportion as the sum insured bore to the whole interest. The bullion was afterwards fished up, and the insured paid into court the insurer's proportion, after deducting salvage. The court held this to be right. ibid

Admiralty.

1. The sentence of a foreign Court of Admiralty is conclusive, as to every thing contained in it; but where the cause of condemnation of a ship does not appear to be on the specifick ground, material to the point in issue, parol evidence must be allowed to explain it. 403
2. Thus it is not conclusive to shew that a ship was not neutral, unless it appear that the condemnation went on that ground. ibid
3. A sentence of such a Court cannot be controverted collaterally in a civil suit. 407
4. If it appear evident that the sentence proceeded upon the ground of the property not being neutral, that is conclusive evidence against the insured, that
M m 3 he

Table of the Principal Matters.

he has not complied with his warranty, and the underwriter is discharged. Page 410. 417

5. Even where no special ground of condemnation is stated; but the ship is condemned as good and lawful prize, the Court here must consider it as conclusive evidence that the property was not neutral. 413. 417

6. But if the ground of decision appear to be a foreign ordinance, manifestly unjust, and contrary to the laws of nations, and the insured has only infringed such a partial law, that shall not be deemed a breach of his warranty, so as to discharge the insurer. 414

7. If the ship be condemned as prize, and the grounds of the sentence appear manifestly to contradict such a conclusion, the Court here will not discharge the insurers, by declaring that the insured has forfeited his neutrality. 415

Agent.

1. Wherever there has been an allegation of falsehood, a concealment of circumstances, or a misrepresentation, it is immaterial whether it be the act of the person himself who is interested, or of his agent; for in either case, the contract is founded in deception, and the policy is consequently void. 235

2. This rule prevails, even tho' the act cannot be at all traced to the owner of the property insured. 236

3. A man having arrived at Greenock, knowing of the loss of the ship insured, and meeting an intimate friend and acquaintance of the insured, and a partner with him in some other transactions, communicated the intelligence of the loss of the ship to him, who desired it might be concealed. The same day the person receiving the account, held a conversation with the plaintiff's clerk, who, notwithstanding that, swore that he had no information from him respecting the ship, nor did he get any hint from him, further than the said person asking the deponent, if he knew whether there was any insurance made upon her, and if there was any account of her. The same day the plaintiff desired this clerk to get an insurance effected, which he did, without telling his master of this conversation. The Court of Session in Scotland held the policy to be void; and the House of Lords confirmed the decree. Page 236

4. The plaintiff's agent shipped goods for the plaintiff, and wrote to the plaintiff's agent in town to get an insurance done. The letter was dated the 16th of September, and it contained this sentence, "I this day shipped on board the Joseph, which sailed immediately, a cargo of oats," &c. This letter was not, however, sent till one o'clock on the 17th. The case states, that about six o'clock in the evening of the 16th. Thomas (the agent) heard a report that the ship was on shore; and at six o'clock in the morning of the 17th he knew the ship was lost. The policy was held void on account of the fraud in Thomas. 238

Alteration.

1. A policy cannot be altered after it is signed. 1

2. Unless there be some written document to shew that the intention of the parties was mistaken: or unless it be altered by consent of the parties. 3, 4

Amal: 122

Table of the Principal Matters.

Amalfitan Code.

Some account of it. Introd. p. xxii.

Assumpfit. See Action.

Assurance. Vide Insurance.

Average, General.

1. When goods are thrown overboard in a storm to lighten the ship, for the general safety of the ship and cargo, the owners of the ship and of the goods saved, are to contribute for the relief of those whose goods are ejected: this contribution is called a general average. Page 112. 137
2. Average and contribution, in commercial writers, are synonymous terms. 137
3. The doctrine of average was introduced by the Rhodians. 138
4. Three things must concur to make the act of throwing goods overboard legal: 1st, That what is so condemned to destruction, be in consequence of a deliberate and voluntary consultation between the master and men. 2d, That the ship be in distress, and that sacrificing a part be necessary for the preservation of the rest. 3d, That the saving of the ship and cargo be owing to the means used with that view. ibid.
5. To an action of trespass for throwing goods overboard, a man pleaded that he did it navis levandæ causâ; and that otherwise the passengers must have perished. The plea was held good. 139
6. If the jettison (that is the throwing over of the goods) do not save the ship, but the perish in the storm, there shall be no contribution of such goods as may happen to be saved. ibid.

7. But if the ship being once preserved by such means, be afterwards lost, the property saved from the second accident, shall contribute to the loss occasioned by the former jettison. Page 139
8. The various accidents and charges, which will entitle the suffering party to call for a contribution, enumerated. 140
9. If goods be put on board a lighter, to enable the ship to sail into a harbour, and the lighter perish, the owners of the ship and the remaining cargo, are to contribute. 141
10. But if the ship be lost, and the lighter saved, the owners of the goods preserved are not to contribute. ibid.
11. Not only the value of the goods thrown overboard, must be considered in a general average; but also the value of such as receive any damage by wet, &c. from the jettison of the rest. ibid.
12. If a ship be taken and carried into port, and the crew remain to take care of and reclaim her, the charges of reclaiming and the wages and expences of the ship's company, during her arrest, and from the time of her capture, it is said, shall be brought into a general average. Qu. ibid.
13. Not so for sailors' wages and provisions, during performance of a quarantine. ibid.
14. Quære, Whether extraordinary wages and victuals, during a detention by a foreign prince, not at war, be a subject of average? 142
15. It seems that wages, &c. during a detention to repair are. Qu. ibid.
16. Diamonds and jewels, when a part of the cargo, must contribute according to their value. 143. 145
17. Ship provisions, the persons of the passengers, wearing apparel, and

Table of the Principal Matters.

- and such jewels, as merely belong to the person, do not contribute. Page 143
18. Nor do bottomry or respondentia bonds. 143. 481
19. Nor the wages of the sailors. 144
20. In order to fix a right sum, on which the average may be computed, we should consider what the whole ship, freight, and cargo, would have produced neat, if no jettison had been made; and then the ship, freight, and cargo are to bear an equal and proportional part of the loss. ibid
21. The goods thrown overboard are to be estimated at the price, for which the goods saved were sold, freight and all other charges being first deducted. 145
22. The contribution is, in general, not made till the ship's arrival at the port of discharge. 146
23. The insurer, by his contract, engages to indemnify the insured against all losses arising from a general average. 146, 147.

Average Loss, vide Partial Losses.

Bankruptcy.

1. IF the original insurer become a bankrupt, it shall be lawful for him, or his assigns, to make a re-assurance to the amount before by him insured, provided it be expressed in the policy to be a re-assurance. 317
2. If the insurer, after the writing of the policy and before a loss happen, should become a bankrupt, the insured may prove his

- debt under the commission, as if the loss had happened previous to the bankruptcy of the underwriter. Page 318. note (a).
3. This statute has been held to extend to insurances upon lives. 494
 4. If the borrower on bottomry becomes bankrupt after the loan of the money, and before the event happens, which entitles the lender to repayment, the lender may prove his debt under the commission, as if the event had actually happened. 486

Barratry.

1. It is barratry in the master to smuggle on his own account. 34
2. The derivation of the word "barratry," is very doubtful. 93
3. Any act of the master, or mariners, of a criminal nature, or which is grossly negligent, tending to their own benefit, to the prejudice of the owners of the ship, and without their consent or privity, is barratry. 94
4. It is not necessary, in order to make the insurers liable, that the loss should happen in the very act of barratry; for the moment the ship is carried from its proper track, with an evil intent, barratry is committed. 94. 101
5. But the loss, in consequence of the act of barratry, must happen during the voyage insured, and within the time limited in the policy. 94
6. If the act of the captain be done for the benefit of his owners, and not with a view to his own interest, it is not barratry. ibid
7. If the owner of the ship freight it out for a specific voyage, the freighter is to be considered as owner pro hac vice; and if the master

Table of the Principal Matters.

- | | |
|--|---|
| master commit a criminal act, without his privity, though with the knowledge of the original owner, it is barratry. Page 94, 95. 100, 101 8. The insurers, by express words, undertake generally for the barratry of the master and mariners. 95 9. If a declaration state a ship to have been lost by the fraud and negligence of the master, that is a sufficient averment of a loss by barratry. ibid 10. But where a ship sailed a different course from that first intended, which alteration was publicly notified before the ship sailed, and where the master was to have no benefit by the change, it was held not to be barratry. 96 11. So if a ship take a prize, and instead of proceeding on her voyage, the captain is forced by the mariners to return to port with the prize, against the orders of his owners, the captain is justified by necessity; and it is not barratry, because not done to defraud the owners. 98 12. A ship was insured from London to Seville; she was let to freight for the voyage; she sailed from London to the Downs, from whence she sailed to Guernsey, which was out of the course of the voyage. The captain went there to take in brandy on his own account, with the knowledge of the original owner of the ship, but not of the freighter for that voyage. This was held to be barratry. 99 13. A breach of an embargo is an act of barratry in the master. Qu. 103 14. An act of the captain, with the knowledge of the owners of the ship, though without the privity of the owner of the goods, who | happened to be the person insured, is not barratry. Page 103, 104 15. If the master of the ship be also the owner, he cannot be guilty of barratry. 106 16. The same rule prevails, if he commit an act, which would be barratry in any other master, even though he has mortgaged the ship. ibid 17. If any captain, or mariner, belonging to any ship shall wilfully burn or destroy her, to the prejudice of any merchant loading goods thereon; or of any person underwriting any policy thereon, or to the prejudice of the owner of the ship, he shall suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy. 108 18. If the offence be committed within the body of a county, the offender shall be tried in a court of common law; if upon the high seas, it shall be tried according to the directions of the 28th Henry 8. ch. 15. 109 |
|--|---|

Bottomry and Respondentia.

1. Bottomry is a contract, by which the owner of a ship borrows money to enable him to carry on the voyage, and pledges the keel or bottom of the ship as a security for the repayment. 468
2. If the ship be lost, the lender also loses his whole money; but if not, he shall receive his principal, and the stipulated interest, however it exceed the legal rate. 469
3. When the ship and tackle are brought home, they are liable, as well as the person of the borrower for the money lent. ibid
4. When the loan is not made upon the vessel, but upon the goods, then the borrower only is

Table of the Principal Matters.

- is personally bound to answer the contract, who is said to take up money at respondentia. Page 469
5. In this consists the chief difference between bottomry and respondentia; in most other respects they are the same. ibid
6. There is a third kind of contract upon the mere hazard of the voyage, without any interest in ship or goods. ibid
7. This is prohibited as to East India voyages. 470
8. Bottomry arose from the power given to the master of hypothecating the ship for necessities in a foreign country. 471
9. But the ship must be abroad, and in a state of necessity to justify such an act of the master. 472
10. This species of contract was known to the Rhodians. 473
11. The principle, upon which bottomry is allowed, is, that the lender runs the risk of losing his principal and interest; and therefore it is not usury to take more than the legal rate. 475
12. If a contract were made, by colour of bottomry, in order to evade the statute, it would be usurious. 478
13. The legality of the contract defended. ibid
14. But if the risk be not run, the lender is not entitled to the extraordinary premium. 479
15. The risks, to which the lender exposes himself, are generally mentioned in the condition of the bond; and are nearly the same, against which the underwriter in a policy of insurance, undertakes to indemnify. 480
16. Piracy is one of the risks, which the lender on bottomry runs. 481
17. If a loss by capture happen, he cannot recover against the borrower. ibid
18. But this does not mean a mere temporary taking; but it must be such as to occasion a total loss. Page 481
19. Therefore where a ship was taken and detained for a short time, and yet arrived at the port of destination, within the time limited, it was held that the bond was not forfeited. ibid
20. If the ship be lost by a wilful deviation from the track of the voyage, the event has not happened, upon which the borrower was to be discharged from his obligation. 483
21. If the borrower becomes bankrupt after the loan of the money, and before the event happens, which entitles the lender to repayment, the lender may prove his debt under the commission, as if the event had actually happened. 486
22. Bottomry and respondentia may be insured, provided it be specified to be such interest in the policy. 10. 487
23. Unless the usage of trade sanctions a different proceeding. 12
24. When a person insures a bottomry interest, and recovers upon the bond, he cannot also recover upon the policy. 487

Broker.

1. The broker, by the custom, is liable to be sued by the insurer for premiums, notwithstanding the acknowledgment by the insurer, in the policy, that he has received them. 29
2. The broker may maintain an action against the insured, for premiums paid on his account. 29. 30

See Agent.

Captain

Table of the Principal Matters.

Capture.

1. AS between the insurer and insured, the ship is to be considered as lost by the capture, though she be never condemned at all, nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy. and the insurer must pay the value. P. 73. 87
2. If, either before or after condemnation, the owner retake her, and have paid salvage, the insurer must pay the loss so actually sustained. 74
3. If the loss be paid by the underwriter, before the recovery, he stands in the place of the insured, and will be entitled to the benefits of the restitution. ibid
4. A capture having been illegal, but the charges and delay being great, the insured made a compromise bona fide for the liberation of the ship; the underwriters were held to be answerable for the charges of that compromise ibid
5. Before the statute of 19 Geo. 2d ch. 37, which abolished wager policies, the re-capture had a considerable effect upon the contract of insurance. 77
6. But now the contract is not at all altered between an insurer and an insured. ibid
7. The opinions of foreign writers with respect to capture and re-capture, stated. 78
8. By the marine law of England, as practised in the court of Admiralty, it was formerly held, that the property was not changed so as to bar the original owner in favour of a vendee or re-captor, till there had been a sentence of condemnation. 79, 80. 150
9. But now by statute, this right of the original owner, in case of a re-capture, is preserved to him for ever, upon payment of stated salvage to the re-captors.

Pa e 80. 156

10. Before the stat, of 19 Geo. 2. ch. 37, several cases were determined upon the question of re-capture in the English courts; but the same question can never again arise between an insurer and insured. 81, 82, 83. 85, 86
11. If the ship be recovered, before a demand for indemnity is made, the insurer is only liable for the amount of the loss actually sustained at the time of the demand. 87.
12. Or, if the ship be restored at any time subsequent to the payment by the underwriter, he shall then stand in the place of the insured, and receive all the benefits resulting from such restitution. ibid

See bottomry.

No. 17, 18, 19

Changing the Ship.

1. It being necessary, except in some special cases, to insert the name of the ship, on which the risk is to be run in the policy; it follows as an implied condition, that the insured shall neither substitute another ship for that mentioned in the policy before the voyage commences; in which case there would be no contract at all; nor during the voyage remove the property insured from one ship to another. 331
2. If he do, the implied condition is broken, and he cannot, in case of loss, recover against the underwriter. 332
3. The ship, on which the risk is to be run, forms a material part of the contract. ibid
4. The opinions of English mercantile writers, and of foreign authors stated. ibid
5. Expressly

Table of the Principal Matters.

5. Expressly held in England that the insured have no right to change the bottom of the ship; for when an insurance is made on a specific ship, and the insured, without the consent of the underwriter, changes the ship, he has not kept his part of the contract.

Page 335.

Cloaths.

The master's cloaths are not included under a general insurance on goods. 23

Commencement of the Risk.

1. On the goods it is usually from the loading; on the ship, from the beginning to load. 24, 25
2. On a policy "at and from Bengal to England," the risk commences from the first arrival at Bengal. 42

Compass (Mariner's.)

Invented by a native of Amalfi; and it contributed greatly to the revival of commerce. Introd. xx.

Concealment. See Fraud, No. 9; 10

Consent.

A policy may be altered by consent, even after it is signed. 3, 4

Construction of the Policy.

1. A policy must always be construed, as nearly as possible, according to the intention of the contracting parties, and not according to the strict meaning of the words 33
2. As policies are to be liberally construed, whatever is done by the master in the usual course, for good reasons, though a loss happen thereon, the insurer is liable.

Page 33

3. No rule has been more frequently followed in questions of construction, than the usage of trade, with respect to the voyage insured. ibid

4. A policy on a ship generally from A. to B. was construed to mean till the ship was unloaded. 34

5. But if it contain the usual words "till moored twenty-four hours in safety;" the insurers shall be answerable for no loss, that does not happen before the expiration of the time. ibid

6. Even though the loss was occasioned by an act committed during the voyage insured. ibid

7. Thus where the master of the ship, during the voyage insured, committed an act of barratry by smuggling on his own account; the insurer was held not to be liable, because the ship was not seized till near a month after her arrival at the port of destination. ibid

8. If a ship be insured for 6 months, and three days before the expiration of the time receive her death's wound; but by pumping is kept afloat till three days after the time, the insurer is discharged. 36

9. The loss must happen during the continuance of the voyage, or within 24 hours after her mooring at the port of destination. 37

10. Under a policy containing those words, the under-writers were held liable for a subsequent loss; because the captain the very day, on which the ship arrived at her moorings, was served with an order from government to return in order to perform quarantine; and therefore the ship could not be said

Table of the Principal Matters.

- said to have moored 24 hours in safety, although she did not go back for some days. Page 39
11. In a policy upon freight, if an accident prevent the ship from sailing, the insured cannot recover the freight, which he would have earned, if she had completed her voyage. ibid
12. If a ship, from stress of weather, is in a decayed condition, and goes to the nearest place to re-fit, it is to be considered in the same light, as if she had been repaired at the very place, from which the voyage was to commence, and no deviation from the terms of the policy. 41
13. When a ship is insured, "at and from Bengal to London," the first arrival at Bengal is intended to be the commencement of the risk. 42
14. When an insurance is "at and from" the ship is protected during her preparation for the voyage; but if all thoughts of the voyage be laid aside, the insurer is discharged. ibid
15. Where there was an insurance on the outward and homeward bound voyage; and the latter ran "at and from Jamaica to London;" It was held, that the homeward risk began when the ship moored at any part of the island, and that there the outward risk ended, and did not continue till she came to the last port of delivery. ibid
16. This case confirmed as to a policy on the ship, but the outward risk on goods continues till they are landed. 43
17. In construing policies, the strictum jus, or apex juris is not to be the rule, but a liberal construction is to be adopted, and the usage of trade called in to explain any doubts. 44
18. Thus in an insurance on goods from Malaga to Gibraltar, and from thence to England or Holland, the parties having agreed that the goods might be unloaded at Gibraltar, and reshipped in one or more British ship or ships, and it appearing in evidence that there was no British ship at Gibraltar, but the goods had been unloaded and put into a store ship (which was always considered as a warehouse) the insurers were held to be liable for the loss of these goods in the store ship. Page 43
19. A ship was insured from London to any place beyond the Cape of Good Hope. The ship arrived in the river Canton in China, where in order to be heeled and refitted, the sails, &c. were taken out, and lodged in a bank saul, on an island in the river (which was proved to be usual and beneficial to all concerned) the underwriter was held liable for the loss of the sails by fire, while in this bank saul. 45
20. The insurer, at the time of underwriting, has under his consideration the nature of the voyage, and the usual manner of doing it. 47
21. What is usually done by such a ship, with such a cargo, in such a voyage, is understood to be referred to by every policy. ibid
22. If a ship be driven a mile on shore by a hurricane, or be burnt in a dry dock, while repairing, the insurer is liable. 48
23. The goods on board the ships, the Hope and the Anne, were insured at and from Dartmouth to Waterford, and from thence to the port or ports of discharge, on the

Table of the Principal Matters.

the coast of Labrador, with leave to touch at Newfoundland, till the goods should be safely discharged and landed. From the time of their arrival, the crew was chiefly employed in fishing, and took out their cargo only at leisure times (which was fully proved to be the usage) and the ships were taken by a privateer, before they were unloaded. The court held that the insurers were liable; for that according to the usage there was no delay. Page 49

24. When a man insures one species of property, he cannot recover damage, occasioned by the loss of a species of property different from that named in the policy. 59

25. Under a policy upon the ship, or upon the goods, the insured cannot recover extraordinary wages paid to the seamen, or provisions expended, during a detention to repair, or a detention by an embargo, 59, 60

26. Nor is the underwriter on goods liable for the freight paid by the owner of the goods to the proprietors of the ship, where the goods were partially lost. 60

27. In the construction of policies, the loss must be a direct and immediate consequence of the peril insured, and not a remote one, in order to entitle the insured to recover. 63

28. Thus in an action upon a policy to recover the value of some negroes, who perished by mutiny, which was one of the risks insured against; it was held that the underwriters were liable for all those, who were killed in the mutiny, or who died of their wounds: that all those, who died of the bruises, which they received in the mutiny, though accompanied with other causes,

were to be paid for by the underwriters. But they were not liable for those, who had swallowed salt water, and died in consequence thereof, or who leaped into the sea, and hung upon the sides of the ship, without being otherwise bruised, or who died of chagrin; all these having been lost by too remote a consequence. Page 64

29. In the construction of a policy upon time, the same liberality prevails as in other cases; and an attention to the meaning of the contracting parties has always been paid. 66

30. In an insurance at and from Liverpool to Antigua, with liberty to cruise six weeks; it was held, that this meant a connected portion of time, and not a desultory cruising for six weeks at any time. ibid

Of the Construction of East-India Policies, see East-India Voyages.

Of the Construction of Losses by Perils of the Sea, see Perils of the Sea.

Of the Construction of Losses by Capture, see Capture.

Of the Construction of Losses by Detention, see Detention.

Of the Construction of Losses by Barratry, see Barratry.

Continuance of the Risk.

1. On the ship till her arrival at the port of destination, and till she has been moored 24 hours in good safety. 26

2. On the goods till they are safely landed

Table of the Principal Matters.

- | | |
|---|---|
| landed at the port of destination; which includes the carriage in the ship's boat to the shore, but not in the boat of the owner of the goods. Page 25 3. If a policy be general on a ship from A. to B. the underwriter has been held answerable till the ship is unloaded. 34 4. But if it contain the usual words "till moored 24 hours in safety;" the insurer is liable for no loss, that does not happen before the expiration of that time. ibid 5. Even though it be occasioned by an act done during the voyage insured. ibid 6. If the master, during the voyage, commit an act of barratry by smuggling, and the ship be not seized till near a month after her arrival at the port of destination, the insurer is discharged. ibid 7. If a ship be insured for six months, and three days before the expiration of that time receive her death's wound, but by pumping is kept afloat till three days after, the insurer is not liable. 36 8. But the ship cannot be said to have moored 24 hours in safety, when the very day, on which she arrives at her moorings, the captain is served with an order to return to perform quarantine, altho' he does not obey for some days: and therefore the insurer is liable for a subsequent loss. 39 | and she do not; the policy is defeated. Page 386 2. A convoy means a naval force, under the command of that person, whom government may happen to appoint, 386. 389 3. Therefore where a ship put herself under the direction of a man of war till she should join the convoy, which had left the usual place of rendezvous before she arrived there, it was held not to be a departure with convoy, altho' she in fact joined, and was lost in a storm. 387 4. Q. Whether sailing orders from the commander in chief to the particular ships are necessary to constitute a convoy? 387, 390, 398 5. A convoy appointed by the admiral, commanding in chief upon a station abroad, is a convoy appointed by government. 392 6. A sailing with convoy from the usual place of rendezvous, as Spithead for the port of London, is a departure with convoy, within the meaning of such a warranty. 392, 393 7. Although the words used, generally are "to depart," or to "sail with convoy;" yet it extends to sail with convoy throughout the voyage. 394 8. But an unforeseen separation from convoy is an accident, to which the underwriter is liable. 396 9. So held where a ship was separated from her convoy by storm, and by storm prevented from rejoining it, and was lost. 397 10. Even where the ship has been prevented by tempestuous weather from joining the convoy, at least so as to receive the orders of the commodore, if she do every thing in her power to effect |
|---|---|

Contraband, see Prohibited Goods.

Convoy.

1. If the insured warrant that the vessel shall depart with convoy,

Table of the Principal Matters.

effect it, it shall be deemed a sailing with convoy. Page 398

11. Otherwise if the not joining be owing to the negligence and delay of the captain. ibid

Corn.

Is a general expression in the memorandum at the foot of the policy, and has been held to include peas and beans. 127

Court.

1. The proper court for the trial of questions relative to policies of insurance is a court of common law. 448
2. Courts of equity have no jurisdiction over such questions. 449
3. If indeed the trustee in a policy of insurance actually refuse his name to the cestuy que trust in an action at law, that may be a ground of application to a court of equity. 451
4. So also an application may be made to a court of equity for a commission to examine witnesses residing abroad. ibid
5. It is also allowable, where fraud is suspected, to apply to equity, in order to procure a disclosure of circumstances upon the oath of the insured. 452
6. But in all other cases, a court of common law is the proper forum. ibid
7. Even if the parties, by a clause in the policy, should agree to refer any dispute to arbitration, that will not oust the court of common law of its jurisdiction, unless a reference is in fact made, or is depending. ibid

Court of Policies of Insurance.

The history of its origin and decline. Introd. xxxvii

Cruise.

A liberty to cruise six weeks means to give a permission to cruise for six successive weeks, and not a desultory cruising for forty-two days at any time. Page 66

Crusades.

They contributed to the revival of commerce. Introd. xix.

Date.

TH E day, month, and year, on which the policy was executed, must be inserted. 30

Declaration.

1. In order to entitle the insured to recover expences of salvage, it is not necessary to state them in the declaration, as a special breach of the policy. 159
2. Thus, in a declaration on a policy on goods, it stated, that the ship sprung a leak, and sunk in the river, whereby the goods were spoiled. Lord Hardwicke held, that, under this declaration, the plaintiffs might give in evidence the expences of salvage. 159. 468
3. A declaration on a policy of insurance must set out the policy, and aver that it was signed by the defendant; and that in consideration of the premium, he undertook to indemnify the insured. 455
4. The declaration must then state the interest of the insured. ibid
5. It should next shew the loss to have

Table of the Principal Matters.

have happened by one of the perils mentioned in the policy; but it must state it according to the truth. Page 455

6. To aver that the loss happened by the fraud and negligence of the master is a sufficient averment of barratry. 456
7. In a declaration for a total, the insured may recover for a partial loss. ibid
8. Though the plaintiff appear in proof to have a larger interest than is averred in the declaration, yet he is entitled to recover. 460
9. The general issue, non assumpsit, is the usual plea to a declaration upon a policy. 462

Detention.

1. The underwriter, by express words, undertakes to indemnify against all damages arising from the detention of kings, princes, or people. 87
2. A detention is said to be an arrest or embargo, in time of war or peace, laid on by the publick authority of a state. 88
3. In case of an arrest or embargo by a prince, though not an enemy, the insured is entitled to recover against the insurer. ibid
4. In case of detention by a foreign power, which in time of war may have seized a neutral ship, in order to be searched for enemy's property; the charges consequent thereon must be borne by the underwriter. 89
5. A neutral ship with neutral goods on board, consigned to London, was captured off the coast of Barbary by a Spanish ship; she was condemned as prize, because she refused to be searched, and resisted with force; and because she had no charter party on board. But the court held that a neutral ship is not obliged to stop to be searched, and the searcher does it at his peril; therefore, as it was a case of improper detention, the insurer was held liable. Page 89, 90

6. But a detention for non-payment of customs, or for navigating against the laws of those countries, where the ship happens to be, shall not fall upon the underwriter. 90
7. Whether the insurers are liable for the payment of damage arising by the detention or seizure of ships, before the commencement of the voyage, where the risk is "at and from" by the government of the country, to which they belong? Qu. 90, 91
8. Before the insured can recover in case of detention, he must abandon to the insurer whatever claims he may have to the goods insured. 92
9. The time, within which the abandonment must be made in such cases is not ascertained in England by any positive rule. ibid
10. A detention by particular ordinances, which contravene, or do not form a part of the law of nations, is a risk within a policy of insurance. 417

Deviation.

1. Is understood to mean a voluntary departure, without necessity or any reasonable cause, from the regular and usual course of the specific voyage insured. 335
2. Whenever this happens, the voyage is determined; and the insurers are discharged from any responsibility. ibid.

N n

3. The

Table of the Principal Matters.

3. The reason of this is, because the ship goes upon a different voyage from that against which the insurer undertook to indemnify. Page 336
4. It is not material whether the loss be or be not an actual consequence of the deviation; for the insurers are in no case answerable for a subsequent loss, in whatever place it happen, or to whatever cause it may be attributed. ibid.
5. Neither does it make any difference whether the insured was or was not consenting to the deviation. ibid.
6. A ship was insured from Dartmouth to Liverpool; she put into Loe, a place she must of necessity pass by; and although no accident befel her in going into or coming out of Loe (for she was lost after she got out to sea); it was held to be a deviation. ibid.
7. A ship being insured from Dunkirk to Leghorn, comes to Dover for a Mediterranean pass; and it was held to be a deviation. ibid.
8. If the master of a vessel put into a port not usual, or stay an unusual time, it is a deviation. 337
9. The insured ordered their broker to insure on a particular vessel from Carren to Hull, with liberty to call as usual. These instructions were entered in the broker's books, and the insurer subscribed a policy on the goods, "at and from " the loading thereof, on board
" the said ship at Carren wharf,
" and to continue and endure
" until the said ship (being allowed a liberty to call at Leith)
" shall arrive at Hull." It being usual for these vessels to call at Borrowstonefs, Leith, and Morison's Haven; this vessel stopt at the latter; and received no damage in going into or coming out of it. The Courts in Scot-
- land* held it was no deviation; but the judgment was reversed in the House of Lords. Page 337
10. If the deviation be but for a single night, or for an hour, it is fatal. 341
11. A ship was bound from Cork to Jamaica, under convoy. Being of force, she, with two other vessels, took advantage of the night, and cruized in hopes of meeting with a prize; it was held a deviation. ibid.
12. But if a merchant ship carry letters of marque, she may chase an enemy, though she may not cruise, without being deemed guilty of a deviation. ibid.
13. Wherever the deviation is occasioned by absolute necessity; as where the crew forced the captain to deviate, the underwriter continues liable. 342
14. The justifications for a deviation seem to be these; to repair the vessel; to avoid an impending storm; to escape from an enemy; or to seek for convoy. 343
15. If a ship is decayed and goes to the nearest port to refit, it is no deviation. 343, 344
16. Wherever a ship, in order to escape a storm, goes out of the direct course; or when, in the due course of the voyage, is driven out of it by stress of weather; this is no deviation. 345
17. If a storm drive a ship out of the course of her voyage, and she do the best she can to get to her port of destination, she is not obliged to return to the point from which she was driven. 346
18. A ship was warranted to sail with convoy from England to St. Kitt's, and was separated from convoy by a storm. The captain swore that his invariable object, after the separation, was to gain St. Kitt's, or to fall in with convoy. The

Table of the Principal Matters.

- The ship being taken, it was held that the deviation was excused. Page 346
19. In another case, where a ship had been driven out of her port of loading, into another port, by stress of weather, and she often attempted to return but could not; it was held that she was not guilty of a deviation, though she did not, in fact, return to the port from whence she was driven. 347
20. A deviation may also be justified, if done to avoid an enemy or to seek for convoy. 351. 353
21. A ship being insured and warranted to depart with convoy from Bremen to London, set sail from Bremen to the Elbe, under convoy of a Dutch man of war, where they were joined by two other Dutch men of war, whence they sailed to the Texel, where they found a squadron of English men of war. It was held that their going to the Elbe, though out of the way, was no deviation. 351
22. A ship was insured from London to Gibraltar, warranted to depart with convoy. There was a convoy appointed for that trade at Spithead, but the ship was lost in her way thither. The court held that the ship was protected by the insurance to a place of general rendezvous. 352
23. Where a captain justifies a deviation by the usage of a particular trade, there must be a clear and established usage; not a few vague instances only. 353
24. Wherever a ship does that, which is for the general benefit of all parties concerned, the act is as much within the spirit of the policy as if it had been expressed: and in order to say whether a deviation be justifiable or not, it will be proper to attend to the motives, end, and consequences of the act as the true ground of judgment. Page 354
25. It has been held, that if a ship deviate from necessity, the ship must pursue such voyage of necessity in the direct course, and in the shortest time possible, otherwise the underwriters will be discharged. ibid.
26. In such a case nothing more must be done than what the necessity requires. 358
27. A deviation merely intended, but never carried into effect, does not discharge the insurers. 359
28. But if it can be shewn that the parties never intended to sail upon the voyage insured; if all the ship's papers be made out for a different place from that described in the policy; the insurer is discharged, though the loss should happen before the dividing point of the two voyages. 360
29. Thus where a ship was insured from "Maryland to Cadiz," it appeared that the ship was cleared to Falmouth, and a bond was given, that all the enumerated goods should be landed in Britain: an affidavit of the owner stated the ship to be bound for Falmouth; and the bills of lading were, "to Falmouth, and a market." There was no evidence of her being destined for Cadiz. The court held that the insurers were not liable, although the ship was taken before the dividing point of the two voyages. ibid.
30. As it is settled that a mere intention to deviate will not vacate the policy, it follows as a consequence, and has been so held, that whatever damage happens before actual deviation, falls upon the underwriters. 362
31. Subject to the rules already advanced, deviation or not is a question of fact to be decided according

Table of the Principal Matters.

ing to the circumstances of the case. Page 362

32. In cases of deviation, the premium is not to be returned. ibid.

Double Insurance.

1. It is where the same man is to receive two sums instead of one; or the same sum twice over, for the same loss, by reason of his having made two insurances upon the same property, 320
2. Difference between a re-assurance and a double insurance ibid.
3. Where a man makes a double insurance, he may recover his loss against which set of under-writers he pleases; but he can recover for no more than the amount of his loss. ibid.
4. But when one set of under-writers pay the loss, they may call upon the other under-writers to contribute in proportion to the sums they have insured. 321, 322
5. But though a double insurance cannot be wholly supported, so as to enable a man to recover a two-fold satisfaction; yet various persons may insure various interests on the same thing, and each to the whole value; as the master for wages; the owner for freight; one person for goods; another for bottomry. 323
6. In what cases a man shall be said to make a double insurance; and when not, fully considered from page 323 to 330.
7. If the same man for his own account, though not in his own name insures doubly, it is still a double insurance. 326
8. The laws of foreign countries, upon the subject of double insurance, are far from being uniform. 330.

East-India Voyages.

1. THE usage of trade with respect to these voyages has been more notorious than in any other, the question having more frequently occurred Page 52
2. The charter parties of the India Company give leave to prolong the ship's stay in India for a year, and it is common by a new agreement, to detain her a year longer. The words of the policy too are very general without limitation of time or place. ibid.
3. These charter parties are so notorious, and the course of the trade is so well known, that the under-writer is always liable for any intermediate voyage, upon which the ship may be sent, while in India, though not expressly mentioned in the policy. ibid.
4. Thus, where the insurance was "at and from Bengal to any ports or places whatsoever, in the East Indies, China, Persia, or elsewhere beyond the Cape of Good Hope, forwards and backwards, and during her stay at each place, until her arrival in London, &c." The captain when in Bengal entered into a new agreement for prolonging the ship's stay, and went several intermediate or country voyages, in the last of which she was lost; the insurers were held liable. 53
5. In an insurance "from London to Madras and China, with liberty to touch, stay, and trade at any ports or places whatsoever," the facts were; that when the ship arrived at Madras, she was too late to go to China that year, upon which she was sent by the council to Bengal to fetch fetch rice, which voyage she performed once, but in the second attempt she was lost. The insurers are answerable on account of the usage. Page 55

Table of the Principal Matters.

In an insurance on a ship "at " and from London to Bengal, beginning the risk upon the ship " at London, and so to continue " till the arrival of the said ship " at Madras and Bengal, with " liberty to touch and stay at any " port or place in this voyage;" the under-writers were held to be answerable for a loss, which happened in an intermediate voyage from Madras to Visagapatnam for rice by order of the council. 56

7. However, the parties may, by their own agreement, prevent such latitude of construction. 57

8. Nor need this be done by express words of exclusion; but if from the terms used, it can be collected that the parties meant so, that construction shall prevail. ib.

9. Thus where the general words were restrained by the expressions "in the outward, or homeward bound voyage;" and "in this voyage;" the court held that the policy only meant places in the usual course of the voyage "to and from the places named." 58

Embargo.

1. An embargo is an arrest laid on ships or goods by public authority to prevent ships from putting to sea in time of war, and sometimes also to exclude them from entering our ports. 88

2. Q. Whether a prince in time of war may make use of the vessels he finds in his ports, to assist him in carrying on war? ibid

3. Extraordinary wages paid to the seamen during an embargo, cannot be recovered against the insurer on the ship. Page 61

4. The king of Great Britain in time of war, may lay an embargo on shipping in the ports of his kingdom. Q. Whether he may do it, in time of peace? 88, 89

5. The breach of an embargo is an act of barratry in the master. 103

6. If a ship though neutral, be insured on a voyage prohibited by an embargo, such an insurance is void. 266

Enemy.

1. The question, whether insurances on the property of an enemy, are politic, considered. 15, 273

2. Such insurances are not contrary to the law of England. 16, 276

3. How far trading with an enemy, in time of actual war is legal. 270

Evidence.

1. A policy will not be set aside on the ground of fraud, unless it be fully and satisfactorily proved, and the burden of proof lies upon the person wishing to take advantage of the fraud. 242

2. But positive and direct proof of fraud is not to be expected; and from the nature of the thing circumstantial evidence is all that can be given. 243

3. The nature of circumstantial evidence considered. ibid

4. The sentence of a foreign court of Admiralty is conclusive, and binding upon all the world, as to every thing contained in it; and cannot be controverted collaterally in a civil suit. 403.

407. See Admiralty.

N n 3

5. The

Table of the Principal Matters.

5. The first piece of evidence to support an action on the policy is proof of the defendant's handwriting to the policy. Page 462
6. No parole evidence of any agreement shall be admitted, which tends to contradict the written policy 463
7. The insured must also prove his interest in the thing insured, by a production of all the usual documents, bills of sale, bills of parcels, bills of lading, &c. 464
8. A man having purchased goods abroad, in order to prove his interest, produced a bill of parcels with the receipt of the seller to it and proved his hand; it was held to be sufficient evidence. ibid
9. The plaintiff must prove that a loss has happened by the very means stated in the declaration. 465.
10. But where the loss is averred to be by perils of the sea, it is allowable to give the expence of the salvage in evidence upon such a declaration. 468

Factor.

TH E lien which a factor has upon the goods of his principal, is such an interest, as will entitle him to recover on a general policy on goods. 12, 328

Felony.

1. Wilfully to cast away, burn, or destroy any ship to the prejudice of the owners of the said ship, or any merchant loading goods thereon, or of the underwriters, is felony, without benefit of clergy in any captain, master, mariner, or other officer, belonging to the ship so destroyed.

Page 108. 109. 248.

2. Any person, boring holes in a ship in distress, or stealing a pump belonging thereto, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. 151
3. Persons convicted of stealing goods from a ship wrecked, or in distress, or of obstructing the escape of any person from a wreck, or of putting out false lights to lead such ship into danger, shall suffer as felons without benefit of clergy. 152
4. Where goods of small value are stolen, without any circumstances of cruelty, the offender may be indicted for petty larceny. ibid
5. Persons, in whose custody shipwrecked goods are found, not giving a satisfactory account, shall be committed to the common gaol for six months, or pay treble the value of such goods. ibid
6. Goods offered to sale, suspected of being shipwrecked, shall be stopped, and the person so offering them, and not giving a satisfactory account, shall be committed to the common gaol for six months, or pay treble the value of such goods. 152. 153.
7. Persons convicted of assaulting any magistrate or officer, when in discharge of his duty, respecting the preservation of any ship, vessel, goods, or effects, shall be liable to transportation for seven years. 155

Fire (Insurance against)

1. Is a contract, by which the insurer undertakes, in consideration of the premium, to indemnify the insured, against all losses, which he may sustain in his house, or or goods, by means of fire, within the time limited in the policy.

Table of the Principal Matters.

Page 502

2. The London Assurance Company insert a clause in their proposals, by which they declare, that they do not hold themselves liable for any damage by fire, occasioned by an invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever. ibid

3. Under this proviso it was held, that the insurers were not exempted from loss by fire, occasioned by a mob at Norwich, which arose on account of the high price of provisions. 503

4. The sun fire office, in addition to these words, add "civil commotion," it was held that the company, under those words, were exempted from losses occasioned by rioters, who rose in the year 1780, to compel the repeal of a statute, which had passed in favour of the Roman catholics. 507

5. When a loss happens, the insured must give immediate notice of his loss; and as particular an account of the value, &c. as the nature of the case will admit. He must also produce a certificate of the minister and church wardens, as to the character of the sufferer, and their belief of the truth of what he advances. 511

6. In insurances against fire, the loss may be either partial or total.

512

7. These policies are not in their nature assignable; nor can the interest in them be transferred without the consent of the office.

ibid

8. When any person dies, the interest shall remain to the heir, executor or administrator, respectively, to whom the property inured belongs; provided they procure their right to be indorsed on the policy, or the premium be paid in their name.

Page 512

9. It is necessary the party injured should have an interest or property in the house insured, at the time the policy is made out, and at the time the fire happens; and therefore, after the lease of the house expired, the insured's assigning the policy does not oblige the insurers to make good the loss to the assignee. 513

10. The premium upon common insurances is two shillings per cent. for any sum not exceeding 1000*l.* and half a crown from 1000*l.* upwards. 521

11. Besides which there is a duty to government of 2*s.* per cent. ibid.

12. This tax does not extend to publick hospitals. ibid.

13. If a house were destroyed by a foreign enemy the day after the policy is made, there would be no return of premium. ibid.

14. If any person sign a policy of insurance against fire, not being duly stamped, he shall forfeit 10*l.* and must pay 5*l.* over and above the usual stamp duties, before it can be received in evidence. ibid.

15. Fraud vitiates this species of contract. 522

Foreign Ships.

Insurances on foreign ships without interest are not within the stat. of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. 302

Fort.

A fort may be insured against an attack from an enemy, for the benefit of the governor. 14

N n 4

France,

Table of the Principal Matters.

France.

An account of its commercial and maritime regulations; and the distinguished authors, who have written upon the subject of insurances. Intr. Page xxx to xxxiii

Fraud.

1. Policies are annulled by the least shadow of fraud or undue concealment of facts. 195
2. Both parties are equally bound to disclose circumstances, within their knowledge. ibid
3. If the insurer, at the time he underwrote, knew that the ship was safe arrived, the contract will be void. ibid
4. Cases of fraud upon this subject are liable to a threefold division: 1st, The allegatio falsi; 2d, The suppressio veri; 3d. Misrepresentation. The latter, though it happen by mistake, if in a material part, will vitiate the policy, as much as actual fraud. ibid
5. The policy was held to be void, where goods were insured as the property of an ally, when in fact they were the goods of an enemy. 196
6. A ship was known to have sailed from Jamaica, on the 24th of November; and the agent told the insurer she sailed the latter end of December; the policy was declared void. ibid
7. In an insurance upon goods, the insured warranted the ship and goods to be neutral: it was expressly found by the jury, that they were not neutral. The court, therefore, though the loss happened by storms, and not by capture, declared that the insured could not recover. 196, 197

8. Goods were insured on board a ship, warranted Portuguese. The goods were lost by a different peril, but in fact the ship was not Portuguese. The policy is void ab initio. Page 198
9. Concealment of circumstances vitiates all contracts of insurance. The facts upon which the risk is to be computed lie, for the most part, within the knowledge of the insured only. The underwriter relies upon him for all necessary information; and must trust to him that he will conceal nothing, so as to make him form a wrong estimate. 199
10. One having an account that a ship, described like his, was taken, insured her, without giving any notice to the insurers of what he had heard, the policy was decreed in equity to be delivered up. 200
11. The agent for the plaintiff two days before he effected the policy, received a letter from Cowes, in which is this expression "On the 12th of this month " I was in company with the " Davy (the ship in question) " at twelve at night lost sight of " her all at once; the captain " spoke to me the day before " that she was leaky, and the " next day we had a hard gale." The ship, however, rode out the gale, and was captured by the Spaniards. The policy was held to be void, because the letter was not communicated to the insurer. ibid
12. A ship was insured " at and from Genoa." The ship loaded at Leghorn, and was originally bound for Dublin; but losing her convoy, she put into Genoa in August, and lay there till the January following. All these facts were known to the insured, but

Table of the Principal Matters.

- but not communicated to the insurer: the policy was held to be void. Page 201
13. A ship being bound from the coast of Africa to the British West Indies, sailed from St. Thomas's on the coast of Africa on the 2d of October, a circumstance with which the plaintiff was acquainted by a letter received in February. The policy was not made till the 21st of March. The letter was not shewn, nor was any thing said of her sailing from St. Thomas's, but in the instructions "the ship was said to have been "on the coast the 2d of October." The policy was held to be void. 202
14. The broker's instructions stated the ship ready to sail on the 24th of December; the broker represented to the underwriter that the ship was in port, when in fact she had sailed the 23d of December. The policy was void. 204
15. But there are many matters, as to which the insured may be innocently silent; 1st, As to what the insurer knows, however he came by that knowledge; 2d, As to what he ought to know; 3d, As to what lessens the risk. An underwriter is bound to know particular perils, as to the state of war or peace. ibid
16. If a privateer is insured, the underwriter needs not be told her destination. ibid
17. An insurance was made on Fort Marlborough in the East Indies for twelve months against the attacks of an European enemy, for the benefit of the governor. The defence set up was an undue concealment of circumstances, particularly the weakness of the fort, and the probability of its being attacked by the French. The court held that the policy was good. P. 205
18. The whole doctrine of concealment fully illustrated from page 205 to 217.
19. A ship was insured "from "London to Nantz, with liberty "to call at Ostend." The ship's clearances and papers were all made out for Ostend; but she was never intended to go thither. After the policy was made, war was declared against France. Two defences were set up; 1st, That there was a fraud in clearing out the ship for Ostend, when she never was designed for that place. 2d, That as hostilities were declared after the policy was signed, and before the ship sailed, the defendant ought to have had notice. The court held that neither of the objections was valid; for the first was the common usage; and of the second the insurer was bound to take notice. 217
20. An underwriter refused to pay a loss by capture, the ship being Portuguese and condemned for having an English supercargo on board, because the insured had not disclosed that circumstance. The court held that the condemnation was unjust, and was not such a circumstance as the insured was bound to disclose. 220
21. A representation is a state of the case, not forming a part of the written instrument or policy; and it is sufficient if it be substantially performed. 221. 228
22. If there be a misrepresentation it will avoid the policy, as a fraud, but not as a part of the agreement. 222
23. Even written instructions, if they are not inserted in the policy, are only to be considered as

Table of the Principal Matters.

as representations; and in order to make them valid and binding as a warranty, it is necessary that they make a part of the written instrument. Page 222
 24. If a representation be false in any material point, it will avoid the policy; because the underwriter has computed the risk upon circumstances, which did not exist. ibid

25. The following instructions were shewn to the first underwriter, but not inserted in the policy, “ Three thousand five hundred “ pounds upon the ship Julius “ Cæsar for Halifax, to touch
 “ at Plymouth, and any port in “ America: she mounts twelve
 “ guns, and twenty men.” These instructions were not shewn to the present defendant, but she was represented generally as a ship of force. At the time of her capture, she had on board 6 four pounders, 4 three pounders, 3 one pounders, 6 swivels, and 27 men and boys in all, of which 15 only were men. The witness said, he considered her as being stronger with this force, than if she had 12 carriage guns, and 20 men; and that there were neither men nor guns on board, at the time of the insurance. The court held, that these instructions were only a representation; and that they had been substantially performed. ibid

26. A ship was insured at and from Port L’Orient to the Isles of France and Bourbon, and to all or any ports or places where, and whatsoever, in the East Indies, China, Persia, or elsewhere, beyond the Cape of Good Hope, from place to place, and during the ship’s stay and trade, backwards and forwards, at all ports and places, and until her safe arrival back at her last port of discharge in France. A slip of paper, at the time the policy was underwritten, was ~~wafered~~ to it, and shewn to the underwriters, on which was written the following representation:

 “ The ship has had a complete “ repair, and is now a fine and “ good vessel, three decks. In“ tends to sail in September or “ October next. Is to go to “ Madeira, the Isles of France, “ Pondicherry, China, the Isles
 “ of France, and L’Orient.” The ship, in fact, did not sail till the 6th of December, and did not reach Pondicherry till the month of July following. She continued there till August, when instead of proceeding to China, she sailed for Bengal, where having passed the winter and undergone considerable repairs, she returned to Pondicherry, and after taking in a homeward bound cargo at that place, proceeded in her voyage back to L’Orient, but was taken by the Mentor privateer. The usual time, in which the direct voyage is performed between Pondicherry and Bengal is six or seven days; but this ship was six weeks in going to, and two months in returning from Bengal, and lay off Madras, Majulipatam, Visigapatam, and Yanon, and took in goods at all those places. Lord Mansfield told the jury, that if no fraud was intended, and that the variance between the intended voyage, as described in the slip of paper, and the actual voyage as performed did not tend to increase the risk, this slip of paper being only a representation, the plaintiff was entitled to their verdict. Page 228

27. If

Table of the Principal Matters.

27. If the misrepresentation be in a material point, it will avoid the policy; even though it happen by mistake. Page 231
28. Thus in a policy on a ship from New York to Philadelphia, the broker represented to the insurer that the ship was seen safe in the Delaware on the 11th of December by a ship which arrived at New York; whereas in fact the ship was lost on the 9th of December; the policy was held to be void, although there was no suspicion of fraud. ibid
29. The same rule holds if the broker conceal any thing material, though the only ground for not mentioning them should be that the facts concealed appeared immaterial to him. 234
30. But the thing concealed must be some fact, not a mere speculation or expectation of the insured. ibid
31. Thus where a broker insuring several vessels, speaking of them all, said, "which vessels are expected to leave the coast of Africa in November or December:" the policy was held good, although in fact the ship in question had sailed in the month of May preceding. ibid
32. Wherever there has been an allegation of falsehood, a concealment of circumstances, or a misrepresentation, it is immaterial whether it be the act of the person himself who is interested, or of his agent; for in either case the contract is founded in deception, and the policy is consequently void. 235
33. This rule prevails, even tho' the act cannot be at all traced to the owner of the property insured. 236
34. A man having arrived at Greenock, knowing of the loss of the ship insured, and meeting an intimate friend and acquaintance of the insured, and a partner with him in some other transactions, communicated the intelligence of the loss of the ship to him, who desired it might be concealed. The same day the person receiving the account held a conversation with the plaintiff's clerk, who, notwithstanding that, swore that he had no information from him respecting the ship, nor did he get any hint from him, further than the said person asking the deponent, if he knew whether there was any insurance made upon her, and if there was any account of her. The same day the plaintiff desired this clerk to write to get an insurance effected, which he did, without telling his master of this conversation. The Court of Session in Scotland held the policy to be void; and the House of Lords confirmed the decree. Page 236
35. The plaintiff's agent shipped goods for the plaintiff, and wrote to the plaintiff's agent in town to get an insurance done. The letter was dated the 16th of Sept. and it contained this sentence, "I this day shipped on board the Joseph, which sailed immediately, a cargo of oats, &c." This letter was not however sent till one o'clock on the 17th. The case states, that about six o'clock in the evening of the 16th, Thomas (the agent) heard a report that the ship was on shore; and at six o'clock in the morning of the 17th he knew the ship was lost. The policy was held void on account of the fraud in Thomas. 238

36. A

Table of the Principal Matters.

36. A policy will not be set aside on the ground of fraud, unless it be fully and satisfactorily proved; and the burthen of proof lies on the person wishing to take advantage of the fraud. P. 242
37. But positive and direct proof of fraud is not to be expected; and from the nature of the thing circumstantial evidence is all that can be given. 243
38. The question, whether the premium is to be returned by the underwriter, where the insured has been guilty of fraud, considered, 244
39. The ordinances of foreign states declare, for the most part that it shall. ibid.
40. In England there has been no legislative regulation; and the courts of justice have not, as yet, adopted any general rule upon the subject. ibid.
41. In two or three instances, where the underwriters have been relieved in Chancery from the payment of the sums insured on account of fraud, the decree has directed the premium to be returned. 245
42. The question came on to be considered in the King's Bench; but the trial being had under a decree of the Court of Chancery, and the insurer having there made an offer of returning the premium, the Court of King's Bench considered this offer in the same light as if he had paid the money into court, and therefore the question remained undecided. 246
43. But in a case where the fraud was of a very gross and heinous nature, Lord Mansfield told the jury, that the premium should not be restored to the insured. 247.
44. It is clear, that if the underwriter has been guilty of fraud, an action lies against him at the suit of the insured, to recover the premium. Page 247
45. By several foreign ordinances, the punishment of fraud, in matters of insurance, is exceedingly severe; sometimes amounting even to death. 248
46. No punishment except that of annulling the contract, has as yet been declared by the law of England. ibid.
47. But if any captain, &c. wilfully destroy the ship to which he belongs, to the prejudice of the owner of the ship, or of the goods loaded thereon, or of the underwriters, he shall suffer death as a felon. ibid.
48. Fraud vitiates policies on lives, as well as those on marine insurances. 496
49. It has the same effect on policies insuring against fire. 522

Freight.

1. The freight or hire of ships is a subject of insurance. 10
2. In an insurance upon freight, the insured, if the ship be prevented by accident from sailing, cannot recover the value of the freight, which he would have earned. 39
3. The underwriter upon the goods is not liable for freight paid to the owner of the ship. 60

Gaming policies. See title Wager policies.

General average. See Average.

Greeks.

SOME account of their commerce; they are supposed to have been unacquainted with insurance. Introd. vii

Hanseatic League.

AN account of its origin and decline. Introd. xxviii
Husband

Table of the Principal Matters.

Husband of a ship:

The husband of a ship has no right to insure for any part owner, without his particular direction; nor for all the owners in general, without their joint direction. P. 20
Jettison or Jetson. See Average, No. 6.

Illegal Voyages.

1. WHENEVER an insurance is made on a voyage expressly prohibited by the common, statute or maritime law of this country, the policy is void. 263
2. The goods on board a ship were insured "at and from London to New York, warranted to depart with convoy from the channel for the voyage." She had provisions on board, which she had a licence to carry to New York under a proviso in the prohibitory act of 16 Geo. 3. c. 5. But one half of the cargo, including the goods, which were the subject of this insurance, was not licensed. The commander in chief had issued a proclamation to allow the entry of unlicensed goods; but he had no authority under the act of parliament to issue such proclamation, or to permit the exportation of unlicensed goods. The statute prohibits all intercourse with New York, and confiscates all ships trading to that place, unless they have a licence. The court held the policy was void. ibid.
3. It is immaterial whether the underwriter did or did not know that the voyage was illegal; for the court cannot substantiate a contract in direct contradiction to law. 265
4. If a ship, though neutral, be insured on a voyage prohibited by an embargo, such an insurance is void. Page 266

5. An insurance upon a smuggling voyage prohibited by the revenue laws of this country would be void. Aliter, if merely against the revenue laws of a foreign state. 268
6. No country pays attention to the revenue laws of another. 269
7. The question, how far trading with an enemy, in time of actual war, is legal, considered and discussed from page 270 to 272
8. The question, how far insurances upon the goods of an enemy are expedient considered, from page 273 to 276
9. Whether they are expedient or not, such insurances are lawful. 276
10. But no insurance can be made upon a voyage to a besieged fort or garrison, with a view of carrying assistance to them; or upon ammunition, warlike stores, or provisions. 277

Insurance.

1. Insurance is a contract, by which the insurer undertakes, in consideration of a premium, equivalent to the hazard run, to indemnify the insured against certain perils and losses, or against a particular event. Introd. ii
2. The utility of this contract. Introd. ibid.
3. The origin of it traced. Introd. iii
4. The question, whether it was known to the ancients, considered. Introd. iii to xviii
5. Insurances supposed to have originated in Italy. Introd. xxi
6. The Italians brought them into the various states of Europe, and into England. Introd. xxii. xxxv
7. In-

Table of the Principal Matters.

7. Insurances are merely parol contracts. Page 1
8. What kinds of property are the object of insurance. 10
9. Bottomry and respondentia are a species of property which may be insured. ibid.
10. But it must be specified in the policy to be such an interest, otherwise the policy is void. ibid.
11. Unless the usage of the trade takes it out of the general rule. 12
12. But where the insurance is upon goods generally, the lien, which a factor has upon the goods of his principal, when a balance, is due is such an interest, as will entitle him to recover upon such a policy. ibid.
13. Insurances on the wages of seamen are prohibited. 13, 14
14. A governor may insure the fort against the attack of an enemy, for his own benefit. 14
15. Insurances on enemy's property not contrary to the law of England. 15, 16. 276
16. In an insurance on goods generally, goods lashed on deck, the captain's cloaths and ship's provisions are not included, unless specifically named. 23
17. Insurance from A. to — is void. 24
18. Insurances for time are very frequent, as on such a ship for twelve months. 66
19. Insurances upon a voyage prohibited by the common, statute or maritime law of the country, are void. 263
See title Illegal Voyages.
20. Insurances on a voyage to a besieged fort or garrison, with a view of carrying assistance to them, or upon ammunition, warlike stores, or provisions, are prohibited. 277
Insurances upon prohibited goods. See title Prohibited goods.

Insurances void by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. See Wager Policies.
Insurances on Lives. See title Lives.
Insurances against Fire. See title Fire.

Insurers.

What persons may be insurers. P. ;
 Every individual may be an insurer or underwriter. 9
 But no society or partnership can underwrite, except the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, and the London Assurance Company. 9, 10
 Insurers are liable for losses, which happen in the ship's boats, when landing the goods insured. 25
Abiter, if in the boat of the owner of the goods. 25
 2. Are the insurers liable for thefts committed by the people on board the ship ? 27

Insured.

The name of the insured must be inserted in the policy; or the name of the agent who effects it as agent. 17, 18, 19
 2. Whether an action against the insured for premiums, at the suit of the underwriter ? 28
 The broker, who effects the policy, may maintain such an action for premiums paid on his account. 29, 30 Intention.

The intention of the parties, and not the literal meaning of the words, is to be attended to in the construction of policies. 33
Interest or no Interest, see title Wager-Policies.

Lien

Table of the Principal Matters

Lives (Insurances upon)

1. INSURANCE upon life is a contract, by which the underwriter for a certain sum, proportioned to the age, health, and profession, of the person, whose life is the object of the insurance, engages that that person shall not die within the time limited in the policy; or if he do, that he will pay a sum of money to him, in whose favour the policy was granted. Page 487
2. The advantages resulting from this species of contract stated. 488
3. It is impossible to ascertain its antiquity. 489
4. No insurance shall be made on the life or lives of any person or persons; wherein the person, for whose use the policy is made, shall have no interest, or by way of gaming or wagering: but such insurance shall be null and void. 490
5. In a life insurance, the insurer undertakes to answer for all those accidents, to which the life of man is exposed, except suicide, or the hands of justice. 491
6. The death must happen within the time limited in the policy; otherwise the insurers are discharged. 492
7. If a man receive a mortal wound during the existence of the policy, but does not in fact die till after, the insurers are not liable. ibid.
8. But if a man, whose life is insured, goes to sea; and the ship in which he sailed is never heard of afterwards, the question whether he did or did not die within the term insured, is a fact for the jury to ascertain from the circumstances. ibid.
9. This sort of policy, being on the life or death of man, does not admit of the distinction between total and partial losses. Page 493
10. In a life insurance it has been held, that if the insurer become bankrupt before the loss happens, the person interested might prove the debt under the commission, as if the loss had happened before it issued. 493, 494
11. A policy was made for one year from the day of the date thereof: the policy was dated 3d Sept. 1697. The person died on the 3d of Sept. 1698, about one o'clock in the morning; and the insurer was held liable. 496
12. It is now usual to insert in the policy "the first and last days included." ibid.
13. Fraud equally vitiates policies on lives, as in the case of marine insurances. ibid.
14. Where there is a warranty that the person is in good health, it is sufficient that he be in a reasonable good state of health; for it never can mean, that he is free from the seeds of disorder. 498
15. If the person, whose life was insured, laboured under a particular infirmity, if it be proved by medical men, that, in their judgment, it did not at all contribute to his death, the warranty of health has been fully complied with, and the insurer is liable. ibid.
16. If the person, whose life was insured, should commit suicide, or be put to death by the hands of justice, the next day after the risk commenced, there would be no return of premium. 500

London

Table of the Principal Matters:

London Assurance Company.

1. Erected by royal charter, authorized by stat. 6 Geo. 1. ch. 18. Page 7, 8, 9
2. This, and the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, are the only societies, which may insure. 7, 8
3. The privileges of the South Sea and East India Companies preserved. 9
4. This company has a common seal. 7
5. It rejects the words "or the ship be stranded," in the memorandum at the foot of the policy 22
6. This company, when sued in an action of debt, may plead generally, that they owe nothing, and give the special matter in evidence. 453
7. So when sued in covenant, they may plead generally "that they have not broke their covenant." ibid
8. This company obtained his majesty's charter to enable them to make insurances upon lives. 489

Loss.

The loss must be a direct and immediate consequence of the peril insured, and not a remote one, in order to entitle the insured to recover. 63, 64

Loss by Perils of the Sea, vide Perils of the Sea.

Loss by Capture, vide Capture.

Loss by Detention, vide Detention.

Loss by Barratry, vide Barratry.

Of an Average or partial Loss, vide Partial Losses.

Market.

THE rise or fall of the market is a charge, which never falls upon the insurer, Page 118. 121. 124

Master of Ships.

1. The name of the master must be inserted in the policy 21
2. The master's cloaths are not included under a general insurance on goods. 23
3. Whatever is done by the master of the ship in the usual course of the voyage, necessarily et ex justa causa, though a loss happen thereon, the under writer shall be answerable. 33
4. A mistake of the master cannot be called a peril of the sea. 69, 70
5. Of barratry of the master, see barratry.
6. The wearing apparel of the master is excepted from the allowance of salvage. 158

Memorandum

1. The memorandum at the foot of the policy exempts the underwriters from partial losses not amounting to 3 per cent. unless it arise from a general average, or the the stranding of the ship. These last words in Italicks are not used by the two insurance companies. 22
114
2. It also provides, that the underwriters will not answer for any partial loss on corn, fish, salt, fruit, or feed, unless occasioned by a general average or the stranding of the ship, nor are they liable for any partial loss on sugar, tobacco, hemp, flax, hides, and skins under 5 per cent. 22
3. 16

Table of the Principal Matters.

3. If three chests of goods out of 101 be wholly spoiled, will the underwriter be liable? Page 115
4. Corn is a general expression, and has been held to include peas and beans. 127
5. It has been held that the underwriters are not answerable, within that part of the memorandum, which exempts them from all partial losses to corn, fish, salt, fruit, or seed, as long as the commodity specifically remains, altho' wholly unfit for use. 128
6. This was held with regard to a cargo of wheat, partially damaged by a storm. 128, 129
7. A cargo of fish arrived, but was stinking, and wholly unfit for use, the insurer was held not to be liable. 129
8. A cargo of peas arrived at the port of destination; but they were so much damaged, that the produce was three fourths less than the freight; the insurer was held to be discharged. 131

Misdemeanor.

1. Any person, except those mentioned in the stat. 12 Anne, stat. 2. ch. 18. entering a ship in distress, without leave of the superior officer, or of the officer of the customs, or molesting or hindering them in the preservation of the ship, or defacing the marks of the goods on board, shall make double satisfaction, or be sent to the house of correction for 12 months. 151
2. If goods stolen from such ship shall be found on any person, they shall be delivered to the true owner, or such person shall pay treble the value. ibid.

Missing Ship.

1. A ship, that has been missing for a considerable time, shall be considered as having foundered at sea. Page 71, 72
2. In practice, this time has been generally fixed to six months after the ship's departure for any part of Europe, or twelve months, if for a greater distance. 72

Misrepresentation, vide title Fraud, No. 21, &c.

Name.

1. THE name of the insured must be inserted in the policy; or the name of the agent effecting it, as agent. 17, 18, 19
2. The name of the ship, and master must be inserted in the policy. 21

Navigation.

Insurances which tend to a breach of the navigation acts are void. 285 to 289

Neutrality.

1. A neutral ship is not obliged to stop to be searched; the searcher does it at his peril, it is a case of improper detention, for the costs of which the insurer is liable. 89, 90
2. If a man warrant the property to be neutral, and it is not, the policy is void ab initio. 399, 400
3. In

Table of the Principal Matters.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 3. In an insurance upon goods, the insured warranted the ship and goods to be neutral; it was expressly found by the jury that they were not neutral. The court, therefore, though the loss happened by storm, and not by capture, declared that the contract was void. Page 400 4. If the ship and property are neutral when the risk commences, this is a sufficient compliance with a warranty of neutrality. 401 5. The insurer takes upon himself the risk of war and peace. ibid 6. If the property be neutral at the time of sailing, and a war break out the next day, the insurer is liable. 403 7. For the effect of the sentence of a foreign Court of Admiralty upon the question of neutrality, see Admiralty. | 2. It is less ambiguous, to call it a partial, than an average loss. Page 112 3. Partial loss, when applied to the ship, means a damage, which she may have sustained in the course of the voyage, from some of the perils mentioned in the policy: when to the cargo, it means the damage, which the goods have suffered from storm, &c. though the whole or the greater part thereof may arrive in port. 114 4. These losses fall upon the underwriter, if they amount to 3l. per cent. 114-127 5. But if a loss, arising from a general average, should be under 3l. per cent. still the underwriter is liable. 114 6. Suppose 101 chests of goods be shipped, and three of them be wholly spoiled; Q^u. will the underwriter be liable? 115 7. In case of a partial loss, the value in the policy can be no guide to ascertain the damage, but it becomes the subject of proof as in case of an open policy. 116 8. When goods are partially damaged, the underwriter must pay the owner such proportion of the prime cost or value in the policy, as corresponds with the proportion or diminution in value occasioned by the damage. 117 9. The proportion is ascertained in this way: where an entire thing, as one hoghead of sugar, happens to be spoiled, if you can fix whether it be a third, or a fourth worse, then the damage is ascertained. 117. 121 10. This can only be done at the port of delivery, where the whole damage is known, and the voyage is completed. ibid. |
|---|--|

Oleron (Laws of).

1. AN account of them. Introd. xxiv
2. They do not treat of insurances. Introd. xxvi

Open Policy.

In an open policy, the value of the property is not mentioned; but must be proved at the trial. 1. 116

Partial Losses.

1. AVERAGE loss, in policies of insurance, means a particular partial loss. 111

11. Whether

Table of the Principal Matters.

11. Whether the price of the commodity be high or low, it equally ascertains the proportion of damage. This proportion the underwriter must pay, not of the value for which it sold, or the market price of the commodity; but of the value stated in the policy. Page 117
12. When it is an open policy, the invoice of the original cost, with the addition of all charges, and the premium of insurance, shall be the ground of the computation. ibid
13. But whether the goods arrive at a good or bad market, it is immaterial to the insurer. 118
14. The true way of estimating the loss is to take the value of the commodity at the fair invoice price. ibid
15. These rules can only apply to cases where there is a specific description of goods. 126
16. Where the property is of various kinds, an account must be taken of the value of the whole, and a proportion of that as the amount of the goods lost. ibid
17. 2. Whether goods partially damaged may be opened, except in the presence of the insurers or their agents? ibid
18. No loss shall be deemed total so as to charge the insurers within the meaning of that part of the memorandum, which exempts them from partial losses happening to corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed, as long as the commodity specifically remains, though perhaps wholly unfit for use. 127
19. This was held with respect to a cargo of wheat, which was partially damaged in a storm. 128
20. The same with respect to a cargo of fish, which was stinking

ing and of no value when examined. P. ge 129

21. A cargo of peas was so much damaged, that the produce was three fourths less than the freight; but as it in fact arrived at the port of destination, the underwriter was held not to be liable. 131

22. In policies upon lives, there cannot, from the nature of the event, be a partial loss. 493

23. But there may in insurances against fire. 512

Of Adjusting a partial Loss, see Adjustment.

Payment of Money into Court:

The underwriters were empowered by statute to pay money into court upon any dispute; and then the insured proceed at their peril. 461

Perils of the Sea.

1. Every accident, happening by the violence of wind or waves, by thunder and lightning, by driving against rocks, or by the stranding of the ship, may be considered as a peril of the sea. 69
2. For such losses the underwriter is answerable. ibid
3. An action was brought to recover the value of certain slaves insured by the policy. The facts were that the captain missed the island, for which he was bound, and their water running short, some of the slaves were thrown overboard, to preserve the rest; and the declaration stated the loss to have happened by perils of the sea. But it was held, that the mistake of the captain could not be called a peril of the sea.

Table of the Principal Matters.

Page 69, 70

4. A ship, which is never heard of, after her departure, shall be presumed to have perished at sea.

71

5. This was held in an action on a policy upon the ship from North Carolina to London; and the loss was stated to be by sinking at sea; the evidence to support this averment was, that after sailing from port she had never been heard of.

ibid

6. The same was held in a case, where a ship had been captured and ransomed at sea, but was never afterwards heard of, and never arrived at her port of destination.

71, 72

7. In England no time is fixed, within which payment of a loss may be demanded from the underwriter, in case the ship is not heard of.

72

8. A practice, however, prevails among merchants, that a ship shall be deemed lost, if not heard of within six months after her departure for any part of Europe, or within twelve, if for a greater distance.

71

Petty Average.

1. Consists of such charges, as the master is obliged to pay, by custom, for the benefit of the ship and cargo; such as pilotage, beaconage, &c.
2. These never fall upon the underwriter.
3. Another sense, in which this word is understood, is when we speak of a small duty, which merchants, who send goods in the ships of other men, pay to the mailer, over and above the freight, for his care and attention.

Page 113

4. This is a charge which never falls upon the underwriter, ibid.

Pirates.

The underwriter, by express words in the policy, undertakes to indemnify against the attacks of pirates.

69

Plea. See Declaration. No. 9.

Policy.

1. A policy is the instrument by which the insurance is effected.
2. Policies are of two kinds; valued and open policies: the difference between them.
3. They are only parol contracts; but of great credit.
4. Cannot be altered when once they are signed.
5. Unless there be some written document to shew that the meaning of the parties was mistaken; or unless they be altered by consent.
6. A policy is a species of property for which trover will lie at the instance of the insured, if it be wrongfully withheld from him.
7. The written clauses in a policy will controul the printed words.
8. The form of the policy now used is two hundred years old.
9. Very irregular and confused, and often ambiguous.
10. There are nine requisites of a policy.
11. The name of the person insured. This is regulated by stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 44.
12. Upon this act it has been held, that if an agent effects a policy for the principal residing abroad, his

Table of the Principal Matters.

- | | |
|---|--|
| his name must be inserted in the policy as agent. Page 19 13. Q. When the principal resides abroad, must not the agent live in England? 19, 20 14. The names of the ship and master; unless the insurance be general, "on any ship or ships." 21 15. Whether the insurance be made on ships, goods, or merchandizes. ibid. 16. As to the memorandum at the foot of the policy, see Memorandum. 17. A policy on goods generally does not include goods lashed on deck, the captain's cloaths, or the ship's provisions. 23 18. A policy must contain the name of the place at which the goods are laden, and to which they are bound. ibid. 19. A policy from L. to ——— is void. 24 20. When the risk commences, and when it ends. On the goods it usually begins from the loading and continues till they are safely landed; on the ship, from her beginning to load at A. and continues till she arrive at the port of destination, and be there moored 24 hours. 24, 25 21. The various perils against which the underwriter insures. 26 22. Q. Whether the underwriter is liable for thefts committed by the people on board; and for loss arising from bad stowage, &c.? 27 23. The policy is frequently made with the words, lost or not lost, in it; which add greatly to the risk. 28 24. The policy must contain the premium or consideration for the risk. ibid. 25. The day, month, and year, on which the policy was executed, must be inserted. 30 26. The policy must be duly stamped. 31 | 27. When an insurance is made, a policy must be made out in three days, under a penalty of 100l. Promissory notes for insurances are void. Page 31 Vide Stamp. As to the Construction of the Policy, see Construction. Of Policies on East India Voyages, see title East India Voyages. Of Policies upon gaming or wagering Contracts, see title Wager Policies.
Practice.
 Account of the modern improvements in the practice and proceedings upon policies of insurance. Introd, xxxviii to the end,
Premium.
 1. The premium is the foundation of the promise, or assumpsit. 28 2. It is in the policy acknowledged by the insurer to be received at the time of underwriting. 29 3. Q. Whether after this the insurer could maintain an action against the insured himself for the premiums. 28, 29 4. In practice, the insured generally act by a broker, and by the custom, an action may be maintained against him, notwithstanding the acknowledgement in the policy. 29 5. The broker may also maintain an action against the assured for premiums paid on his account. 29, 30 See Fraud. No. 38. When the Premium shall be returned, see title Return of Premium. Q o 3 Prohibi |
|---|--|

Table of the Principal Matters.

Prohibited Goods.

1. All insurances upon commodities, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law, are void. Page 278. 285
2. This rule prevails, whether the insurer did or did not know, that the subject of the insurance was a prohibited commodity. 278
3. The parliament of England has passed a law, inflicting a penalty of 500 l. on the insurer, who should by way of insurance, procure the importation of prohibited goods; and a like penalty on the insured. 280
4. By a subsequent law, the importation of any foreign alamoses or lustrings, by way of insurance or otherwise, without paying the duties, is expressly prohibited. 281
5. Whoever, by way of insurance, undertakes to export wool from England to parts beyond the seas, shall be liable to pay 500 l. 283
6. The like penalty is inflicted on the insured. ibid.
7. Besides which all such insurances on woollen goods are declared void. 284
8. Insurances made to protect smuggled goods are void. 285
9. Insurances, which tend to a breach of the navigation acts, are void. 285 to 289
10. Insurances on goods prohibited by royal proclamation in time of war are void. 290
11. Goods, which from their nature are contraband, enumerated. ibid.
12. Insurances upon goods, the exportation or importation of which are prohibited only by the revenue laws of other countries, are valid in England. 292

13. The opinions of foreign writers upon this question, considered. Page 293, 294

Promissory Notes.

- Notes for insurance are void. 31
Proof. See Evidence.

Provisions of a Ship.

1. Are not included under a general insurance on goods. 23
2. Provisions expended during a detention to repair, or detention by an embargo, cannot be recovered against the insurer on the ship or goods. 59. 61
3. Whether they fall into a general average? 141
4. Ship's provisions do not contribute to a general average. 143

Re-assurance.

1. RE-ASSURANCE is a contract, which the first underwriter enters into, in order to relieve himself from those risks which he has previously undertaken, by throwing them upon other underwriters, who are called Re-assurers. 315
2. This species of contract is countenanced in most parts of Europe. ibid.
3. The opinions of foreign writers upon re-assurance stated. 315, 316
4. They were admitted in England till the 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. §. 4. which declares it to be unlawful to make re-assurance, unless the assurer should be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die; in either of which cases, such assurer, his executors, administrators, or assigns, might make re-assurance to

Table of the Principal Matters.

to the amount before by him assured, expressing in the policy that it is a re-assurance. Page 317

5. The reasons for these exceptions as to bankrupts and deceased underwriters, stated. 318, 319

6. In France, and other countries, it is allowed to the insured to insure the solvency of the underwriter. 319

7. Not allowed in England. 320

8. Distinction between a re-assurance and a double insurance.

Re-capture. See Capture.

Registration.

The law of England does not require that a policy should be registered. 32

Representation. See title Fraud.
No. 21. &c.

Requisites of a Policy.

1. The name of the person insured. 17

2. The name of the ship and master. 21

3. Whether they are ships, goods, or merchandizes, on which the insurance is made. ibid.

4. The name of the place at which the goods are laden, and to which they are bound. 23

5. The time when the risk commences, and when it ends. 24

6. The various perils to which the underwriters are exposed. 26

7. The consideration or premium for the hazard run. 28

8. The time when the policy was executed. 30

9. That the policy be duly stamped. 31

Respondentia. See Bottomry.

Return of Premium.

1. The question, whether the premium is to be returned by the underwriter, where the insured has been guilty of fraud, considered. Page 244

2. The ordinances of foreign states declare, for the most part that it shall. ibid.

3. In England there has been no legislative regulation; and the courts of justice have not, as yet, adopted any general rule upon the subject. ibid.

4. In two or three instances, where the underwriters have been relieved in Chancery, from the payment of the sums insured on account of fraud, the decree has directed the premium to be returned. 245

5. The question came on to be considered in the King's Bench; but the trial being had under a decree of the Court of Chancery, and the insurer having there made an offer of returning the premium, the Court of King's Bench considered this offer in the same light as if he had paid the money into court; and therefore the question remained undecided. 246

6. But in a case where the fraud was of a very gross and heinous nature, Lord Mansfield told the jury, that the premium should not be restored to the insured. 247

7. It is clear, that if the underwriter has been guilty of fraud, an action lies against him, at the suit of the insured, to recover the premium. ibid.

8. In cases of deviation, the premium is not to be returned. 362

9. Where property has been insured to a larger amount than the real value, the insurer shall return the overplus premium. 418

Table of the Principal Matters.

10. If goods are insured to come in certain ships from abroad, but are not in fact shipped, the premium shall be returned. Page 418
11. If the ship be arrived before the policy is made, the insured being ignorant of it, he is entitled to have his premium restored. ibid
12. Clauses are frequently inserted by the parties, that upon the happening of a certain event, there shall be a return of premium. ibid
13. If the ship or property insured was never brought within the terms of the contract, so that the insurer never ran any risk, the premium must be returned. ibid
 A clause was inserted that 8l. per cent. of the premium should be returned, if the ship sailed from any of the West India Islands with convoy for the voyage and arrives. The court held, that the arrival of the ship, whether with, or without convoy, entitled the party to a return of the premium stipulated. 420
 . Whether the cause of the risk not being run is attributable to the fault, will, or pleasure of the insured, the premium is to be returned. 423. 429
14. When a policy is void as a wager policy, and the ship has arrived safe, the court will not allow the insured to recover back the premium. 425
15. It might perhaps have been otherwise, where the ship had not arrived. 427, 428
16. Where the risk has once commenced, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. 429
17. But if there are two distinct points of time, or, in effect, two voyages either in the contemplation of the parties, or by the usage of trade, and only one of the two voyages was made, the premium shall be returned on the other, though both are contained in one policy. Page 430
18. Thus held in an insurance "at and from London to Halifax, warranted to depart with convoy from Portsmouth." when the ship arrived at Portsmouth, the convoy was gone. The premium for the voyage from Portsmouth to Halifax was returned. ibid
19. A ship was insured for twelve months, at 9l. per cent. warranted free from American captures. The ship was taken within two months by the Americans; but there shall be no return of premium, because the contract was entire; the premium was a gross sum stipulated and paid for twelve months. 433
20. So also it was held where a ship, insured for twelve months, was taken at the end of two; though the whole premium of 18 l. was acknowledged to be received at the rate of 15 s. per month; for that is only a mode of computing the gross sum, 438.
21. When the contract is entire, whether it be for a specified time, or for a voyage, there shall be no apportionment or return, if the risk has once commenced. 440
22. Where the premium is entire in a policy on the voyage, where there is no contingency at any period, out or home, upon the happening or not happening of which, the risk is to end, nor any usage established upon such voyage; though there be several distinct ports, at which the ship is to stop, yet the voyage is one, and no part of the premium shall be recoverable. ibid
23. It was so held in a case, where a ship was insured, "at and from Honfleur to the coast of Angola, during her stay, and trade there, at and from thence to her port or ports of discharge" in

Table of the Principal Matters.

" in St. Domingo, and at and " from St. Domingo back to " Honfleur;" and the policy was at an end by her deviation, before she arrived at St. Domingo; and consequently for the latter part of the voyage insured, the insurer ran no risk. Page 441

26. It was also so held where a ship was insured " at and from Ja- maica, warranted to sail on or " before the first of August, to " return eight per cent. if she " sailed with convoy." The ship did not sail till September.
 There shall be no return upon the warranty of the time of sailing;
 for the court cannot make a distinction between the risk at and the risk from. 444

27. It is otherwise, if the jury find an express usage upon the subject
 of return of premium. 446

28. Indeed, it seems that there never has been an apportionment unless there be something like an usage found to direct the judgment of the court. 447

29. If a person whose life is insured, should commit suicide, or be publicly executed the next day after the risk commences, there can be no return of premium. 500

30. There can be no return of premium in insurances against fire.
521

Rhodians.

1. Some account of their maritime regulations. Introd. iv
2. Supposed to have been unacquainted with the contract of insurance. Introd. vi
3. They were acquainted with the contract of bottomry. 473

Risk.

The risk on the ship in general commences from her beginning to load, and continues till she has moored twenty-four hours in safety. On goods from the loading till they are safely landed, which includes the carriage to the shore in the ship's boats, but not in those of the owner of the goods.

Page 24, 25

The risks which the under-writers
 take upon themselves. 26

2. Whether theft by the people on board be of the number? 27

Romans.

1. Some account of their commerce.
Introd. x

2. They were unacquainted with insurances. Introd. xiii

3. Contrary opinions stated and controverted. Introd. xiv

Royal Exchange Assurance Com- pany.

1. Erected by royal charter, authorized by stat. 6 Geo. 1st. ch.
 18. 7

2. This and the London Assurance Company, are the only societies which may make insurances. 7, 8

3. The privileges of the South Sea, and East India Companies preserved. 9

4. This company rejects the words " or the ship be stranded" in the memorandum at the foot of the policy. 22

5. This society, when sued in an action of debt, may plead generally that they owe nothing, or in covenant that they have not broke it, and in both cases may give the special matter in evidence. 453

6. This company obtained his majesty's charter to enable them to make insurances on lives. 489

Sailing (Warranty of)

1. If a man warrant to sail on a particular day, and do not, the insurer is discharged. 370

2. This

Table of the Principal Matters.

2. This rule holds, though the ship be delayed for the best and wisest reasons, or even though she be detained by force. Page 370
3. Thus where a ship was insured "at and from Jamaica, warranted to sail on or before the 26th of July, it appeared that the ship was ready and would have sailed on the 25th, if she had not been restrained by the order and command of Sir Basil Keith governor of Jamaica, and detained beyond the day. The insurer was discharged. 371
4. This rule is adopted by foreign writers. 271
5. If the warranty be to sail after a specific day, and the ship sail before, the policy is equally avoided as in the former case. 272
6. Upon a warranty to sail on or before a particular day, if the ship sail before the day from her port of loading with all her cargo and clearances on board, to the usual place of rendezvous at another part of the island merely for the sake of joining convoy, it is a compliance with the warranty, though she be afterwards detained there by an embargo beyond the day. 373, 374
7. But if her cargo was not complete, it would not be a commencement of the voyage. 373
8. The same doctrines prevail, even though a condition be inserted in one of the ship's clearances; that she should pass by the place (at which she was detained by the governor beyond the day named in the warranty) to take the orders of government. 379 to 386.
9. Thus, also where an embargo was actually published before the ship sailed, and the captain immediately after crossing the bar, returned to make a protest, and knowingly sent his ship into the embargo; yet, as he swore, that he believed the embargo was to be taken off, the underwriter was held liable. Page 384

Sailors.

1. Insurances on the wages of sailors are forbidden. 13, 14
2. But the captain may insure goods which he has on board, or his share in the ship, if he be a part owner. 14
3. The wearing apparel of the sailors is excepted from the allowance of salvage. 158

Salvage.

1. Salvage is an allowance made for saving a ship, or goods, or both from the dangers of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies: it is also sometimes used to signify the thing itself which is saved. But the former is the sense in which it is here used. 147
2. In an action of trover, it has been held that the defendants might retain the goods till payment of salvage, as well as a taylor the cloaths which he has made. 148
3. When a ship has been wrecked, the law of England by various statutes declares, that reasonable salvage only shall be allowed, to those who save the ship or any of the goods; and what shall be a reasonable allowance must be ascertained by three justices of the peace. 149 to 156
4. If any prize taken from the enemy shall appear to have belonged to any of his majesty's subjects, it shall be restored to the former owner, upon his paying in lieu of salvage, one eighth of the value, if retaken by one of his majesty's ships, but if retaken by a privateer, before it has been 24 hours

Table of the Principal Matters.

hours in possession of the enemy, the owner must pay one eighth of the value; if above 24 and under 48 hours, one fifth; if above 48, and under 96 hours, a third part thereof; and if above 96 hours, a moiety thereof; or if the ship so retaken shall have been fitted out by the enemy as a man of war, the owner shall pay a moiety for salvage. Page 80, 81. 157

5. Wearing apparel of the master and seamen are always excepted from the allowance of salvage. 158

6. The valuation of a ship and cargo in order to ascertain the rate of salvage, may be determined by the policies of insurance made on them respectively; if there be no reason to suspect they are under valued. If there be no policy, the real value must be proved by invoices, &c. ibid

7. Underwriters by their policy, expressly undertake to bear all expences of salvage. 158, 159

8. In order to entitle the insured to recover expences of salvage, it is not necessary to state them in the declaration, as a special breach of the policy. 159

9. Thus in a declaration on a policy on goods, it stated, that the ship sprung a leak, and sunk in the river, whereby the goods were spoiled. Lord Hardwicke held, that under this declaration, the plaintiffs might give in evidence the expences of salvage. 159. 468

10. But if the insurer pay to the insured such expences, and from particular circumstances, the loss be repaired by unexpected means the insurer shall stand in the place of the insured, and receive the sum thus paid to atone for the loss. 160

11. Where the salvage is high, the other expences are great, and the object of the voyage is defeated, the insured is allowed to abandon to the insurer, and call upon him to contribute for a total loss P. 160

See abandonment.

12. There is neither average nor salvage upon a bottomry bond. 482

Seaworthiness.

1. Every ship insured must, at the time of the insurance, be able to perform the voyage, unless some external accident should happen, and if she have a latent defect wholly unknown to the parties, that will vacate the contract, and the insurers are discharged. 249

2. This arises from a tacit and implied warranty, that the ship shall be in a condition to perform the voyage. 250

3. But the insured ought to know whether she was seaworthy or not at the time she set out upon her voyage; yet if it can be shewn that the decay to which the loss is attributable, did not commence till a period subsequent to the insurance, the underwriter will be liable, if she should be lost a few days after her departure 250, 251

4. The whole doctrine of seaworthiness to be collected from the case of the Mills frigate, which is fully stated from page 252 to 261

5. The doctrine of seaworthiness, as established by the law of England, is consonant to the laws of all the commercial and maritime states in Europe. 261

6. Where the ship is not seaworthy, the policy is void, as well where the insurance is upon the goods, as when it is upon the ship itself. 263

Sentence, see Admiralty.

Ship.

1. The name of the ship must be inserted in the policy. 21

2. Some-

Table of the Principal Matters.

2. Sometimes, there are insurances on "any ship or ships." Page 21

Smuggling.

1. Smuggling on his own account is an act of barratry in the master. 34
2. An insurance upon a smuggling voyage, prohibited by the revenue laws of this country is void: aliter, if merely against the revenue laws of a foreign state. 268

Stamps.

Every policy of insurance, not exceeding 1000*l.* must have a six shilling stamp, and above that sum a stamp of eleven shillings, 32

Statutes cited.

An. Regni.

E D W A R D III.

11. c. 1. p. 282.
27. c. 13. p. 149.

R I C H A R D II.

5. c. 3. p. 285.

H E N R Y VIII.

28. c. 15. p. 109.

E L I Z A B E T H.

43. c. 12. Introd. p. xxxvi

J A M E S I.

21. c. 19. p. 495.

C H A R L E S II.

12. c. 32. p. 282.
— c. 18. p. 286.
13 & 14. c. 11. p. 288.
16. c. 6. p. 486.
22 & 23. c. 11. p. 487.

W I L L I A M and M A R Y. An. Regni.

2. stat. 1. c. 9. p. 287.
4 & 5. c. 15. p. 280.
5. c. 21. p. 32.

W I L L I A M III.

- 7 & 8. c. 28. p. 282.
8 & 9. c. 36. p. 281.
9 & 10. c. 25. p. 32.

A N N E.

1. stat. 2. c. 9. p. 108. 248
6. c. 37. p. 289.
7. c. 8. p. 287.
10. c. 26. p. 32.
12. stat. 2. c. 9. p. 32.
— — c. 18. p. 149.
— — c. 16. p. 475.

G E O R G E I.

4. c. 12. p. 108. 248.
— c. 11. p. 282.
6. c. 18. p. 6.
— c. 15. p. 288.
7. c. 31. p. 495. note (a)
8. c. 15. p. 7.
— c. 24. p. 13.
11. c. 30. p. 7. 31.
12. c. 29. p. 109.

G E O R G E II.

7. c. 15. p. 27.
— c. 7. p. 89.
12. c. 21. p. 283.
13. c. 4. p. 80. 157.
19. c. 32. p. 318. note (a)
486. 494.
— c. 37. p. 77. 134. 299.
317. 470. 483.
21. c. 4. p. 15. 276. 485.
25. c. 26. p. 16.
26. c. 18. p. 152.
29. c. 34. p. 74. 80. 157.
30. c. 19. p. 32.

G E O R G E III.

5. c. 46. p. 31.
— c. 55. p. 32.

7. c. 44.

Table of the Principal Matters.

Ann. Regni,

- 7 c. 44. p. 31.
- 8. c. 25. p. 32.
- 14. c. 48. p. 17. 490.
- 16. c. 34. p. 32.
- c. 5. p. 264.
- 17. c. 50. p. 32. 521.
- 20. c. 6. p. 284.
- 22. c. 48. p. 521.
- 25. c. 44. p. 18.

Sufficiency, see title Seaworthiness.

Thieves.

2. WHETHER the insurers are answerable for thefts committed by the people on board the ship? Page 27

Time.

1. In insurances upon time, the court, in their construction of them, has always attended to the meaning of the parties, and a liberal exposition of the words of the contract. 66
2. A policy was made on a letter of marque, at and from Liverpool to Antigua, with liberty to cruise six weeks; the court held, that this meant six successive weeks, and not a desultory cruising for six weeks at any time. 66, 67

Total Loss.

1. A total loss, in insurances, does not always mean that the property insured is irrecoverably lost or gone; but that, by some of the perils mentioned in the policy, it is in such a condition as to be of little use or value to the insured, and to justify him in abandoning his right to the insurer, and calling upon him to pay the whole of his insurance.

Page 110. 161

2. In a total loss, properly so called, the prime cost of the property insured, or the value in the policy, must be paid by the underwriter. 110. 116.
3. Where the policy is a valued one, it is only necessary to prove that the goods were on board at the time of the loss. 116
4. Where it is an open policy, the value must also be proved. ibid
5. The insured may call upon the underwriter for a total loss, if the voyage be absolutely lost, or not worth pursuing; if the salvage amount to half the value; or if further expence be necessary, and the underwriter will not engage at all events to bear that expence. 164. 171. 180
6. A ship was taken by a Spanish ship, retaken by an English privateer and carried into Boston, where, as no person appeared to give security for the salvage, she was sold; the recaptors had their moiety, and the overplus remained with the officers of the court of Admiralty. The owners were entitled to abandon and to recover for a total loss. 165
7. A ship was taken by the French, remained with them eight days, and was retaken; the master, mates, and sailors, except a landman and an apprentice, had been taken out and carried to France. Before the capture, the ship had been separated from her convoy, and was so far disabled by storm, as to be incapable of proceeding on her destined voyage, without going into port to refit. Part of the cargo was thrown overboard in the storm, and the rest spoiled while the ship lay at Milford Haven. In actions

Table of the Principal Matters.

actions upon two policies, one on the ship, and the other on the cargo, it was held that this was a total loss, so as to entitle the owner to abandon. Page

167 to 172

8. A ship, bound from Montserrat to London, was captured, and the captain, crew, rigging, and part of the cargo, which was sugar, were taken away. She was retaken and carried into New York, where the captain also arrived. Upon taking possession, he found, that part of the cargo which had been left was washed overboard; that 57 hogheads of what remained were damaged, and that the ship was in such a state that she could not be repaired without unloading her entirely. The owners had no store houses at New York; nor were any sailors to be had. The salvage came to 40 hogheads of sugar; and if the ship had been repaired, it would have exceeded the freight by 100*l*. There was an embargo laid on all ships till December, and the ship should have arrived in London the July preceding. The captain, upon the advice of his friends, sold the cargo, and was paid for it: he agreed also to sell the ship; but the person, who contracted for it, ran away, upon which the captain left her in a creek and returned to England. This was a total loss, and the owners had a right to abandon. Page

172 to 176

9. The right to abandon must depend upon the nature of the case at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the offer to abandon; and therefore if, at the time advice is received of the loss, it appear that the peril is over, and the thing is in safety, the insured has no right to abandon. Page

165. 178

10. Thus in a case where there was a capture and recapture, and it was stated that at the time of the offer to abandon, the ship was safe in port, and had sustained no damage, the court held that the insured had no right to abandon. Page

178 to 186

11. But if the underwriter pay for a total loss, and it afterwards turn out to be but partial, the insured shall not be obliged to refund; but the insurer shall stand in his place for the benefit of salvage. Page

186

12. A ship was insured from Wyburg to Lynn, at which place she arrived; the jury found that the ship was not worth repairing; but the damage sustained in the voyage insured did not exceed 48*l*. per cent. By the court; the jury have precluded us from saying that this is a total loss; and where neither the thing insured, nor the voyage is lost, the insured cannot abandon. Page

187 to 189

Trover.

1. Trover will lie for a policy, at the suit of the insured, if it be wrongfully withheld from him. Page
2. In trover, a defendant may in evidence justify the retainer of the goods till payment of salvage. Page

148

Underwriter, see Insurer.

Usage.

1. IN the construction of policies, no rule has been more frequently followed than the usage of

Table of the Principal Matters.

of trade with respect to the voyage insured. Page 33

2. Upon an insurance on goods to Labrador, and till they were safely landed, the insurers were held liable, on account of the usage, although the loss did not happen till a month after the ship's arrival, the crew having been all that time employed in fishing, and never having unloaded the goods but at leisure times. 49

As to the Usage in East India Voyages; see title East India Voyages.

Valuation.

1. IN a total loss, the under-writer must pay the amount of the prime cost of the property insured, or the value mentioned in the policy. 110
2. So if part of the cargo, capable of a distinct valuation be totally lost, the insurer must pay the whole prime cost of the part so lost. 111
3. In case of a partial loss, when the policy is valued, the rule for estimating the damage, is to ascertain whether the goods be a third or fourth worse, when they arrive at the port of delivery; and then the under-writer must pay a third or fourth of the value in the policy, without regard to the rise or fall of the market. 117, 118. 121
4. When the valuation is not stated in the policy, the invoice of the cost, with the addition of all charges, and the premium of insurance, is the foundation upon which the loss shall be computed. 117

Valued Policy.

1. In valued policies, the value of the property insured, is inserted at the time of making the contract, and upon a trial, it is not necessary to go into proof of the value, because it is admitted by the policy. Page 1. 116
2. It is in such a case only necessary to prove that the property was on board. 116
3. Where the loss is partial, the value in the policy can be no guide to ascertain the damage; and it then must become a subject of proof, as in the case of an open policy. ibid.
4. A valued policy is not a wager policy. 122. 303, 304
5. In a valued policy, it is only necessary to prove some interest to take it out of the statute, 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. 123. 304
6. If used merely as a cover to a wager, such an evasion would not be allowed to defeat the statute. 123. 304
7. After a judgment by default upon a valued policy, the plaintiff's title to recover is confessed, and the amount of the damage is fixed in the policy. 134. 303

Venice.

Origin and progress of that Republick. Introd. xviii

Void Policies.

1. The name of the person actually interested must be inserted in the policy, or the name of the agent effecting it, as agent; otherwise the policy is void. 19
2. When the principal resides abroad, the agent to effecting the policy must live in England. Qu. 19, 20
3. Po-

Table of the Principal Matters.

3. Policies are rendered void ab initio, by the least shadow of fraud or undue concealment. Page 195
4. Cases of fraud with respect to policies, are liable to a threefold division. 1st, The allegatio falsi. 2d, The suppressio veri; 3d, Misrepresentation. The latter, tho' it happen by mistake, if in a material part, will render the policy void, as much as actual fraud.

195

See title Fraud.

5. Every ship insured must, at the time of the insurance, be able to perform the voyage, unless some external accident should happen; and if she have a latent defect, wholly unknown to the parties, that will vacate the contract, and the insurers are discharged.

249

See title Sea-worthiness.

6. Whenever an insurance is made on a voyage expressly prohibited by the common statute, or maritime law of this country, the policy is void.

263

See title Illegal Voyages.

7. All insurances upon commodities, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law, are void.

278. 285

See title Prohibited Goods.

8. By statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. it was declared, that insurances made on ships or goods, interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest than the policy, or by way of gaming, or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer, should be null and void.

300

See title Wager-policies.

9. It is, by the same statute, declared unlawful to make re-assurance, unless the first assurer should be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die; in either of which cases such assurer, his executors, administrators and assigns, might make re-assurance to the amount before by him assured, expressing in the policy, that it is a re-assurance. Page 317

See title Re-assurance.

Wager-Policies.

IN wager-policies, the performance of the voyage in a reasonable time and manner, and not the bare existence of the ship or cargo, is the object of the insurance.

295

2. These policies, being contradictory to the real nature of a policy, which is a contract of indemnity, were originally bad.

296

3. They were introduced into England, since the Revolution.

ibid.

4. But the courts of justice looked on them with a jealous eye; and the courts of equity still considered them as void.

ibid.

5. Thus a policy was decreed to be delivered up, where the insured had no interest in the ship or cargo, except as a lender on bottomry, for which he had a bond.

297

6. Where a man had insured goods, by agreement valued at 600*l.* and not to be obliged to prove any interest, the Chancellor ordered the defendant to discover what goods he had on board.

ibid.

7. The great distinction between interest, and wager-policies, was, that in the former, the insured recovered for the loss actually sustained, whether it was total or partial: in the latter, he could never

Table of the Principal Matters.

- never recover, but for a total loss. Page 298
8. By the statute of 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. it was enacted, that insurances made on ships or goods, interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest, than the policy, or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer, should be null and void. 300
9. There is an exception for insurances on private ships of war, fitted out solely to cruize against his majesty's enemies. ibid.
10. It was also provided, that any merchandizes or effects from any ports or places in Europe or America, in the possession of the Crowns of Spain or Portugal, may be insured in such way or manner as if this act had not been made. ibid.
11. This statute has been frequently held not to extend to insurances of foreign property, on foreign ships. 302
12. A valued policy is not a wager-policy; for he must prove some interest, altho' he need not prove the value of his interest. 303, 304
13. If a valued policy were used merely as a cover to a wager, in order to evade the statute, it would be void. ibid.
14. An insurance on the profits expected to arise from a cargo of molasses, belonging to the plaintiffs was held to be good; altho' there was a clause declaring, "that in case of loss, the profits should be valued at 1000*l.* without any other voucher than the policy." 305
15. An insurance being made on any of the packet-boats that should sail from Lisbon to Falmouth, or such other port in England, as his majesty should direct for one year, upon any kind of goods, and merchandizes whatsoever. It was agreed that the goods and merchandizes should be valued at the sum insured, without further proof of interest, than the policy. The court held that this was a policy of a mixed nature, and that the insured might recover. Page 306, 307
16. Upon a joint capture by the army and navy, the officers and crew of the ships, before condemnation, have an insurable interest; by virtue of the prize-act, which usually passes at the commencement of a war. 307
17. All insurances, made by persons having no interest in the event, about which they insure, or without reference to any property on board, are merely wagers, and are void. 309
18. Thus where the defendant, in consideration of 20*l.* paid by the plaintiff, undertook that the ship should save her passage to China, that season, or that he would pay 1000*l.* within one month after the arrival of the said ship in the river Thames; the contract was held to be void, although the plaintiff had some goods on board. ibid.
19. The plaintiffs had lent 26,000*l.* on bond, to a captain of an East-Indiaman, and insured the ship and cargo to that amount, and in case of loss no other proof of interest to be required than the exhibition of the said bond. The contract was held to be void. 311
20. The third section of the statute relative to insurances, from any ports or places in Europe or America, in the possession of Spain or Portugal, is founded on the regulations of those courts; but it is loosely worded. 313

Table of the Principal Matters.

Wages.

1. No master or owner of any merchant ship shall pay to any seaman beyond the seas, any money on account of wages, exceeding a half of the wages due, at the time of such payment, till the ship shall return to Great Britain, or Ireland. Page 13
2. Insurances on the wages of seamen are forbidden. 13, 14
3. But the captain may insure goods, which he has on board, or his share in the ship, if he be a part owner. 14
4. Extraordinary wages paid to seamen during a detention to repair, or a detention by an embargo, cannot be recovered against the insurers on the ship, or cargo. 59, 61
5. 2. Whether they are expences that will fall under the denomination of a general average. 141, 142.
6. Sailors wages are not liable to contribution in a case of general average. 144

Warranty.

1. A warranty, in a policy of insurance, is a condition or a contingency, that a certain thing shall be done, or happen; and unless that is performed, there is no valid contract. 363
2. It is immaterial for what end the warranty is inserted in the contract; but being inserted it becomes a binding condition upon the insured, and he must shew a literal compliance with it. ibid.
3. It is no matter whether the loss happen in consequence of the breach of warranty or not; for the very meaning of inserting a warranty is to preclude all enquiry about its materiality. Page 364, 392

4. It is also immaterial to what cause the non-compliance is to be attributed; for altho' it might be owing to wise and prudential reasons, the policy is avoided. 364
5. In this strict and literal compliance with the terms of a warranty consists the difference between a warranty and representation. See title Fraud. 365
6. In order to make written instructions binding as a warranty, they must appear on the face of, and make a part of the policy. ibid
7. Even though a written paper be wrapped up in the policy, and shewn to the under-writers at the time of subscribing; or even though it be wafered to the policy, it is not a warranty but a representation. 365, 366
8. Thus when evidence was offered to prove that a paper enclosed was always deemed a part of the policy, Lord Mansfield refused to hear it. 366
9. A warranty written in the margin of the policy is considered to be equally binding, and liable to the same strict construction, as if written in the body of the policy. 366, 367
10. Words written transversely on the policy were held to be a warranty. 367
11. Where it was said in the margin that the ship sailed from Liverpool with 50 hands and upwards, the court held this was a warranty, and as she in fact sailed from Liverpool with only 46, tho' she had upwards of 50 hands from Beaumaris, which is within six hours sail from Liverpool, the underwriters were discharged. 368

Table of the Principal Matters.

12. If a man warrant to sail on a particular day, and be guilty of a breach of that warranty, the underwriter is no longer answerable. Page 370

13. This rule holds though the ship be delayed for the best and wisest reasons, or even though she be detained by force. ibid.

14. Thus where a ship was insured at and from Jamaica, warranted to sail on or before the 26th of July; it appeared that the ship was ready, and would have sailed on the 25th, if she had not been restrained by the order and command of Sir Basil Keith, governor of Jamaica, and detained beyond the day. The insurer was discharged. 371

15. This rule is adopted by foreign writers. 271

16. If the warranty be to sail after a specific day, and the ship sail before, the policy is equally avoided as in the former case. 272

17. Upon a warranty to sail on or before a particular day, if the ship sail before the day from her port of loading, with all her cargo and ~~clearances~~ on board, to the usual place of rendezvous at another part of the island, merely for the sake of joining convoy, it is a compliance with the warranty, though she be afterwards detained there by an embargo, beyond the day. 373

18. But if her cargo was not complete, it would not be a commencement of the voyage. ibid.

19. A ship being insured at and from Jamaica to London, warranted to sail on or before the 1st of August, was completely laden for her voyage to England, at St. Ann's in Jamaica, and sailed from thence on the 26th of July, for Bluefields, in order to join the convoy there; but was detained by an embargo till the 6th of August. The court held that the failing from St. Anne's was the commencement of the voyage.

Page 374

20. When a ship leaves her port of loading, having a full and complete cargo on board, and having no other view but the safest mode of sailing to her port of delivery, her voyage must be said to commence from her departure from that port. 373. 378

21. The same doctrine was advanced, even tho' it was a condition inserted in one of the ship's clearances, that she should pass by the place (at which she was detained by the governor beyond the day named in the warranty) to take the orders of government. 379 to 386

22. Thus also, where an embargo was actually published, before the ship sailed, and the captain, immediately after crossing the bar, returned to make a protest, and knowingly sent his ship into the embargo; yet as he swore, that he believed the embargo would be immediately taken off, the underwriter was held liable. 384

23. If the insured warrant that the vessel shall depart with convoy, and it do not; the policy is defeated, and the underwriter is not responsible. 386

24. A convoy means a naval force, under the command of that person, whom government may happen to appoint. 386. 389

25. Therefore where a ship put herself under the direction of a man of war till she should join the convoy, which had left the usual place of rendezvous before she arrived there; it was held not to be a departure with convoy, altho' she, in fact, joined, and was lost in a storm. 387

26. Q. Whether sailing orders from the commander in chief to the particular ships are necessary to

Table of the Principal Matters.

- to constitute a convoy. P. 387
390 398
27. A convoy appointed by the admiral, commanding in chief upon a station abroad, is a convoy appointed by government. 392
28. A sailing with convoy from the usual place of rendezvous, as Spithead for the port of London, is a departure with convoy, within the meaning of such a warranty. 392, 393
29. Although the words used generally are "to depart with convoy" or "to sail with convoy," yet it extends to sail with convoy throughout the voyage. 394
30. But an unforeseen separation from convoy is an accident to which the underwriter is liable. 396
31. So held where a ship was separated from her convoy by storm, and by storm prevented from rejoining it, and was lost. 397
32. Even where the ship has, by tempestuous weather been prevented from joining the convoy, at least, so as to receive the orders of the commander of the ships of war, if she do every thing in her power to effect it, it shall be deemed a sailing with convoy. 398
33. Otherwise, if the not joining be owing to the negligence and delay of the captain. 399
34. As where repeated signals for sailing had been made the night before, and continued next day from 7 till 12; notwithstanding which the ship insured did not sail till 2 hours after. ibid
35. If a man warrant the property to be neutral: and it is not, the policy is void ab initio. 399
400
36. In an insurance upon goods, the insured warranted the ship and goods to be neutral; it was expressly found by the jury that they were not neutral. The court therefore, though the loss happened by storms, and not by capture, declared that the contract was void. Page 400
37. If the ship and property are neutral at the time when the risk commences, this is a sufficient compliance with a warranty of neutrality. 401
38. The insurer takes upon himself the risk of war and peace. 401
39. If the property be neutral at the time of sailing, and a war break out the next day, the insurer is liable. 403
- As to the effect of the sentence of a foreign court of Admiralty, upon the question of neutrality, see Admiralty.
- Of warranty in a life insurance, see title Lives. No. 14, 15.

Wibsey, Laws of.

1. An account of them. Introd. xxvi
2. They mention insurances. Intro. xxvii

Wool, see Prohibited Goods,
No. 5, 6, 7.

Wreck.

1. In cases of wreck a reasonable salvage shall be allowed to those, who save the ship or any of the goods, to be ascertained by three justices of the peace. 149 to 156
2. Of felony, in cases of wreck, vide tit. Felony.

Written Clause.

The written clause in a policy will controul the printed words. 5

FF APD KKs

A system of the law of marine

Stanford Law Library

3 6105 044 787 047